July 13, 1944: Atlanta Board of Education denies charges that it has discriminated against Negro teachers on pay. Demands jury trial on charges. Says: "The Board is working out a method of classifying teachers and a schedule of salaries to be paid teachers, which, in their judgment and discretion, will be fair, equitable, and just. All the teachers in the public schools of Atlanta, both white and colored, will be classified on the same basis, and each teacher, white or colored, will be paid according to his or her classification. Every teacher in the same classification will receive the same pay." Statement signed by E. S. Cook, Devereaux McClatchey, Jr., Charles C. Rife, J. H. Sanders, D. M. Therrell, and J. Austin Dilbeck.

OTHER STATES

There follows a summary of news carried in the Atlanta papers on activities in other southern states.

Alabama

On April 4 Governor Chauncey Sparks said that the decision in the Texas case "by intimation at least leaves with the states the right to determine qualifications of voters." He further stated that the South can adapt itself to the decision by giving the right to vote to all qualified, whether white or black, and at the same time preserve its "party integrity." State Senator Miller Bonner predicted that Alabama would hold its last white primary this year as a result of the Texas decision.

The Hill-Simpson senatorial campaign was at its height when the decision was released. In his column of April 4, Ralph Smith, Washington correspondent for the Atlanta Journal, declared that the fact that Justice Hugo Black voted with the majority in the Supreme Court decision would prove a handicap to Hill - despite Hill's opposition to Federal poll tax repeal and eradication of the color line. Certainly there was a sinister and methodical marshalling of discontents, fears and prejudices by Simpson. His billboards read: "Vote for James Simpson, a believer in Democratic principles, states' rights and white supremacy." He was supported by an inflammatory press and the big economic interests. The employment of Negro supervisors in FSA was attacked by State Senator Bruce Henderson in a speech made in Simpson's behalf, during which he charged that white women were doing clerical work for Negroes. Following up, Simpson warned that the next step would be the forced admission of Negroes to white schools by the United States Department of Education.

The campaign of race hatred became so violent that some of the Alabama press denounced Simpson and his group - notably the Birmingham News and the Anniston Star which later charged that Simpson was attempting to "Talmadgeize" Alabama. Ex-Senator Tom Heflin of Alabama said in a speech in support of Hill's candidacy. ".... any man who raises the race issue in a political campaign is unfit to go to the United States Senate." At its convention on April 22, the Alabama Mine Workers, District 20, passed a resolution pledging support to full Negro participation in the franchise, and opposing Simpson.

Simpson began to ease off the race issue as condemnation became more pronounced.

Meanwhile, although Hill is regarded as progressive and a New Dealer, there were departures from liberalism on his part - described as being " in deference to the immovable attitudes of his constituency." At the height of the campaign, Hill's law firm volunteered its service to help convict Arthur Madison, Negro lawyer, who had been arrested on a charge of illegally representing other Negroes. Madison was alleged to have been assisting Montgomery Negroes in registering, and it was stated that he had been attempting to qualigy Negro voters since December 1943 and that he intended to register 5,000 Negroes in Montgomery.

In commenting upon Senator Hill's victory, the nation's press commended the people of Alabama for voting against race haters. It was also noted that the Birmingham News added its voice of approval on the state's condemnation of Negro baiters.

The Negro Vote in Alabama

In Mobile, ten Negroes departed without voting when they were met at the polling place by the deputy sheriff and told by him that the primary was restricted to white electors. Two Negroes were permitted to vote in Montgomery. Negroes voted as usual in Birmingham. (Atlanta Journal May 3, 1944)

It was brought out at a meeting of Attorneys General of southern states, held in Memphis, Tennessee, on September 5, that Alabama has four suits pending in connection with refusal to permit Negroes to vote in the primary.

The Democratic Primary was held in Alabama on May 2, 1944.

Note: Governor Sparks spoke to the 26th annual convention of Alabama District Kiwanis International in Auburn, Alabama, on October 11th. He termed the poll tax a necessity, and attacked the War Department ruling which opened the post exchange at Maxwell Field to all. Most interesting was the following statement from his speech: "There is no such thing as equality socially, except such as is determined by the individual." (Atlanta Constitution 10/11/44)

Arkansas

In Washington, Representative Cathings, Democrat, Arkansas, warned the Democratic Party on April 19, ".... in its mad rush to gain the Negro vote.... it may lose the southern vote. The Chairman of the Arkansas Democratic State Committee, J. C. Barrett, had stated at the time the decision in the Texas primary case was released that he wished to study it before reaching a conclusinn as to its applicability in Arkansas. Later he was reported as saying, "Election judges should allow Negroes to vote in the Democratic primary elections this summer, provided that they possess a poll tax receipt and otherwise appear qualified."

At the meeting of the southern Attorneys General in Memphis on September 5, Attorney General Guy E. Williams of Arkansas said that Arkansas laws are similar to Texas and that Negroes will vote there unless the Legislature "does something about it" in January. Williams charged that the Republican Party is causing race tension by catering to the Negro vote. He stated that there are five or six counties in Arkansas where the population is predominantly Negro. (According to the press reports, no one called his attention to the fact that there are nine such counties in North Carolina where Negroes participate in the Democratic primary.)

No record on the Arkansas vote in the primary was available in the Atlanta press. However, the Monthly Summary of Events and Trends in Race Relations, July 1944 issue, states that Negroes voted for the first time in the Democratic primary in Arkansas. No further details were given.

Florida

Immediately following the release of the Texas primary decision, Democratic State Chairman Tom Conley said Democratic leaders would resist the efforts of Negroes to vote in the primary. Governor Spessard Holland declined to make any comment until he had studied the decision.

At the time, Senator Pepper was in the midst of a bitter campaign to retain his seat in the Senate. The race issue was being raised with only slightly less violence than in the Hill-Simpson campaign in Alabama. Pepper faced four opponents. Although the Senator is recognized as one of the most ardent supporters of the New Deal and is conceded to be one of the few progressive representatives from the South, he too spoke out against the Supreme Court decision. He was reported to have said that southerners will not "allow matters peculiar to us to be determined by those who do not know and understand our problems"... and "The South will allow nothing to impair white supremacy". He is reported to have stated further, "I think the Florida law is different from the Texas law on voting in primaries, and therefore the supreme court decision should not affect Democratic primaries in Florida. In Florida not the state but the Democratic party determines the qualifications of members of the party. If, however, there is any question about the form of our statute, it can be altered and the matter left exclusively in the hands of the party of determining who may vote in the Democratic primary. This can be done and the Democratic primaries kept white under the decision of the supreme court". (Atlanta Constitution, April 5, 1944 - AP dispatch, Miami April 4.)

It should be noted that later in Pepper's campaign, while he continued to support "southern traditions", he stated publicly on several occasions that dragging the race issue into a political campaign was neither necessary nor proper.

The Negro Vote in Florida

The Democratic Primary was held in Florida on May 2, 1944.

*In Tallahassee, eight Negroes voted unchallenged. A precinct official was quoted as saying: "They were duly registered as Democrats, and we had no alternative but to let them vote." It was also reported that one Negro had applied for a ballot at another precinct in Tallahassee, and had been asked by election officials to wait until they could get a legal ruling on her qualifications. She left without voting.

In Miami Negroes voted in the Republican primary exclusively.

* The Florida State Democratic Executive Committee had adopted a resolution restricting participation in the primary to white voters.

Louisiana

In speaking of the Texas decision, Governor Sam Jones was quoted as having said, " We've always handled that question.... and always will." The chairman of the Louisiana State Democratic Committee, John Fred Odum, was reported as declining to make a formal statement, saying, " It will require considerable study." In Washington, Senator John H. Overton said,"We are not going to submit to Negroes voting in our elections." (Atlanta Journal , April 3, 1944)

No records were available in the Atlanta press on the Negro vote in the Louisiana Democratic primary.

The State Democratic Committee made a requirement in September that Louisiana 's electors pledge to support the Democratic Party nominees. Five of Louisiana 's ten electors resigned.

Mississippi

"The Supreme Court or no one else can control a Democratic primary in Mississippi," said Herbert Holmes Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee Chairman, as reported in the Atlanta Journal on April 3rd. Senator John E. Rankin was quoted as saying that he saw "one of his greatest fears realized" in the decision. The Mississippi Democratic Convention instructed its delegates to the National convention to support the party only if certain "requirements" were met; the Atlanta Journal on June 10th assailed the action as resorting to trickery which might deprive loyal Democrats of a voice in their government. The Mississippi delegation to the national convention joined in the attempted revolt.

On August 1 , two representatives who wished to remain unidentified stated that it was their belief that some of Mississippi's electors would bolt the party because the national convention had failed to satisfy the demands of the southern delegates. On September 28, the Atlanta Constitution reported that seven of Mississippi's nine Democratic electors had pledged only qualified support to party nominees. On November 1, 1944, Governor Thomas L. Bailey called a special session of the Mississippi Legislature to " consider legislation protecting the voting rights of Mississippi citizens in the selection of presidential electors....(and) .....to force electors to vote for the party nominee of face disqualification."

There were no reports in the Atlanta press on the Negro vote in the Mississippi Democratic primary.

South Carolina

The Washington Post on March 2nd denounced a resolution passed by the South Carolina House of Representatives which affirmed its belief in "white supremacy" as being "so close to the Hitlerian doctrine of Nordic or Aryan supremacy as to be indistinguishable from it." The resolution brought about immediate and heated protest: the Negro Citizens' Committee of South Carolina assailed the action on the part of the House, and asked in a public statement among other things that the electric chair in South Carolina be retained not for Negroes alone, but for all murderers alike when guilty; twenty white men and women in the state released to the press " A Statement on the Race Problem in South Carolina," in which they said "We do not believe that disenfranchisement of all Negroes in South Carolina can endure indefinitely, and we hope that a careful study of this problem may, in the end, result in a plan of suffrage for the State that will be to the better interests of both races..... The only white supremacy which is worthy of the name is that which exists because of virtue, not power. Good morals, to say nothing of religion or democracy, requires that there shall be drastic revision in our attitude toward our colored citizens."

Manifestly the situation in South Carolina at the time of the release of the Supreme Court decision was a tense one. The 1943 Legislature had acted to wipe out of the state code all party rules as of June 1, 1944--evidently foreseeing the implications of the Lonnie E. Smith case which was pending. On April 13, Governor Olin D. Johnson issued a proclamation calling a special session of the General Assembly to wipe from the code all laws pertaining to Democratic primary elections in order to "maintain white supremacy in South Carolina."

The Legislature convened on April 14, 1944. Governor Johnson addressed the body and called for white control. In speaking of Reconstruction days he was quoted as saying, "They left a stench in the nostrils of the people of South Carolina that will exist for generations." More than 200 state code sections were removed from the statutes in hurried action in order to complete the work before the April 22 precinct meetings which would set the Democratic primary machinery in motion.

Under the uncontrolled system, the Democratic Party will continue to furnish its ballots at general elections, but without the sanction of state laws which had never provided for a state-printed ballot. An Associated Press story from Columbia, South Carolina, carried in the Atlanta Constitution on April 22 quoted Governor Johnson as saying that if the repeals "prove inadequate, we South Carolinians will use the necessary methods to retain white supremacy in our primaries."

Negro leaders in the state deplored the action of the Legislature and announced plans to hold a state Negro convention to form a South Carolina Colored Democratic Party to nominate candidates to the national convention. Subsequently the Progressive Democratic Party of South Carolina (Negro) was formed and did send delegates to the national convention. On April 21, one hundred Negro professional men attending the Palmetto Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Association 48th annual meeting endorsed the work of the Negro Citizens' Committee, and denounced the action of the South Carolina Legislature by resolution.

The feature article written by Tarleton Collier on the subject of the uncontrolled primary in South Carolina, carried in a number of southern newspapers on April 28, outlines the involvements clearly. The information contained in the article is of such value that it is included herein for the record:

South Carolina Tries to Get Around Negro Vote Decisionwritten by Tarleton Collier, Columbia, South Carolina, carried in the Atlanta Constitution April 28,1944

"It goes without saying that other states of the South hellbent on keeping the Democratic primary strictly a white man's affair are watching intently the details and effects of South Carolina's formula for bypassing the supreme court decision that Negroes may not be barred from voting in primary elections.

"Consequently, there is no time like the present to tell them what they are in for if they would resort to the same action which the general assembly of this state, in special session to resolve the dilemma, has just completed. They may as well know that the experience will be dizzying and in spots embarrassing, the same as here, and the result very likely will be chaotic, with no certainty that it will stand the inevitable test, even at that.

"What the legislature did, in brief, was to take out of the state laws every discoverable reference, or intimation of reference, to primary elections; and thus to make the selection of Democratic nominees, who are elected all but automatically, a kind of town meeting process within private clubs of controllable membership.

" Everyone seems to agree that it's either this or an attempt to maintain the status quo by main strength and awkwardness, meaning intimidation, force or manipulated rules of registration--or, a thought appalling particularly in areas of heavy or predominant Negro population, simply give up and let 'em vote.

"Primaries

"Fifty years or so ago, South Carolina began writing laws to regulate primary elections. These laws were necessary to stop the old evils of rule-or-ruin political conventions, in which might made right and special interests found a happy hunting ground. Today it is back where it started, the laws rooted out and the convention system or its equivalent in the offing.

"Some effects of the new arrangement are grotesque and a bit disconcerting. For one thing, the groups all over the land who have been crusading against that old southern custom, the poll tax as a qualification for voting, may find themselves with victory at last in their hands, a victory, as it were, by default.

"For it is obvious that if you insist on payment of a poll tax for voting in a primary election, you are recognizing the legal existence of that election, and the idea in the south's present scramble to circumvent the supreme court is to avoid any and all such recognition, expressed or implied.

"True, different from the process in other southern states, South Carolina, in one of its numerous unique political customs, for some time has not insisted upon the poll tax as to primaries. Membership in the Democratic party has been the only qualification. You have to pay a poll tax there to vote in general elections, but nobody cares particularly about that, the fun having ended and the issue having been decided in the primary.

" The legislators gulped a bit when they found that in wiping out all primary election laws, they had perforce to repeal the law against vote fraud, in that connection. They gulped, but they swallowed it. As between the danger of boodle and "letting 'em vote" they didn't hesitate.

"The Ballots

"They found too, that where they had proudly passed at the recent regular session a bill permitting service men to vote, they had to undo that enthusiastically states' rights action pronto. You see, the fresh law had provided that the secretary of state was to send ballots to the men in uniform, and this was an official tie-up, making the government a party to the primary. In the hastily revised version, the service man who would vote as between "Cotton Ed" Smith and Olin Johnson must apply to the party official for his ballot.

"The ballots themselves provided an other contretemps. Another of South Carolina's unique arrangements has been distribution of ballots not by state election officials but by the party organizations. There have been traditionally as many separate ballots as there were parties in the contest, and so a South Carolinian can't split or scratch his vote.

"But manifestly you can't keep this up, because if you recognize a party ballot in a general election, you have to accept legally and officially the action of the party primary which selected the nominees. And there you are again, face to face with the supreme court decision in the Texas case which says that a primary in which the established government has any part of a hand must be opened to all citizens and taxpayers, black or white.

"This one still has them bothered. Whether state or party provides the election ballots, there's a loophole for a suit.

"And South Carolina has plenty of warning that there will be suits, by Negroes and friends of Negroes' civil rights. A Negro Citizens' Committee here has announced that it has a war chest of $3,400 to fight the issue in the courts.

"The greatest irony of all, and a thing which has many an old-line Democrat red in the face, comes out of an announcement in a local Negro newspaper, the Lighthouse and Informer, that there will be a colored Democrat party, which will put its ticket in the field to resist the "lily-white" Democrats in election and in being seated at the national convention.

"Now for generati ns, good southern Democrats have been poking fun at the clash of "lily whites" and "black and tans" among Republicans. Now look who's talking about whom.

"Confusion

"First and last the new arrangement leads to prospect of confusion of split delegations and disputed delegations, of convention rows even when none but white factions are involved-- and, naturally, the evolution of machines to resolve the disputes in favor of the right boys.

"All these are but the high spots of the problem involved in the desperate effort to "keep 'em from voting" in South Carolina. But you must have a rough idea by this time of what the other white supremacy states will encounter if they try the same strategy. The supreme court is hard to beat."

The statement of State Senator R. M. Jeffries, carried in the Atlanta Constitution of April 22, is an interesting side note. He charged that "Cotton Ed" Smith was responsible for the racial troubles in the state, and was quoted as saying, "Anyone continually making the addresses he (Smith) makes on the floor of the senate is enough to picture South Carolina and the people of the South as an uncivilized race that is depriving human beings of human rights....the South must stop 'Negro baiting and Negro petting'."

Both Senator Maybank and Senat r Smith had opposed the Supreme Court decision.

The 46 county Democratic conventi ns which were held in South Carolina on May 1st emphasized white supremacy, states' rights and anti-fourth term declarati ns. The Richland county convention received a request from the South Carolina Negro Citizens' Committee for full participation in Democratic party affairs- which was undoubtedly ignored or refused, although the papers did not report the action taken.

At the meeting of the South Carolina State Democratic convention on May 18, the New Deal was denounced for seeking to force racial equality upon the South. The convention resolved to uphold states' rights; oppose Federal anti-poll tax legisleti n, anti-lynching laws or interference with racial segregation, sociolized medicine and the FEPC. The body voted to send an uninstructed delegation to the national convention. It refused to recognize the South Carolina Progressive Democrats, which group announced that it would contest the seating of the "all-white" delegation at Chicago. (The all-white delegation was seated by the national convention.) Senator Maybank was reported as saying that the white supremacy fight would be carried to the convention floor in Chicago.

There is no record of Negroes voting in the South Carolina Democratic primary.

Texas

According to a statement carried in the Atlanta Constitution on April 5, 1944, Governor Coke R. Stevenson said that Texas would ask for a rehearing of the Smith vs. Allwright case by the United States Supreme Court. (The Supreme Court rejected two requests for rehearing of the case on May 8.) Representative Nat Patton was quoted as saying, "Let the Negroes form their own primaries if they like." A press story on April 4 said that Mr. Patton had stated that he had faith in the great Democratic hordes of Texas to control their primaries and that Negroes would not vote in white primaries. Chairman George T. Butler of the Texas State Executive Committee was quoted as saying, "we'll find a way out of this." Senator W. Lee O'Daniel called the decision a "purely political decision dictated by the political dynasty in Washington responsible for their appointment." He said further that the Constitution 'guarantees white people the right to organize into a party and hold primary elections.

The Democratic delegation in Texas split into two factions in June: a pro-Roosevelt group and an anti-Roosevelt group. The State Executive Committee refused to recognize the pro-Roosevelt group, and voted to send the anti-group to the national convention, its only instruction being to vote for the party nominees only upon the condition that "certain requirements" were met.

Both factions attended the national convention. Half of each group was recognized by the convention, whereupon the rebel anti-Roosevelt group withdrew.

The Negro Vote in Texas

Texas did not "find a way out of this." Negroes voted in the Texas Democratic Primary for the first time. The primary was held on July 22. The State Democratic Executive Committee had left the decision as to whether or not they would receive ballots from Negroes up to local election officials. Indications were that, by and large, Negroes voted where they had paid poll taxes and registered, although the Monthly Summary of Events and Trends in Race Relations, July 1944 issue, prepared by Fisk University, Nashville, reported that some precinct chairmen in Texas prevented Negroes from registering.

At Silabee in East Texas the Negro vote was reported heavier in proportion to the population than the white vote.

On September 23, the Texas Supreme Court directed Secretary of State Sidney Latham to certify the names of the pro-Roosevelt Democratic electors for printing on the general election ballot. No motion for rehearing was entertained.

The September 28 issue of the Atlanta Constitution reported that Texas voters would have a choice of two slates of Democratic electors because of two court decisions. Further information for clarification was not located.

Conclusion

All clear-thinking people have recognized the far-reaching implications of the Supreme Court decision in the Texas white primary case, Smith vs. Allwright. However, there has been widespread confusion as to what is necessary or what will follow in order to translate the decision into action which will bring about unrestricted participation in primary elections. Three basic questions have been uppermost in the minds of the advocates of freedom of the ballot: First, what is the applicability of the Texas decision to other states which have controlled primaries; secondly, what will be its effect in those states which have unregulated primaries (such as South Carolina); and third, what action can be taken to expedite the matter and bring about the quickest possible observance of the Supreme Court ruling?

In an effort to find the answers to these three questions, the Southern Regional Council has made contacts with a number of lawyers, politically minded citizens, and with the United States Department of Justice. The principal opinions advanced may be summarized as follows:

1. It is believed that the provisions set forth in the Supreme Court decision on the Texas white primary case apply to all elections where any type of state control is involved and that it will apply to the election of any public officials right down to municipal elections-school boards, etc. The decision is based upon the 15th Amendment to the Constitution.

2. It is impossible to tell just what action will be necessary in those states which have unregulated primaries. However, it is the consensus of opinion that it will be impossible for any state to completely divorce the primary from the general election. For example, how is a candidate's name to get on the general election ballot? Or, if there is no official certification of names for a general election ballot, how will the successful candidate be certified? How is registration to be controlled? The involvements are endless, and it is believed that at some point in the election process the state must come into the picture, in which event it is likely that it would be held that the state does in fact exercise some control which effects the primary. There is no doubt but that it will be necessary for court action to be taken in those states which have unregulated primaries, and it is likely that it will be necessary for a case to be heard by the Supreme Court before a precedent can be established.

Aside from the legal aspects of the problem, it is the opinion of many people that a review of history will prove that uncontrolled primaries will not last. They open wide the gates for all kinds of fraud, and present the outlaw groups with an unobstructed field. There seems little question but that a system of unregulated primaries would prove the death of the one party system in the South-an end which might be welcomed, but probably by means which would be painful indeed.

3. Two procedures which can be followed in bringing about Federal court action in order to bring about observance of this law are: The first is by bringing a civil suit in the District Federal Court; the second is by filing a complaint with the Department of Justice and asking the Federal Government to bring about criminal prosecution. For future action, the civil suit process is considered advisable.

In such cases, any qualified Negro who is refused a ballot brings a civil action against one or more state or party officials on the ground that he was denied the right to vote solely on account of race or color. Such a suit involves damages. If a civil suit is lost in the District court, it can be appealed to the Supreme Court. Such is not the case in criminal prosecutions which are brought by the Federal government.

The Southern Regional Council was advised that the Department of Justice received only thirteen complaints from Negroes in the entire South following the 1944 primary elections. If that fact were widely known, there is no question but that it would be interpreted as indifference on the part of southern Negroes.

A course of action seems very clear: Throughout the South, qualified Negroes who were refused the vote should file civil suits. Care should be exercised that all legal technicalities with respect to qualification have been observed and that an orderly procedure was followed in requesting a ballot. Damages, over and above legal fees, should be kept at a low figure- sufficient to represent a large sum of money where numbers of cases are involved, but small enough to indicate that the complainant is interested in VOTING- not in making money! Expert legal advice should be had though it may be difficult to obtain in certain areas. In some communities it would seem advisable for influential and liberal white citizens to assist in persuading competent attorneys to handle such cases. This procedure should be followed in future elections. If Negroes are not permitted to take part in any public elections, which will undoubtedly happen in many places in the South, there should ensue a volume of civil suits.

The Department of Justice in Washington should be informed in writing by the complainant, or by his attorney, when such suits are filed.

Inasmuch as the Federal Bureau of Investigation has been conducting an investigation in Atlanta preparatory to the bringing of a criminal action by the Federal government, it may well be that civil suits should not be brought in this District court at this time. However, it would appear that action should be taken elsewhere by the bringing of civil suits where the legal requirements can be met.

The Department of Justice has been subject to a great deal of criticism because it has not acted on any of the complaints it has received. It should be pointed out that the Department has had very meager information upon which to proceed. Of the thirteen complaints received from the South, a number had to be disregarded because certain legal requirements had not been met. In other cases it is likely that investigations involving much time and care have been necessary. There is no question but that the Department of Justice is prepared to enforce the law when bonafide complaints are filed. If we are to learn lessons from the past, it would seem that in the future it would be well to secure expert legal advice and to follow through in the establishment of cases which are clearcut and which will furnish the type of evidence which will allow for prompt action.

Building public opinion in support of any law is important. When the next and all following cases, civil or criminal, are brought in the South, every effort should be made to secure a sympathetic press and widespread public support.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL 30TH ANNUAL MEETING

Souvenir Program | Atlanta, Ga., Friday-Saturday, November 15-16, 1974 | Souvenir Program

1944 • THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

"The Commission on Interracial Cooperation is not heard of often by the mass of Americans. It writes few letters to newspapers; its officers and members give out no inflammatory statements when some manifestation of race prejudice appears. So far as is known, none of its officials, white or Negro, have written plays or novels to prove that the jazz of Harlem is the tempo of our time. But ever since the commission was formed in the South in 1919 it has been doing remarkable work in adjusting racial contacts. It has prevented some race riots, it has aided greatly in providing the Negro population of the South with parks and schools, and it has accelerated the social condition of black people in that part of the country where they are most populous. Formed in 1919 by whites and Negroes fearful lest the changed demeanor of returning Negro soldiers would provoke massacres all over the Land, the commission has worked so intelligently, so efficiently and withal so quietly that what every one in 1919 discussed as an impending social crisis has passed out of the national consciousness."

THE NEW YORK TIMES,
MARCH 16, 1930

"I have been greatly impressed by the constructive work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. The solution of all conflict is that men and women of good will shall search and find the areas where we can cooperate, and thus minimize differences. That is the sane, simple and sensible plan of the commission. It is of real national importance. I trust it will have the widest support."

1919-1944 • The Commission on Interracial Cooperation

The roots of the Southern Regional Council reach far back, to 1919. World War I had ended the summer before, and within weeks the wartime spirit of cooperation between the races began to disappear, and racial tensions were mounting in communities throughout the South. Black soldiers who had been praised for their service records, were coming home unprepared to return to the old ways and to their old status. Also returning were the blacks who had migrated North seeking higher wages during the war years, many forced North by the ravages of the boll weevil, to the cotton producing sections of the South. They, too, had experienced new freedoms.

There were rumors in most areas among whites that the blacks were arming, among blacks that the whites were. The year 1919 was to see twenty-six race riots, more than seventy lynchings of blacks, several still wearing the uniform of their country as they were shot, beaten and burned to death.

It was in this atmosphere that a group of prominent white southerners met in January, 1919, in Atlanta. Their backgrounds were varied. There was Dr. Will W. Alexander, the youngest, a Methodist minister, fresh from war work with black and white soldiers; John J. Egan, a wealthy Atlanta industrialist; Dr. M. Ashby Jones, a widely respected Baptist minister; W. D. Weatherford, longtime YMCA official and its international student secretary; James E. Dillard, a member of the boards of trustees of the General Education Board, the Jeanes Fund, and the Slater Fund, each of which had done much to arouse interest in black education; and Richard Hayne King, with years of work with the YMCA, who also had been in war work with the soldiers. Two non-southerners met with them, Dr. Wallace Buttrick, president of the General Education Board, probably the most widely known of the group and Thomas Jesse Jones, a sociologist with special interest in the plight of blacks, and director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund. While they were to play no key role in any action toward trying to meet the tense situation, they brought enlightened outside concern.

For the better part of the week, this group of men sat around and discussed the racial crisis, groping for some way to dissipate the fear and hysteria and avoid the threats of violence that hung over the South.

During the war effort there had been a new kind of contact between blacks and whites. Blacks had been called on to participate and whites had discovered the black leadership in their communities and had experienced a new kind of relationship with them. After much discussion, the group decided that the thing to do was to go, quickly, right back into these communities, to these same people who had handled the war enterprises, and see if they could be brought together on the postwar situation. And, aware that the sudden end of the war had left many of the civilian war agencies with considerable money, the group appealed to several of them for funds. Finally, out of the war funds of the YMCA $150,000 was secured.

Dr. Alexander was commissioned to assemble, as quickly as possible, a staff of two men for each Southern state, one white and one black, to go into centers where tensions were worst. Another decision made by the group was to find others to join them, and a list was compiled of white southerners "known to be sympathetic and intelligent regarding the race situation". Helpful to this were the YMCA secretaries over the South.

Thus a new method of dealing with racial problems in the South was launched, the appeal jointly to both races to come together and discuss the problems and how best to go about solving them. It was agreed that the work would be done quietly and without publicity at the grass-root level, in the communities.

Other meetings of the group followed. "Dr. Will" kept in touch with his men daily by phone and poured over their reports nightly for answers. Eight conferences of white men, lasting from five to ten days each, were held in the North Carolina mountain retreat of the YMCA, with a total of eight hundred and twenty-four attending.

In the tense atmosphere that prevailed, suspicion of all whites by blacks was strong. Aware of this, it was not until well into 1920, after the work proved to be more than just that of a small group of well-meaning white men, that an effort was made to bring prominent blacks into it. Visits were then made to Dr. Robert R. Moton, president of Tuskegee, and to Bishop R. E. Jones. Weeks passed, but when their acceptance finally came it was the signal that led other black leaders to follow.

The group that informally had called itself the interracial committee, had now become truly interracial, and they incorporated as the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. John J. Egan, the Atlanta industrialist, was its first president; Dr. Alexander, its director.

Women were later brought into the work, though not until after the expressed fear that they might be too emotional was overcome. Under the leadership of Jessie Daniel Ames, director of women's work, they proved to be a dynamic force.

For twenty-five years this undertaking was carried on by the Commission. This time-span was to see the terrible "red summer" of 1919 (so called because of the riots and lynchings that took place), the revival of the Ku Klux Klan, the countless bank failures and foreclosures of the mid-twenties that occurred in the South, the stock market crash of 1929, the years of the Great Depression, the New Deal, the rise of facism elsewhere give new impetus to racism here, and then, again, world war. All had their impact, but the quiet work of the Commission went on. Those were days when the very act of whites and blacks meeting together was generally an act of courage for both races. A place to meet was always a problem.

The Commission had two basic goals during its twenty-five years of operation. One, to correct injustices and inequalities wherever possible, and the other, to improve southern attitudes on matters of race. Toward these ends, 800 interracial committees were established over the South, thousands of southern church women were marshalled in opposition to lynching and other injustices, significant research on race relations was undertaken, and some two million copies of pamphlets and leaflets were issued. Throughout the life of the Commission, Dr. Alexander served as field representative and its director, and almost as long, Mrs. Ames, as its director of women's work. Others who will be remembered in the work are, R. B. Eleazer, T. J. Woofter, Arthur Raper, Mrs. M. E. Tilly, Clark Foreman, and Emily Clay, the Commission's able secretary.

Under the influence of Dr. Howard Odum, of the University of North Carolina, and his writings on the southern region, and following the report made to President Roosevelt on the economic conditions of the South, the Commission leaders prior to U. S. entry into World War II had begun to explore the possibility of broadening the scope of the Commission's work. Dr. William Cole, of the University of Tennessee, was secured to make a study of the Commission and bring in recommendations for its future. But this was thwarted by the war and other events. Meanwhile, a series of meetings were held, in which the Commission played a vital role, which would shape the future of interracial work in the South. They culminated in formation of a similar purpose organization but with a wider scope than had been earlier envisaged. Therefore, on the day of the charter meeting of the new organization, the Commission merged its program with and transferred its assets to the new organization, the Southern Regional Council. The program and the spirit of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation was thus continued in broadened and new form.

1944 • THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

The Southern Regional Council was chartered by the State of Georgia in 1944 after a series of meetings which began in 1942.

World War II had contributed to an increased awareness by blacks of their rights, particularly in the South. When Churchill and Roosevelt drew up the historic Atlantic Charter on the four freedoms, Dr. Gordon B. Hancock of Virginia Union University, wrote in one of his syndicated columns to the Associated Negro Press, that blacks should draw up their own charter of what they wanted in the postwar South. Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, was impressed by Dr. Hancock's comment and wrote asking him to elaborate on it for the Commission's publication, Southern Frontier (which later, under the Southern Regional Council, became New South, and is now, Southern Voices.)

In a letter to Dr. Hancock acknowledging his article, Mrs. Ames urged him to take the leadership in convening a meeting of Southern blacks for the purpose of drawing up a statement of grievances. He discussed the possibility of such a meeting with a number of people, including P. B. Young, Sr., editor of the Norfolk Journal and Guide. Almost immediately, the Northern black press attacked the idea on the grounds that any statement from Southern blacks would be entirely inadequate. When the attack became vicious and personal, there was discussion about dropping the matter. Mrs. Ames, however, went to Virginia urging that the meeting be held. She also pledged that white Southerners would hold a meeting in response to the black demands. Following this agreement, a call for the meeting went out from a committee headed by Mr. Young.

Thus a conference of Southern blacks was held in Durham, N.C., on October 20, 1942. It was chaired by Mr. Young, with Dr. Hancock delivering the opening statement. Of the 75 blacks invited to participate, 65 attended. Most of those who could not attend communicated their support and approval by letter and telegram. Never before had such a large and distinguished group of black Southern leaders come together to agree on a list of demands.

After day-long discussions, the substance of a statement was agreed upon, and on motion from Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, a committee headed by Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, was authorized to draft the statement.

The statement that was issued made clear what a large group of representative blacks wanted for themselves—not what whites said they wanted. "We are fundamentally opposed," the long document stated, "to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races or classes or creeds, however, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to current problems of race discrimination and neglect . . . We have the courage and the faith to believe, however, that it is possible to evolve in the South a way of life, consistent with the principles for which we as a Nation are fighting throughout the world, that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fear." The statement covered the following areas: politics and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, and social welfare and health.

Mrs. Ames carried out her commitment to the Durham group. On April 8, 1943, a group of white Southerners met in Atlanta to respond to the statement. Since she felt that the bi-racial Commission on Interracial Cooperation should remain in the background in preparing for the all-white meeting, Mrs. Ames asked Josephine Wilkins, an Atlanta resident, to help coordinate the meeting. They prepared a list of carefully selected Atlanta men who were invited by Bishop Arthur J. Moore of the Methodist Church to meet for dinner to discuss the Durham Statement and whether a response should be made. Two other meetings followed and when the decision ultimately came to call a Southwide conference of white Southerners, it was agreed that the call should come from the entire group. It consisted of C. H. Gilman (Regional Director, CIO), George L. Googe (Regional Director, AFL), M. Ashby Jones (minister), Ryland Knight (minister, Second Ponce de Leon Baptist Church), Ralph McGill (editor, The Atlanta Constitution), Stuart R. Oglesby (minister, Central Presbyterian Church), Gerald P. O'Hara (Bishop, Catholic Church), Dean S. Paden (President, King Hardware Co.), J. McDowell Richards (President, Columbia Theological Seminary), John Moore Walker (Bishop, Protestant Episcopal Church), and Goodrich C. White (President, Emory University).

The call went to a list of some 300 white Southerners representing religion, labor, business, education, and others. Bishop Moore offered to receive replies.

Then came the attacks, this time by letter and more subtle and less personal than those made on the black meeting—"meddlers and carpetbaggers from the North who are stirring up this trouble," ". . . not the approach to the Negro question. . . "; ". . . bound to do more harm than good."; ". . . approve of what you are trying to do but disagree strongly with the way you are going about it."; ". . . postpone until the war is over."; " . . . . the thousands of white boys in the armed forces would not appreciate any effort by this group."

Those attending the conference numbered 115 and represented 10 Southern states. Others expressed interest and a desire to cooperate. Ralph McGill chaired the meeting and a statement prepared by a small committee which he headed was read. It commended the tone of the Durham Statement and offered to cooperate in attaining the goals it set forth. There was discussion throughout the day, and when the statement was finally approved it was signed by almost all in attendance. Others who associated themselves with the statement by telegram and letter brought the total number of signers to 292. Before adjournment, the participants authorized the appointment of a committee to meet with a similar committee of blacks from the Durham group.

These two committees met in Richmond, Virginia, on June 16, 1943, and combined to form the Collaboration Committee. Following the procedure in Durham, Mr. Young served as chairman and Dr. Hancock made the opening remarks. Unfortunately, Dr. Hancock was followed by an elderly white minister who cautioned gradualism in the paternalistic manner of the old South. This was just what the black participants had feared. However, the expression of this cautious approach served to rally the whites and the tone of the meeting was reversed.

The day-long conference ended with the adoption of a Richmond Statement and the creation of a bi-racial Continuation Committee. The committee was responsible for determining ways in which white and black Southerners could work together toward implementing the Durham Statement. In addition, the committee was further charged with seeing that efforts begin to prepare the postwar South for its returning soldiers—both black and white.

The success of these three meetings won the full support of Dr. Will Alexander, director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and Dr. Howard Odum, president of the Commission. They were joined by Dr. Charles Johnson, president of Fisk University, who had headed the editorial committee for the Durham Statement, in bringing considerable influence to the movement.

It was the interest of these three men that revived an idea that had lain dormant for a number of years—a southern regional council. This idea had been under consideration several years earlier when the Commission on Interracial Cooperation was discussing broadening its scope.

Thus when the Continuation Committee, which had been appointed in Durham, met at Atlanta University on August 4, 1943, Dr. Odum was elected chairman and a proposal was drawn up to create a southwide organization. Following discussions throughout the day, the proposal was approved and a resolution was adopted establishing the organization now known as the Southern Regional Council. The Continuation Committee served as the organization's nucleus, with Dr. Odum and Dr. Johnson as co-chairmen.

A charter was applied for by Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University; Dr. Charles Johnson; Ralph McGill; Bishop Moore; and Dr. Odum and was granted on January 6, 1944. At the charter meeting, held at Atlanta University on February 16 - 17, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation merged with the newly formed Southern Regional Council.

Events during the Council's thirty years of existence are too fresh in mind to need detailed recounting. Still, certain events during that period stand boldly out: the white primary declared unconstitutional, repeal of the poll tax, the 1954 Brown decision, Little Rock, the Montgomery bus boycott, the sit-ins, freedom rides, the marches, Selma, Pettus Bridge, Birmingham, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. All of these events have had their influence on the work of the Council and many were influenced by that work.

The role appropriate to the Southern Regional Council is evident in its origin and make-up. The Council's main asset is and has always been the people of the South who understand and want the full practice of democracy, and who at the same time know intimately the old evils that burden the South. From such people is the Council's membership drawn. They have wanted a regional organization, not from a provincial desire to separate the South's problems from the nation's, but from the conviction that such an organization has unique advantages. It can express the best and often neglected elements of Southern thought and conscience; it can serve as a convincing demonstration of Southerners working together as fellow citizens without regard to race and can tap local resources and initiative often inaccessible to agencies outside the region.

The Southern Regional Council seeks to be a practical organization, emphasizing working solutions rather than spectacular pronouncements. Organizationally today the Council consists of a newly-expanded membership of 120 Southerners representing the eleven state region and a 70 member staff located in Atlanta, Georgia. The Council is a private non-profit and non-partisan organization funded by foundations, organizations and individuals.

The Council's program for the Seventies encompasses many strategies—including research, publishing, governmental monitoring and encouragement of innovative community groups—to bring about positive action in a wide range of social concerns. Major subject areas of its program activities center around improved health care, education, economic development, housing and rural development.

In brief, the Council draws upon and emphasizes its strengths of the past while broadening its constituency to reach many previously unaffiliated Southerners who share its vision of a better, more livable, more just and more humane region for all of the South's people.

Draft Program
On Race Issue

The task of drafting a program for better inter-racial understanding is in its preliminary stage under the Southern Regional Council, newly chartered by the state of Georgia.

Co-chairmen of the council, for which a charter was issued Saturday, are Dr. Howard Odom, of the University of North Carolina, and Dr. Charles Johnson, of Fisk University.

Dr. Will Alexander, one of the organizers, said yesterday their attention would be directed to developing a preliminary program to be presented to the entire council next month.

The organization was formed, Dr. Alexander said, to carry out biracial principles formulated at meetings of white and Negro leaders at Durham, N. C., Richmond, Va., and Atlanta.

The Economic South . . .

- Is a community of approximately 42,000,000 people, containing approximately one-third of the Nation's total population, but more than one-half of its farm population.

- Has more children born per 1,000 women of each generation than any other region. It is able to offset the large migration to other regions by having the Nation's highest rural-farm net reproduction rate. Yet Southern urban communities have the lowest net reproduction rate in the Nation.

- Contains approximately one-third of the Nation's workers whose annual median salary or wage in 1939 (based on reports made by 9,000,000 of them) was $599—almost one-third lower than the national average wage of $877.

- Paid a lower per capita income tax in 1943 than any other region. For every dollar per capita of income tax reported from the United States as a whole, the southeastern states reported 63 cents and the southwestern states reported 77 cents.

- Has 42 per cent of the Nation's houses regarded as "needing major repairs." In every 1,000 Southern dwelling units there are 271 such structures; in every 1,000 houses for the United States 183 need major repairs.

- According to the United States Senate's Special Committee to Investigate Industrial Centralization, ten Southern states, having 15 per cent of the Nation's land area, 14 per cent of its minerals, 10 per cent of its manufacturing, and 39 per cent of its farm population, receive only 11 per cent of the national income and 20 per cent of the national farm income. They had a smaller volume of war contracts than any other region, and in 1943 had the lowest increase in value of manufactures over 1939—69 per cent. Other groups of states increased this value by 227 per cent, 270 per cent, and 639 per cent in the same period. The committee's report says if the "per capita income of these states were raised to the level of national per capita income, total national income would be increased by $10,000,000,000 annually."

- Pertinent to a discussion of current problems in this field is this statement from the Monthly Review of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta (September 30, 1943):

  > "It would seem therefore that a soundly based regional economy should be related to the region's own great resources and to a peacetime market structure rather than be tied, as a result of uneconomic conversions of war plants, to capacity designed for a totally different economic situation."

The Southern Regional Council

ORIGIN The Southern Regional Council is the outgrowth of a number of factors. One was the growing consciousness among progressive Southerners of the need for a Southwide agency for the promotion of constructive social and economic reforms. Another was the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond Conferences of 1942-43, in which Southern leaders, white and Negro, covenanted together to work for a better South for all. The Council was chartered by the State of Georgia on January 6, 1944, and it held its charter meeting on February 16, 1944.

PURPOSE The Council represents the forward-looking conscience and efforts of liberal Southerners to give democracy a chance in the South. Although it is bi-racial in its membership and staff, it is not exclusively a "race relations" organization. It believes in the improvement of economic, civic, political, and educational conditions for the good of all people.

METHODS The Council believes that sound information, honest discussion, and cooperation, rather than agitation, are the best methods for promoting social progress. Its functions are: (1) research and survey to find the facts and to determine the possibilities of constructive action; (2) educational work through its own publications and through the press, radio, exhibits, conferences, and personal contacts; (3) cooperation with other agencies which have liberal and humanitarian aims; (4) consultative services to private or public agencies; and (5) formulation of constructive plans and proposals for "the South that could be."

MEMBERSHIP It welcomes to membership persons who believe in its purposes and methods. Voting members must be residents of the Council area: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Dues are one dollar a year, but members are urged to contribute additional amounts according to their financial ability. Members receive all Council pamphlets.

OFFICERS and DIRECTORS The officers of the Council are: President: HOWARD W. ODUM, Chapel Hill, North Carolina; Vice Presidents: P. B. YOUNG, Norfolk, Virginia, HOMER P. RAINEY, Austin, Texas, CARTER WESLEY, Houston, Texas; Executive Director: GUY B. JOHNSON; Associate Executive Director: IRA DEA. REID; Secretary-Treasurer: EMILY H. CLAY, 63 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Among the members of the Board of Directors are some of the outstanding Southern leaders in education, religion, business, and labor.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

The Members Meet . . . .

The recent annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council marked a forward step in the life of movements designed to make human relations democratic in the South. Paradoxical as it may seem race relations movements seldom have been democratic in their structure and function. In the past they operated in two ways: first, they relied very heavily upon the one-man type of leadership, one person being a spokesman for each race; second, they leaned very heavily upon the wisdom and wishes of a select few whose actions were either supported or repudiated. Today, more so than ever before, the wishes of the many become the foundation stone of action in the field of race relations. As we have implied, this is a very significant index to the changing character of movements in race relations, and if the Southern Regional Council's Member Meeting may be regarded as indicative of any trend at all it does reflect a growing desire on the part of people to face situations frankly, collectively, and fearlessly.

The executives of the Council were heartened by the courage and forthrightness with which chronic and acute problems of southern life were introduced. True, SRC members did not possess all of the information, hold to all of the beliefs, decide on every action that would make living utopian, but they did make a light for ways that have been dark. No phase of relations between the races was ignored in discussion. The members realized, however, the mighty potency of words and stultifying effect of fear in furthering or arresting any program they might undertake. Though our emotions were quickened with reports of "incidents" of sex and race, of injustices, of official lethargy and community inactivity, our reason was challenged with programs of correction, amelioration, even the complete undoing of ways that had perpetuated an undemocratic South. We met to find ways of doing something more about and with all of these people, communities, and problems. We stuck to our last.

Above all, perhaps, this achievement seems outstanding—we learned to discuss all of our ills without venom and emotional distress; we made new covenants and resolutions, openly arrived at. And though the SRC's diagnosis of the South is not yet complete, the organization's therapy for what is known continues. There is abundant life in the membership of the Southern Regional Council. That gives us hope.

The Executive Directors, in their reports offered several suggestions and recommendations on the program of the Council during the coming year. The procedures authorized were:

1. The Organization of State Divisions of the Council

As soon as there are one hundred members of the Council in a given state, they will be organized as a nucleus for action on the state level. The by-laws and policies of such divisions would, of course, have to be in harmony with those of the Council.

2. A Series of South-wide Conferences

Within the limits of the budget and with the advice of the Executive Committee, the SRC will sponsor several important annual conferences. One would be a conference for the leaders of the state and local interracial committees. Another would be a strategy conference of the leaders of the major agencies working on problems of the South within the framework of the Council's interests. Still another would be a conference of religious leaders in programs of social action, with particular emphasis, perhaps, on the women's divisions of the various church bodies.

3. A Series of State-wide Race Relations Institutes or Forums

Each of these would run from three to five days and would attempt to reach a better cross-section of the public than is usually reached by such meetings. The Department of Race Relations of the American Missionary Association is preparing to promote a series of institutes and has asked the Council to share in their planning and sponsorship.

4. Special Visiting Committee

The officers of the Council, or such other groups as the Executive Committee might choose, are authorized to seek private conferences with as many Southern governors as possible in the next three months. Their discussions will not be confined to race relations, but will include the main problems of social and economic welfare in the South.

5. Civil Rights Committees

From time to time arise cases which the SRC might well handle for the protection of the civil rights of citizens in the region. The central staff cannot undertake to investigate personally all such cases. Therefore, the Council members approved the establishment of Civil Rights Committees in all our thirteen states. Each committee might be composed of five Council members and a legal advisor who may or may not be a member of the Council, and the duty of these Committees would be to advise the Executive Directors and the Executive Committee as to what action the Council should take in cases involving civil rights.

6. Youth Work

The Council authorized the taking of steps that would permit youth direct participation in the Council or the sponsoring of some sort of auxiliary or correlated youth division of the Council.

7. Study of Police Systems

One of the most urgent needs in the South is reform of police training and administration. Along with its program of promoting improvement wherever it can, the Council authorized the sponsorship of a comprehensive study of Southern police systems in cooperation with one or more universities. An approach of this sort would permit the Council to embark on a program which would not necessarily be tied in with the race question, yet would permit the treatment and analysis of a problem that is closely allied with race tensions.

8. Study of Segregation and Discrimination

The Council authorized the drawing of plans for a comprehensive study to be carried on throughout the South in the field of legal discrimination and segregation. It is proposed that ameliorative action be based upon a study of the facts as to the human and economic costs of segregation and discrimination. Such a study should provide useful material for molding public opinion on the question of equal opportunity. This study would be preceded by a conference on the subject of segregation and discrimination.

9. Primary Test Case

The Council authorized the Board of Directors to proceed with a legal test of the applicability of the Supreme Court decision in Smith vs. Allwright in the State of Georgia if it appears that no such case is already under way.

And Resolve for 1945

1. General Resolutions

We believe that every effort must be made to prepare the people of the South for the returning Negro and white soldiers. The problems which are arising already as they come back from active service or are demobilized into civilian life call for prompt and constructive action on local, state, regional, and national levels.

With a view to encouraging the returning Negro soldiers to have faith that the democratic principles for which they have fought are to be translated into reality, we recommend:

1. Employment of all persons on the basis of ability, with due regard for seniority rights.
2. Abolition of the white primary where it exists.
3. Extension of the growing practice of employing Negro policemen and firemen in Southern cities and equal treatment of members of both races by the police and the courts.
4. Equalization of educational opportunity and of pay for teachers of both races.
5. Extension of publicly financed low cost housing.
6. Increased publicly financed medical and dental care available to both races on an equal basis.
7. That equal accommodations for Negroes as provided under the law, be actually provided on all public transportation facilities, and that discriminatory practices now common in travel be abolished.

2. Post War Employment

The Southern Regional Council realizes the importance of encouraging and planning for an effective program of full employment in every Southern community.

We, therefore, urge that such planning include the initiation and maintenance of an effective public employment service which within its ranks and among employers will promote the effective utilization of all workers in terms of their skills and training, without regard to their race, color, or creed.

We recommend that equal and effective opportunities for the technical and vocational training of Negroes be made available.

We recommend the creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to promote the non-discriminatory use of manpower.

3. Education

In the seventeen states and the District of Columbia which require separation of the races in their public school systems, continuing and substantial differences in the public schools for white and Negro children prevail despite requirements of educational statutes, that separate and uniform school facilities be established and maintained. These differences are reflected in the buildings and equipment, in the length of the school day, in the teacher-pupil loads, in the per-pupil expenditure, in the investments in public school property, and in teachers' salaries.

Recognizing the necessity and continuing obligation to establish equality of educational opportunity for all in order to further the establishment of a sound economy in the Southern region, and recognizing the opportunities inherent in the post-war plans for school improvements now developing in communities within these states, we accept the principles that:

1. There should exist and be available for Negro children the same types of educational opportunities as there are for white children.
2. The teacher-pupil ratio in Negro schools should be as low as that in schools for white children.
3. The length of the school day should be the same for the Negro child as it is for the white child.
4. The same types of physical accommodations and facilities in the public schools should exist and be available for Negro children as are available for white children.

We recommend these principles for the consideration of all law-abiding citizens, and responsible school officials in Southern communities, and urge, in behalf of the common welfare, that action be taken to make these principles operative in all plans for public school improvements.

4. Homer P. Rainey and the University of Texas

The Southern Regional Council wishes to protest the dismissal of Dr. Homer P. Rainey as President of the University of Texas. The Council believes this is a startling infringement of personal and academic freedom, and a severe blow to those Southern persons and agencies working for democratic rights.

The Southern Regional Council believes in Dr. Rainey because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his close association with us in the formation of SRC which he now serves as Vice-President. The Council commends him for the stand he has taken, and applauds those Texas citizens and those students and faculty members at the University of Texas who gave him such unqualified support.

Talmadge Opponents Attacked For Failure of Veterans Program

All This Good Government Crowd Can Do Is Argue About Who Is Boss While Veterans Lose Their Rights.

One of the candidates for Governor has developed a deep love for veterans here in the past few weeks. My father's platform for veterans must have brought him around to that, for, during the four years he occupied the Governor's chair there was not the scratch of the pen for veterans except to reduce veterans of the sixties from the high and honorable status of Confederate veterans to federal relief clients. When the ranks of that immortal army of the Confederacy was thinning to the vanishing point this candidate ceased to recognize them as soldiers and permit them to receive a pension which they had earned and transferred them in mass to relief rolls. He had no recognition at all for Spanish and World War veterans.

He says he has committees right now writing bills to be introduced in 1947. His committee is about 10 years off schedule.

The other candidate dismisses veterans—all veterans—with the statement that they will get "quick service" if he is elected. The crowd which is running him say that my father's recognition of the men and women who fought the nation's wars is a "hand out". Any veterans legislation is looked upon by them as a hand out.

Is This The Good Government You Propose, Mr. Carmichael?

The good people of Georgia should know that the Editor of the Atlanta Constitution, Mr. Ralph McGill, is a charter member and one of the organizers of the Southern Regional Council. This "uplift" society was one of three such societies to receive a $25,000.00 appropriation from the Rosenwald fund in one single handout.

The sole purpose of the Southern Regional Council as reported in the columns of Mr. McGill's newspaper, the Atlanta Constitution, is to improve race relations between the Negro and the White people. In order to accomplish this, they propose nothing for the White people, but for the Negro they recommend.

1. Employment of all persons on the basis of ability with due regard for seniority rights. (This simply means that the Negro is to be given equal jobs and seniority rights as the White people.)

2. Abolition of the White Primary where it exists. (Georgians are, of course, aware of the support given to this plank by Governor Arnall, Mr. McGill, Mr. Carmichael, the Atlanta Constitution and James M. Cox.)

Extension of the growing practice of employing Negro policemen and firemen in Southern cities and equal treatment of members of both races by the police and the courts. (Those who have the opportunity of seeing out-of-state newspapers will know that this "uplift" society has accomplished its purpose of placing Negro policemen in the city of Richmond, Virginia.)

They have wrecked the administration of the GI Bill in Georgia. It has bogged down in indifference and incompetency and red tape. Less than 15 per cent of the veterans of Georgia have received anything whatever from the GI Bill—except unemployment pay, and if they had administered this law with reasonable fairness not a veteran would have needed to draw pay for unemployment.

They are sitting over there at the capitol right this minute with a Veterans Resettlement Corporation which could be put to work in the morning, and which would finance the purchase of homes and farms and businesses for these veterans—so they could get started and get off the unemployment pay and begin to earn money. But all this "quick service", "good government" crowd can do is to hinder and delay, and fuss about who is the boss. The whole structure blew up last week when the men acquainted with educational matters were let out; the Board, not a member of which purports to know anything about schools and schooling, hamstrung them until they could not get the GI Schools started. And they quit in disgust. That means more delay, and thousands of veterans have thrown up their hands and kissed the GI Bill goodbye.

We had this "quick service" crowd after the first World

The Next Governor

A farmer donned in over-alls,
Trod the furrows of a two horse plow,
Tilling the soil in a lonely field—
As the sweat poured off his brow.

Verdent fields were his source of strength,
There under the deep blue sky;
His ardent friends were laboring men
And neighbors, who lived near by.

Days passed on—the harvest came—
Then he found his account in red!
Again he studied the farmer's needs,
Who were entitled to more than bread.

Obviously, his thoughts were solemn now,
As he remembered in ages past;
When times were hard and men depressed,
A leader was chosen—at last.

With steadfast hope and courage true
And campaign pledges fair;
The man who toiled in the lonely field,
Was elected to the Governor's chair.

His name is known [illegible] north to south,
From the west[illegible] to Maine;
He put on sale th[illegible] tags—
His promises a[illegible] in vain.

Although maligned by slandering press,
He is not alone in his fight—
Georgia will rally to his support,
Keeping a White Primary—White.

He remembers his friends in over-alls,
And those who are in despair,
He knows their every problem—NOW,
And will go back to the Governor's chair.

Thus, friends in office, shop or field,
May render some helpful deeds—
By supporting the man who kept his word,
In relieving human needs.

—A Talmadge supporter.

That Mr. Carmichael recommended that the Revenue Department be allowed 10 percent of any delinquent remittance it could obtain from County Tax Collectors or other persons it could catch and fine.

For proof see—Communication No. 15, House Journal, Volume I, Special Session, dated February 8, 1939, page 486.

You Propose, Mr. Carmichael?

The good people of Georgia should know that the Editor of the Atlanta Constitution, Mr. Ralph McGill, is a charter member and one of the organizers of the Southern Regional Council. This "uplift" society was one of three such societies to receive a $25,000.00 appropriation from the Rosenwald fund in one single handout.

4. Equalization of educational opportunity and facilities and pay for teachers. (We wonder if the good people of our State realize that this simple sounding phrase "equalization of educational opportunity and facilities" really means that these "uplifters" propose that the Negro use the same "facilities" as the White people, which means that White children should go to the same schools with Negroes and use the same teachers.)

5. Extension of publicly financed low-cost housing.

6. Increased publicly financed medical and dental care available to both races on an equal basis. (This means that both races use the same Doctors and Dentists, at the same time, on an equal basis. If you doubt it, read the next proposal by this negrophile group whose principal backers in Georgia are also the principal supporters of Mr. Carmichael.)

7. That equal accommodations for Negroes as provided under the law be actually provided on all public transportation facilities and that discriminatory practices now common in travel be abolished. (Street-cars are public transportation facilities, so are busses and trains. When they speak of "discriminatory practices now common in travel being abolished" they simply mean that a negro may take a seat beside a Southern white lady on a bus, train or street-car and nothing should be done about it.)

Is this the good government you propose, Mr. Carmichael?

The above seven recommendations, minus the Italics, is what Mr. McGill and the Southern Regional Council refer to as a progressive movement. This is their "good government". Read the rest of the article printed in the Atlanta Constitution of December 7, 1944.

Rainey Incident

"In another resolution the council protested the dismissal of Dr. Homer P. Rainey, as president of the University of Texas, calling the action 'a startling infringement of personal and academic freedom and a severe blow to those southern persons and agencies working for democratic rights'."

"That resolution commented further:"

" 'The Southern Regional Council believes in Dr. Rainey because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his close association with us in the formation of Southern Regional Council, which he now serves as vice president'."

Mr. McGill has repeatedly told the people of Georgia that there was no attempt being made to allow the negro to vote . . . that there is no attempt being made in Georgia to break down southern traditions. He keeps telling the people today that there is no movement to destroy southern traditions . . . that Eugene Talmadge is merely raising a smoke screen upon which to run a campaign. He tells the people this when he is a charter member, an organizer and one of the incorporators of the very organization whose sole purpose it is to abolish the segregation laws and destroy southern traditions.

But today the newspaper of which he is Editor, the Atlanta Constitution, has given him the lie.

Lincoln's Views On Political Equality

From his speech at Charleston, Ill., September 8, 1858.

"I am not now, nor ever have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social or political equality of the white and black races. I am not now, nor never have been in favor of making voters or jurors of negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office, nor of inter-marriages with white people. There is a physical difference which will forever forbid the two races living together on social or political equality.

"There must be a position of Superior and Inferior, and I am in favor of assigning the superior position to the White man."

War. They objected to Spanish and World War veterans having the free business license which my father sponsored in 1935. They brought suit to have it declared unconstitutional on the grounds that it was "class legislation"—that it was a "hand out". That grand old man of the Georgia Supreme Court, Justice Marcus Beck, wrote the opinion in the case and he said this:

> I heard nobody object to putting these young men in a "special class" when they were being summoned to the draft boards to be trained to fight a ruthless enemy on foreign soil. And I am not going to hear anybody object now to putting them in a class to receive free license.

And another grand old man of the Georgia Supreme Court, Chief Justice Richard B. Russell, saved this law from another attack. It stood on the statute books until Ellis Arnall, and this "good government", "quick service" crowd tore it to bits in 1943.

This crowd didn't yell "hand out!" when drill sergeants were passing out rifles. They said nothing about "special class" when they were be[illegible]ed into draft boards.

Now, my father did no[illegible] he got into a political campaign to become veter[illegible]d.

The word "veteran" was not mentioned in the campaign of 1932. After he had been elected by the white people of Georgia, and at a time when there was not the slightest need to curry favor of veterans, he walked out on the platform at the Democratic State Convention in Macon in October 1932, and, among other things, he said this:

> "I shall not forget the debt of honor which this state owes to its veterans, and that means the veterans of the Spanish-American and World Wars as well as Confederate Veterans and their widows."

That was the first time a governor designate had mentioned veterans in an acceptance speech since the days of John B. Gordon and Alfred Colquitt.

And he followed this up—not mealy-mouthed and half-heartedly. He paid back pensions to Confederate Veterans and their widows—the first time they had been paid in full since Appomattox. He redeemed Georgia's debt of honor to them, and his successor—a candidate in this race—reduced them to relief clients.

Many years before my father became Governor the state had obligated itself to pay the burial expenses of Confederate Veterans and their widows. Not a cent had

He says that Talmadge has turned right around now, and wants them repealed.

Ralph reminds you of a good old immigrant woman who hadn't been in the country long. "I was goin' to the spring for a pail of water," she said, "and the wind was blowin' right in my face. And when I was comin' back with my pail of water the wind was blowin' right in my back. America is the changeablest country I ever saw!"

Rosenwald Ralph is confused. He has turned around, and he thinks the wind has changed.

Talmadge did sponsor laws to protect elections against fraud, and to protect the County Unit System against such fellows as consort with the Rosenwald Foundation emisaries in Georgia. And we had a fine, well rounded, system of elections which enabled us to have a white primary.

This "good government" crowd attacked the White Primary in such an insidious way that they cut the heart out of the plan which white people in Georgia had built up. They brought a fake case against themselves, filed a false answer and made a false statement of facts which they knew would make it impossible for them to win. Then they streamlined it through the courts in six weeks so they could have a bloc of negro votes this summer. If the case had been honestly defended it would have required 18 to 24 months for it to have been decided by the Supreme Court.

They did not destroy all of our election laws—if they had we would have had a white primary. They left enough of our election laws hanging on to prevent a white primary. Talmadge urged a special session of the General Assembly to repeal the only laws left to prevent any argument that a white primary could not be held. But they are swinging onto these laws, and the Governor said he would veto any bill which repealed them.

We had a white primary based upon party rules up until the Neil Primary laws were passed. All we need now to have a white primary is to get a State Democratic Executive Committee that wants a white primary. South Carolina met the situation very promptly, and Georgia can meet it when the state government and the party machinery is returned to the control of white people who live in Georgia.

We can have a White Primary and a County Unit System. Under the police authority of the state, we can have laws regulating fraud and corruption in the ballot box. Any person who has the slightest knowledge of the law knows this fact and Judge Samuel B. Sibley, when writing this decision, went out of his way when he specifically stated, "For example, the forbidding the sale or furnishing of intoxicants on election days, whether the election

Talmadge Cites Primary Laws At Moultrie

Moultrie, Ga., June 1.—Eugene Talmadge invaded Moultrie today and took the city by a storm of public approval. Speaking to the large crowd which gathered here, he urged voters to unite under a banner of Southern tradition and heritage to preserve the white primary.

Close attention was paid by the audience when Talmadge revealed that negroes comprise over 55 per cent of the population in 92 counties of Georgia and 50 per cent or more of the population in 47 counties of the state.

"The people of Georgia must decide whether or not the white people will continue to run the state or whether they are willing to turn it over to the Moscow-Harlem zoot suiters. If the white primary is not preserved, the negroes will vote in a block and soon will dominate the elections. Colored candidates will then be elected to office and our Jim Crow laws will be destroyed. South Carolina retained their white primary and so can Georgia."

Talmadge explained that the white primary can be retained without jeopardizing the county unit system. The county unit system can be written in the State Constitution. The white primary can be included in the rules of the State Democratic Committee with a provision that such rules cannot be changed except by four-fifths vote of the delegates assembled at the Democratic Convention.

Promising a broad progressive government with better jobs, opportunities and a better livelihood for the people of the state, the former Governor offered a constructive program for increased salaries for school teachers and bus drivers, loans and local vocational training for veterans, an effective health service with hospitals for rural areas, hard surfaced post and school roads, improved farming conditions.

Turning to the provisions for aid to our old persons, the Gubernatorial candidate said that "he had received thousands of pitiful letters from old persons in Georgia who are hardly existing on the bare necessities of life. These people who are entitled to a pension are getting a mere pittance or nothing at all. When elected Governor, I shall work to see that every old person in this state who makes application receives a pension substantial enough to support himself and his family."

Do we want honesty in government as we have had for the last three and a half years? Do we?

We want another administration that will write us up in the South—hating, Negro-loving Collier's and refer to our inferiority complex, do we?

So that's what constitutes a good, honest and clean administration, is it? Honest administration, hey! Its to laugh.

After he had been elected by the white people of Georgia, and at a time when there was not the slightest need to curry favor of veterans, he walked out on the platform at the Democratic State Convention in Macon in October 1932, and, among other things, he said this:

> "I shall not forget the debt of honor which this state owes to its veterans, and that means the veterans of the Spanish-American and World Wars as well as Confederate Veterans and their widows."

That was the first time a governor designate had mentioned veterans in an acceptance speech since the days of John B. Gordon and Alfred Colquitt.

And he followed this up—not mealy-mouthed and half-heartedly. He paid back pensions to Confederate Veterans and their widows—the first time they had been paid in full since Appomattox. He redeemed Georgia's debt of honor to them, and his successor—a candidate in this race—reduced them to relief clients.

Many years before my father became Governor the state had obligated itself to pay the burial expenses of Confederate Veterans and their widows. Not a cent had ever been paid, and practically every undertaker in the state held these unpaid bills. He paid every one of them.

Out of a sense of justice to Spanish and World War veterans he sponsored the Veterans License Law of 1935, the first Georgia Governor since the Confederate Home was built.

We had some veterans legislation back in 1924, but that was sponsored by veterans' organizations.

But every bill sponsored by the veterans' organizations at the last session of the Legislature was killed by this "good government", "quick service" crowd. These bills were designed to clear up the trouble which came to the surface last week when the group of educators quit in disgust.

You veterans, and friends and relatives of veterans, know my father's legislative program for those who left their homes, and their businesses and schools to engage in war. This program has been widely publicised, particularly in the May issue of the Georgia Legionnaire.

Instead of costing the taxpayers of Georgia money, this program will be the backbone of the state's economy for a generation. For every dollar we put in it we will get back ten.

Now, it will cost a few [illegible] dollars to exempt veterans from state ad valo[illegible] for five years, and tax collectors will miss a few [illegible] and if we give veterans free business license and an honorary driver's license.

But, balance this off with the money available under the GI Bill to give farm training, and other vocational training, to around 300 thousand Georgia veterans—and balance it off as against the millions of dollars now available to veterans for low-interest, long-term loans.

We are losing this under the policies of the present administration—about 85 per cent as regards schooling and training, and about 98 per cent as regards loans available.

The loss in dollars and cents is staggering—but consider the loss of opportunities to the veterans, I mean individual veterans. You will understand the loss when you compare a job-hunter, drawing unemployment pay, to a trained man, or woman, operating a farm which they own, or a skilled worker or a man running his own business. And when you consider this as to a single individual, multiply it by the number of veterans in Georgia and you will see what a continuation of the Arnall policy will cost.

Now, for your amusement: You probably read an editorial in this morning's Atlanta Constitution—written by Rosenwald Ralph McGill.

Rosenwald Ralph says that back in 1938, and as late as 1941, Talmadge wanted laws to protect the white primary against fraud; that he wanted laws to protect the County Unit System.

out of the plan which white people in Georgia had built up. They brought a fake case against themselves, filed a false answer and made a false statement of facts which they knew would make it impossible for them to win. Then they streamlined it through the courts in six weeks so they could have a bloc of negro votes this summer. If the case had been honestly defended it would have required 18 to 24 months for it to have been decided by the Supreme Court.

They did not destroy all of our election laws—if they had we would have had a white primary. They left enough of our election laws hanging on to prevent a white primary. Talmadge urged a special session of the General Assembly to repeal the only laws left to prevent any argument that a white primary could not be held. But they are swinging onto these laws, and the Governor said he would veto any bill which repealed them.

We had a white primary based upon party rules up until the Neil Primary laws were passed. All we need now to have a white primary is to get a State Democratic Executive Committee that wants a white primary. South Carolina met the situation very promptly, and Georgia can meet it when the state government and the party machinery is returned to the control of white people who live in Georgia.

We can have a White Primary and a County Unit System. Under the police authority of the state, we can have laws regulating fraud and corruption in the ballot box. Any person who has the slightest knowledge of the law knows this fact and Judge Samuel B. Sibley, when writing this decision, went out of his way when he specifically stated, "For example, the forbidding the sale or furnishing of intoxicants on election days, whether the election is a party primary or an election by the people, Georgia Code 58-609, is for the peace and good order of the community, an ordinary exercise of police power. So are the statutes which are designed to prevent frauds, for the State can rightly concern itself in the prevention of fraud in any sort."

Newspaper files of 1939 and 40 will show that Talmadge defended the County Unit System against the attacks of the Atlanta Constitution and the Atlanta Journal. They were directing their fight against the County Unit System then. They are using it now as a subterfuge—making out like they are afraid it will be endangered if we repeal the Neil Primary law. They ought to be honest enough to tell the people of their designs.

If they are returned to power for four more years of radical control by their out-of-state friends they are not above "throwing" a case which will destroy segregation laws. There is a terrific onslaught being made on these laws right now—from all over the North and East. Another fake case or two and we will have a worse than F.E.P.C., and federal officers will hound men down to force them to mix the races in stores and factories, in hotels and restaurants, in schools and everywhere else. And this will cease to be a white man's country.

Rosenwald Ralph and his crowd want it that way.

Rosenwald Ralph and his crowd have just turned around—the wind had not changed directions.

Did You Know?

That the Atlanta Journal, and its present candidate for Governor now expressing such concern over the County Unit system, strongly advocated in 1940 the reduction of Georgia's counties to 40 in number, which would of course mean the loss of the County Unit system.

For proof see—Editorial in the Atlanta Journal dated April 30, 1940.

The Plan Unfolds

The action of the Fifth Congressional District Executive Committee in abolishing the rule of electing candidates to Congress by popular vote and substituting therefor the county unit system brought bitter recriminations and denunciations from certain interests in Atlanta. These same interests raise their pious hands in holy horror when a rule is changed by a committee but suffer no qualms of conscience whatsoever in attempting to change a constitutional law that had been approved by the people.

At the same time a speaker who enjoys the support of these same interests was making a speech before the State Democratic Executive Committee advocating the retention of the county unit system.

Some one was paying lip service to this principle. Who do you think it was; the servant or the master?

Now, as Ralph McGill said in Tuesday's Constitution, "this is neither pro nor con. These are facts."

Now, what follows is editorial opinion and you can take it or leave it. But, just as sure as God made little green apples, these same interests are laying the groundwork for the abolition of the county unit system. When they get a certain element of our population registered, and they are certain that they control the balance of power, then they are coming out in the open and put the question to the vote of the people. This accomplished, the next step will be the consolidation of Georgia's 159 counties into about fifty, and they'll see to it that these fifty will contain a majority of the urban vote, combined with the element now registering, will give them absolute control of Georgia politics. Then goodbye to local self-government.

Oh, you'll be reassured with pious platitudes and glittering generalities, all in the name of good

Time to Wake Up!

For sometime there has been a constant drive put on by the Atlanta newspapers and a bunch of politicians around the state capitol, who are drawing large salaries from the State funds, to make the country counties pay more money into the State treasury.

They claim that Fulton, Bibb, Chatham, Richmond, Muscogee and a few other counties pay into the State treasury the greater part of the State funds. They call Talbot county and other country counties "pauper counties." They argue that these counties receive more money from the State treasury than they pay into the State treasury. This is true if we count only what Talbot county and other similar counties pay in State ad valorem taxes.

This propaganda has been put out so much that some citizens in this county actually believe that our county is an object of charity, supported by tax funds from the larger counties. Those who argue that we are not paying our prorata share of the State taxes only take into consideration the ad valorem tax. They never mention the special taxes we pay, not the corporate taxes, the intangible taxes, the gasoline and oil taxes. All of these make a considerable amount.

Another feature that some of our citizens fail to consider is that the cities in these larger counties Atlanta, Columbus, Savannah, Macon and Augusta, are fed and supported largely by the smaller counties around them. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are spent in Columbus from Talbot county every year. Also a considerable amount is spent in Atlanta and Macon. In that way the people of Talbot county contribute, indirectly, to the State treasury through Muscogee, Fulton and Bibb counties.

Mr. Ralph McGill,
Editor, The Constitution,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mr. McGill:

You recently wrote in your column that the better element of Georgia was backing Jimmy Carmichael, and I was just a little curious to know who they were. Being a neutral, or rather endorsing neither candidate, I have been attending these rallies to see what I could learn from these men. This brings me up to the rally, Tuesday night at the Erlanger Theatre, by ex-Gov. Eugene Talmadge. There, I really got a dose of the "better el-e mint" as Ed Rivers so ably put it. There was a bloc of about one hundred teen-agers, who, by their own acknowledgment, said they were for Mr. Carmichael; pleaded guilty to attending G[illegible]gia Tech and who boo-ed [illegible] heckled two war veterans [illegible] they attempted to speak. [illegible]member, those two veterans were sent into foreign lands and seas to fight for freedom of speech but when they attempted this in their own country, the privilege was denied them. This was no compliment to Jas. Carmichael or was it? Is it what the people will get when, and if, this man is elected governor of Georgia? Will free speech, even by our veterans, be abolished and a totalitarian form of government set up? Remember a man is known by his works and his works live after him. This demonstration was a disgrace to the homes these boys and girls represented and to the teachers who taught them. They did not go there with an open mind to learn, instead they went with that in their minds which had been taught them in the home and their school. It proves, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that teen-agers should not fight and

Rally Held To End Racial Segregation

Speaking at a Rally attended by a crowd of more than three thousand at an "I am an American Day" program, co-sponsored by the Pittsburg Courier, Harold L. Ickes, former Secretary of the Interior, advised the Negroes of the Nation not to yield too quickly to either the Republican or the Democratic party but to use their balance of power to divide and conquer the politicians.

The Rally was sponsored by the "Committee for Racial Democracy" and more than $1,000 was contributed toward a $25,000 fund sought by the Negroes to fight Racial Segregation in Washington.

Former Secretary Ickes advised the predominantly Negro group that without the Negro vote neither the Republicans nor Democrats can hope to win in at [illegible]st 5 crucial States in the North, [illegible] carrying of which would be [illegible]ary for either party to win [illegible]e elections in November or [illegible]1948.

Mr. Ickes told the negroes that a balance of power is as effective in politics as a majority. He cited the House of Representatives as an example and further told the group that in possessing the balance of power they were in a position to form alliances with independent political groups that would be more interested in the causes of men, than in offices.

Mr. Ickes said that because he is for freedom, he is against segregation and explained that all public properties should be for the use of all citizens. He pointed out to gathering that he had recommended William H. Hastie as Negro Governor for the Virgin Islands.

The Committee for Racial Democracy using as its theme: "We are Americans, too," demanded that Washington end all Racial Segregation. Leon Ransom, Negro Chairman of the Committee,

Better Postwar Race Relations Urged By SRC

From the Atlanta Constitution of December 7th, 1944 By The Associated Press

Asserting "every effort must be made to prepare the people of the south for the returning Negro and white soldier, the Southern Regional Council adopted yesterday a seven-point program of recommended action.

The council, composed of white and Negro leaders sponsoring better race relations, adopted as a basis of its program six points offered by Editor Virginius Dabney, of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, as chairman of the resolutions committee. The seventh point was added from the floor at the council's annual meeting here.

The recommendations:

1. Employment of all persons on the basis of ability, with due regard for seniority rights.

2. Abolition of the white primary where it exists.

FOR NEGRO POLICEMEN

3. Extension of the growing practice of employing Negro policemen and firemen in Southern cities and equal treatment of members of both races by the police and the courts.

4. Equalization of educational opportunity and facilities and pay for teachers.

5. Extension of publicly financed low-cost housing.

6. Increased publicly financed medical and dental care available to both races on an equal basis.

7. That equal accommodations for Negroes as provided under the law be actually provided on all public transportation facilities and that discriminatory practices now common in travel be abolished.

RAINEY INCIDENT

In another resolution the council protested the dismissal of Dr. Homer P. Rainey as president of the University of Texas, calling the action "a startling infringement of personal and academic freedom and a severe blow to those southern persons and agencies working for democratic rights."

That resolution commented further:

"The Southern Regional Council believes in Dr. Rainey because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his close association with us in the formation of SRC, which he now serves as vice president."

REGISTER NOW

In all counties, other than Fulton, it is possible to register and vote in this year's primary up until July 5, 1946.

Since the abolishing of the poll tax law in Georgia, it is now possible for many citizens to be restored to the voters list.

Be sure to register before July 5, and see that your name is on the voters list—AND VOTE.

You do not have to pay any poll taxes to register or any back poll taxes. The Attorney-General, Mr. Eugene Cook, has ruled that back poll taxes will be wiped out and they cannot collect them from you. This applies to young and old, male and female.

All white people that will be 18 years old before the general election in November 1946 should go to the Courthouse and register with the Tax Collector or the Tax Commissioner.

Being country counties, with the population not as dense as in the larger counties it naturally costs more for education per child than in the more densely populated towns and counties.

We deny the charge in full that Talbot county is receiving more from the State treasury than the county is putting into it. It is time for the people of Talbot and other small counties to wake up and stop swallowing the dope dished out to them by politicians whose ever cry is "More Money" and who have concocted this scheme to have the valuation in the smaller counties doubled, so they can have more money to squander on their pet schemes.

Talbot county is paying its part of the State's expenses and has been all along and we do not believe that there is any reason to increase taxes now.—Talbotton New Era.

It proves, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that teen-agers should not fight and they should not vote. This was a spectacle of the Youth movement that Hitler was damned for, and rightly so. However, make no mistake about it, we have the same movement right here in Georgia. If they, together with the Negro, would wake up to the fact they are being exploited by ruthless politicians, solely to gain power, then and then only, will our country become once again a strong Republic governed by true Americans.

The ministers are using their pulpit time to discuss the Klan and racial equality. A Bible student knows why a Negro is a Negro and even though we were created equal, there is no such thing as social equality anywhere. As to the Klan, there is no difference in it and any other secret order, the Masonic for instance, except those who discount it, are not members for some reason. What can we expect of our chil[illegible] when the home, school [illegible] church, put words into [illegible] mouths that can do nothin[illegible] stir up strife?

Being a Republican, I am for neither candidate, however, I am proud that none of those in the catcall gallery Tuesday night were of my politics; refusing men, who had given up everything they held precious to fight for what they were told was democracy, the right of freedom of speech. Instead these rabble-rousers were a very good specimen of the "BETTER EL-E-MINT."

Thank you.

$1,615,513 Spent To End Segregation

Yes, Mr. McGill and Mr. Atlanta Constitution, let us stick to the record. Let us review the record. This time let it be your record that we review.

In 1942 you and the Carmichael crowd, which you term the "Good Government" crowd, were telling the people of Georgia that there was no effort being made or any money being spent, to break down the segregation laws and the Southern traditions of the Southland.

While doing this you referred to Mr. Embree, President of the Rosenwald Fund, and his paid employee, Walter D. Cocking, of the University of Georgia, as being great statesmen with no intent whatever in the back of their minds toward abolishing the segregation laws in the South or permitting Negroes to go to school with whites, or to ride on streetcars, busses or trains with white Southerners.

At the very same time you were telling the people of Georgia this through the columns of the Atlanta Constitution, Mr. McGill, you were a member of a group, whose policies, recommendations and purposes are outlined in another part of this issue of the Statesman. Your group has been the recipient of $25,000 in one handout of the Rosenwald Fund for the purpose of breaking down the segregation laws in the South.

You knew of this drive, Mr. McGill, because you were a member and a part of it. But you did not tell the people of it. In fact, you denied it.

Yes, Mr. McGill, let us stick to the record. Let us review the record, Mr. McGill.

A portion of the record is as follows, reproduced from the columns of the New York Times of November 20, 1944. A newspaper of excellent repute concerning the truthfulness of its news columns.

Mr. Edwin R. Embree, president of the Rosenwald Fund, said in part: "In spite of continued segregation and discrimination, the training and experiece in the armed forces has been tremendous." . . . "Coming back from such experience, the whole male population of the race will never again fit into the serfdom of southern feudalism or into second class status in Northern industrial cities." "It is too late ever again to keep the Negroes in their place."

The group, known as the Southern Regional Council, of which you are a charter member and one of the incorporators, has been the recipient of $25,000.000 of this Negro money in one handout, Mr. McGill.

You know the purpose of this movement of which you are one of the incorporators, Mr. McGill. Yet you deny it. Why, Mr. McGill?

Is this your "Good Government," Mr. Carmichael?

If so, let us pray.

The article from the New York signs—in employment, growth unions, rising political power ucation, civil rights defend the courts, the spread of int cial organizations, new opportunities in the armed services, etc.—Mr. Embree concludes:

"In spite of continued segregation and discrimination, the training and experience in the armed forces have been tremendous. A million Negroes, practically all the young men of the group between 18 and 30, have been given an education far beyond any school or college. They have been well housed and well fed. Their health has been safeguarded and their strength built up. They have been trained disciplined—for the most part in wholesome fashion. They have seen other parts of the country and of the world. Along with slights, most soldiers have sensed wide horizons and have had some warming experiences of respect and admiration as they moved over America, through the Pacific and in Europe.

Little did he know when he printed the story of what the Southern Regional Council proposed as "Better Postwar Race Relations" that the people of Georgia would discover that he was a charter member and organizer of this group which proposes to destroy Southern traditions. Thus it comes to pass, that the very man who has shouted the loudest that there is no movement toward social equality in the South, is the leader of that same movement in Georgia.

Yes, Mr. McGill, when we said "them lyin' newspapers" that is what we meant.

Yes, Mr. Atlanta Constitution, let the people reason together, in order that they may determine what can be done to protect themselves from these marplot, outside, alien influences, led by certain misguided individuals within our State.

Since you are the hand-picked candidate of this group, Mr. Carmichael, may we ask again. Is this your idea of "Good Government"?

doubt that he should be the recipient of all of the well thinking people of Georgia who want clean and honest government. Especially did he outline himself where there should not be the slightest doubt in any Negro's mind throughout the state, but if their votes would have anything to do with it he will be the next governor of the state of Georgia. His stand for good government cannot help one group and have an ill effect on another, but would be the good, fair and honest government for all.

His stand against such organizations as the K. K. K. is encouraging not only to the Negro but to any race which would stand for the better elements of life. His position on the teachers' pay would encourage not only the Negro teachers' vote but all teachers' vote. His stand on the color line is in line with the decent thinking Negro and the decent thinking white man. Negroes are not disturbed over social equality a decent living condition and ht to better his economic, so- nd political standards. To who did ask of him as to how he stood on the "white primary" issue he immediately told them that the law of the land had settled that issue and he showed that he had the utmost respect for the law of the highest court of the land. Negro Women Suggested As Labor Source

The Southern Frontier, a publication of the Southern Regional Council, Incorporated, Atlanta, stated that Negro women offer a virtually untouched labor source

OVER THE MILL WHEEL

By CLARA ROBBINS

I can't find any yellow, second-sheet paper in my desk this morning. That sister of mine has a way of writing on my typewriter though she has a better one of her own; she musses up my stuff, moves the envelopes, clips, pencils, etc., and has used all the yellow paper. When she wakes up—I am writing early—she will hand me over a fistful of white paper and let it go at that. But somehow I don't seem to think as easily on white paper as I do on the other, from force of habit. I use second-sheets for first draft of anything to be published; then I put white paper in the machine, and go over making corrections taking out and putting in, etc.—I know you wish she hadn't taken that yellow paper, so you wouldn't have to read all this.

Have been sick for a week, but feeling lots better this morning. Have suffered terribly, it seems that old arthritis came back on me and with a vengeance; even a slight case of arthritis is withering. I had it two years ago for a long time and it almost put me out. Managed to get to Sunday school yesterday, bad as I felt. As I sat down by a friend she naturally asked how I was getting on, knowing I was sick. I told her I still was feeling pretty bad, just could get there. She smiled, and said, "Well, I am going to tell you something that will make you feel better." Of course I wondered what she had to impart, thought most likely it was some friend-tried prescription that would help this "misery in the back," and to the drugstore I would go. But she had something even better than that. Listen, friends, here's what she said: ther and full cooperation in every way.

Well, the campaign is progressing, mills grinding slowly, but I hope exceedingly fine. Good reports that Talmadge will be the next governor—but we never can tell. With the Journal and Constitution fighting as they do there is not much place for a let-up for any of us. Some one may say, "I can't do much, can not give big checks, or even small ones, nothing I can do." Suppose we look around and see. I believe I have said before, every little bit helps; despise not the day of small things. One of the easiest things to do is to listen to every one of the Talmadge radio addresses. That is the most pleasant duty. If you have a radio, you can do a good service by insisting that some people who have none come in and hear the Talmadge address with you. If no radio in your home mention to some friend that you want to hear these speeches, and almost any one will ask you to come over and listen with them on the campaign hour.

Another way to help, read the Statesman thoroughly—even my articles, if not asking too much—send the paper to others when you have read it, and ask them to send it on to some one else. The state needs a man of Governor Talmadge's type to be the head of it, and ask all your friends to vote for him, without fail!

Did You Know?

That Mr. Carmichael recommended that assets of the Milledgeville State Hospital amounting to approximately $30,000.00 be turned over to the Rosenwald Fund, and his paid employee, Walter D. Cocking, of the University of Georgia, as being great statesmen with no intent whatever in the back of their minds toward abolishing the segregation laws in the South or permitting Negroes to go to school with whites, or to ride on streetcars, busses or trains with white Southerners.

At the very same time you were telling the people of Georgia this through the columns of the Atlanta Constitution, Mr. McGill, you were a member of a group, whose policies, recommendations and purposes are outlined in another part of this issue of the Statesman. Your group has been the recipient of $25,000 in one handout of the Rosenwald Fund for the purpose of breaking down the segregation laws in the South.

You knew of this drive, Mr. McGill, because you were a member and a part of it. But you did not tell the people of it. In fact, you denied it.

Yes, Mr. McGill, let us stick to the record. Let us review the record, Mr. McGill.

A portion of the record is as follows, reproduced from the columns of the New York Times of November 20, 1944. A newspaper of excellent repute concerning the truthfulness of its news columns.

As reported in these columns, Mr. Edwin R. Embree, president of the Rosenwald Fund, said in part: "In spite of continued segregation and discrimination, the training and experiece in the armed forces has been tremendous." . . . "Coming back from such experience, the whole male population of the race will never again fit into the serfdom of southern feudalism or into second class status in Northern industrial cities." "It is too late ever again to keep the Negroes in their place."

The group, known as the Southern Regional Council, of which you are a charter member and one of the incorporators, has been the recipient of $25,000.000 of this Negro money in one handout, Mr. McGill.

You know the purpose of this movement of which you are one of the incorporators, Mr. McGill. Yet you deny it. Why, Mr. McGill?

Is this your "Good Government," Mr. Carmichael?

If so, let us pray.

The article from the New York Times follows:

Embree, in Review on Rosenwald Fund, Says Two-Year Outlay Aids Democracy.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19—In the review of the Julius Rosenwald Fund just issued, Edwin R. Embree, president, reports that during the past two years, 1942-44, the fund expended $1,615,513 on its programs in education and race relations.

The largest single payment was $617,000 to Dillard University in New Orleans, in completing the fund's efforts to build up this and three other university centers for Negroes: Howard University in Washington, Fisk University and Meharry Medical College in Nashville, and the group of colleges in Atlanta, Ga.

Other expenditures included $336,000 for the preparation of white and Negro teachers for rural schools; $226,000 for race relations; $185,000 for fellowships for forty-three Negroes and thirty-one white Southerners; $94,000 for concluding payments on the Negro health program officially ended in 1942.

In reviewing events in the general field of race relations during recent years, Mr. Embree lists the and in Europe. debits and credits in the balance sheet of race relations.

"The balance," he states, "is tremendous gain for democracy. Never before in America have Negroes been given the opportunities they have today. And they are making the most of them."

After discussing the hopeful signs—in employment, growth [illegible] unions, rising political powe[illegible] ucation, civil rights defende[illegible] the courts, the spread of inte[illegible] cial organizations, new opportunities in the armed services, etc.—Mr. Embree concludes:

"In spite of continued segregation and discrimination, the training and experience in the armed forces have been tremendous. A million Negroes, practically all the young men of the group between 18 and 30, have been given an education far beyond any school or college. They have been well housed and well fed. Their health has been safeguarded and their strength built up. They have been trained disciplined—for the most part in wholesome fashion. They have seen other parts of the country and of the world. Along with slights, most soldiers have sensed wide horizons and have had some warming experiences of respect and admiration as they moved over America, through the Pacific and in Europe.

"Coming back from such experience, the whole young male population of the race will never again fit into the serfdom of Southern feudalism or into second-class status in Northern industrial cities. It is too late ever again to keep Negroes 'in their place.' If we wanted that, we should never have drawn them into war production nor called them to the tremendous education of the armed forces.

"We now have the problem, and the opportunity, to build Negroes, with all other citizens, into a common working force, which may then produce the highest standard of living ever known by any people; into a common culture, which will be enriched by the wisdom and ingenuity of this race as it has been by their art and music; into a common social and political order which may then become a true democracy."

Negro Women Suggested As Labor Source

The Southern Frontier, a publication of the Southern Regional Council, Incorporated, Atlanta, stated that Negro women offer a virtually untouched labor source for Southern industrialists.

Calling attention to Government reports that the textile mills are behind on production and that thousands of workers are needed, the publication asked:

"Would it not be sound business practice for the cotton textile industry in the South to turn its attention to this almost untapped reservoir of woman power?"

The Southern Regional Council, Inc., headquartered in Atlanta, is an interracial relations organization composed largely of Southerners, whites and Negroes.

The council paper said its suggestion would be met with the time-worn cry—"White workers will quit. It can't be done."

"It is being done—and successfully," it replied. "A number of the largest textile plants in the South have been employing Negro women as machine operators [illegible] many months. One plant [illegible] employs more than 5,000 [illegible] is over 40 per cent operat[illegible]y Negroes, predominantly Ne[illegible] women. That plant is meeting its production schedules, employe relations are good, and management is well pleased with the performance of the Negro women."

The paper said the plant referred to approached the matter of employing Negro women by a plant education program in which white workers were consulted on every step taken.

"The number of white workers lost was negligible," it said, "turnover and absenteeism have decreased; production is up to schedule; and that plant has no 'labor shortage problem.'

"There can be no doubt that, regardless of a company's sectional location or past employment practices, Negro workers can be introduced into a plant or their employment opportunities extended, provided management really wants to use a total labor force and is willing to approach the situation squarely."—From the Atlanta Journal 11|19|44.

Southern Liberals On the Move

Liberalism in the South was until very recently a career for the hardy few: Hodding Carter writing fiery editorials in the Mississippi Delta country, Frank Graham, now a U. S. Senator, building a great university at Chapel Hill, and Aubrey Williams preaching simple truths to the dirt farmers. These are the South's famous liberals—each working with great energy, unflagging conviction, and some effect. But until the Southern Regional Council was organized in 1944, many Southerners who had liberal inclinations but less glamorous jobs had failed to pitch in and do their part. This failure, the underlying reason liberalism has been so long taking root in the South, has stemmed mainly from a sense of aloneness. The independent liberal, constantly pitting his ideas against the status quo thinking of his neighbors, has had only his own standards to guide him and nothing to brace him when he began to sag. He could not evaluate his shortcomings objectively.

Northern liberals criticize the Southern liberal mercilessly, but make little effort to understand him. They rail at his tendency to insist that economic progress must come before civil rights. They get disgusted with him because he persists in remaining aloof, feeling that Northerners are persecuting him—a feeling which springs from his lonely urge to feel at one with the South.

The kind of cooperation needed to relieve this loneliness has been a long time coming. There was quite a stir in 1938 which seemed destined to lead to a working union of liberals. The President's Report on Economic Conditions in the South, which appeared that year, pictured a region rich in people and natural resources, but desperately poor in money and industrial development; a region whose one-third Negro population was living in poverty, ignorance, and sickness. More than fifteen hundred dismayed Southerners gathered in Birmingham, Alabama, to discuss this report—and stayed to form The Southern Conference on Human Welfare.

The conference did not get far in the South. It was directed not by fatigued liberals, but by a species of hyperthyroid liberals. With more zeal than realism, its leaders set out to storm all the battlements of Southern reaction at once. While the Southern liberal admitted there might be a need for an organization pursuing an "all-or-nothing" policy, it was not his need. He was not prepared—he was not quixotic enough—to tear away from the community he lived in.

Fifty-six Negro leaders made the next move, when they gathered in Durham, North Carolina, in October, 1942, and issued a statement on "just what the Negro wants and is expecting of the postwar South and nation."

In response, a group of white Southerners, meeting in Atlanta, found this statement "so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat or ultimatum, that we gladly pledge our cooperation." The groups came together and the Southern Regional Council took form. It is a membership organization, chartered under the laws of Georgia, with control in the hands of its members. Any citizen of the thirteen Southern states who subscribes to its principles may join.

One exuberant member of the council has called it "the South thinking." More modestly, it represents the homegrown Southern version of liberal thinking — a thinking not in conflict with liberalism elsewhere but shaped to a certain extent by the exigencies of the region. It cannot be judged abstractly. It can be judged in terms of what it tries to do—to bring about the active cooperation of whites and Negroes.

The council member has not been upset by criticism coming from some Northerners and a few super-zealous Southern liberals. He admits that the council has taken no firm stand against segregation — the principal charge so far brought against it — but he believes there are justifiable reasons for this failure to act. The council includes a great variety of liberals, some more concerned over the evil of segregation per se than others. But they unite on one fundamental issue: the Negro must have equal rights to citizenship, health, employment, and education; and the South must be raised to the nation's level.

There is no segregation inside the organization. Negroes and whites work together in the central offices in Atlanta and wherever the council holds local meetings. Its members have not stirred up any furor because they have gone about things discreetly. They meet in a church, a university building, or maybe a public recreation center. They take into account local prejudices; they want meetings, not riots.

The council is not, and does not expect to be, a mass-membership organization. Most of its energy is devoted to stirring others to attack existing wrongs. It cares less about being theoretically right than about discovering practical techniques for promoting community action. Nor does the council sponsor specific bills; it prepares material and testifies in support of a wide range of progressive legislation on the state level. In towns and villages, it attempts to prod groups of interested citizens to undertake self-surveys of what is wrong with their communities and advises them on procedure.

Reform movements in the South have always been characterized by a certain obliqueness of attack. When the council campaigns for more widespread use of Negro policemen in Southern communities, it emphasizes not the constitutional rights of the Negro but how this will keep down disorder in the Negro neighborhoods. The theoretical liberal might say this is weaseling. But the council liberal, trying to win over the group which holds the real power, the Southern whites, is interested in getting practical results.

Because the council is bi-racial, it has been a valuable instrument for working against racial violence, which was expected to flare up in the post-war period. The council provides a network of people of both races who can come together easily, discuss tensions and grievances, and get public action to prevent outbreaks. There is no way to measure how much trouble has been prevented in this way, but the record shows that there have been ten lynchings since the Second World War, compared to nearly two hundred during the three years after the First. There were fewer lynchings in the South last year than there were plays on Broadway about lynchings in the South.

The council had its trial by fire last year during the hectic period which followed the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. The challenge of civil rights was put squarely to the South, and that region gave forth a cry of enraged anguish. Much of the ensuing controversy was carried on with no real knowledge of the President's report or of what it recommended. The Southern press started with basically inaccurate information, then enlarged on it. In this explosive atmosphere the council put out a digest of the President's report entitled To Secure These Rights, and circulated more than 10,000 copies to newspaper editors, educators, and lecturers. It followed up with a companion piece, The Condition of Our Rights, which showed factually how much the South was found wanting.

Last September, with the civil-rights controversy at white heat and the Dixiecrat movement seemingly sweeping the South, the council's twelve-man executive committee unanimously adopted a resolution, called An Honest Answer in the Civil Rights Controversy, asking the South to face up to its task, to turn itself constructively to legal, educational, and economic reforms. The resolution also asked the rest of the country not to adopt the "irreproachable in spirit" but "exclusive" attitude of trying to force change by legal mechanism alone, ignoring the adjustments which must be made at "the operating level of society."

The council member does not think a great deal about long-range objectives in the field of race relations. He knows vaguely that the ugly reality of segregation must end some day, but he does not know exactly how this will come about. He knows that in many ways segregation is a farce — that physical segregation is a fantastic illusion in the minds of Southerners. The white man and the Negro go to different theaters, but the Negro lives and works in the white man's house and eats from the same dishes. It would not take much of a satirist to ridicule the Southern white man's notion that he has managed to keep the two races physically apart.

But it will take more than satire to eliminate the segregation that exists in the mind. The white man and the Negro in the South will be segregated in their minds as long as the white man has political rights and the Negro has none, as long as the white man has health and money and education, and the Negro has so little. Breaking down these differences will do more to undermine segregation than occasional legal victories involving bus seating.

To break down these differences requires discipline that only organized effort can give. That is what a Southerner, a charter member of the Southern Regional Council, was talking about when he said: "Personally, I should rather help to capture the foothills which have to be captured sooner or later than merely to point out a distant peak and urge my comrades to storm it at once. I, too, can see the peak, but I see no particular virtue in starting an association of peak gazers."

Introduction

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL was formed during the closing years of World War II by Southerners who wanted at home better practise of the ideals for which that most terrible of wars was being fought abroad. These leaders, Negro and white, came together voluntarily, without coercion, without rancor, to try to do something about problems arising from culture and history that crippled this southern land and people they loved.

That was 20 years ago. The spirit of that beginning is recalled in the reprinting here of the three documents involved with the founding of the Southern Regional Council, and in articles about them. History and development of the Council is indicated in the two other documents included in this issue of New South.

A group of Negro leaders wrote the first document, The Durham Conference Statement. It stated first their belief that "compulsory segregation" is unjust, and the specifics of reform they considered the most important for political and civil rights, jobs, education, agriculture, military service, social welfare, and health.

A group of white leaders met in response, and adopted an Atlanta Conference Statement which in sum agreed with the Durham Statement, and pronounced its objectives just. At Richmond, a committee from both these groups was empowered to organize a Southern Regional Council, and did so, incorporating it with the following set out as its reason for existence:

> . . . For the improvement of economic, civic and racial conditions in the South in all efforts toward regional and racial development; to attain through research and action programs the ideals and practises of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region; to reduce race tension, the basis of racial tension, racial misunderstanding and racial distrust; to develop and integrate leadership in the South on new levels of regional development and fellowship; and to cooperate with local, state and regional agencies on all levels in the attainment of the desired objectives.

The early documents were conceived with an obvious awareness of a new opportunity for the South. The hope then was to solve simultaneously a whole set of social problems of which race was merely the most notorious. Failure during the years since then to make the most of this new chance has centered around southern reluctance to undo racial injustices, and as a consequence, race emerged, stark and alone, as the number-one problem. It had to be solved before the other problems could be finally solved, and the other problems had to be viewed in relation to solving it.

Awareness of this by the Southern Regional Council as far back as 1951 is indicated in the document, The South and the Future. And its fullest implications are stated in the final document, a Statement of Views adopted by the Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council in the fateful late days of 1963.

This final document came at a time when racial strife had spread—or been acknowledged—across America. In all the land, there had come awareness of the need for racial rapprochement, something beyond court orders or negotiation pressured by demonstrations or legislation or other forms of coercion, necessary though these remained. The demand was for the mutual understanding and respect that is the real basis for human cooperation.

Toward this, the founding spirit of the Southern Regional Council has much to offer. Despite the discouragements of the past 20 years, that spirit is still alive. Progress has come. Though most of it had to be imposed upon the South, growing numbers of Southerners of both races found the courage to fight for and support each new change. Because of them, and a new atmosphere they have been crucial in creating in all but perhaps two states, once more there seems to be for the South one of those times of great opportunity—this time to lead the nation.

It is therefore appropriate to recall the original vision that founded the Southern Regional Council—a vision of a great and growing body of concerned Southerners of both races, led by all the best minds from their midst, cooperating creatively for the betterment of all aspects of southern life.

So in this issue of New South, we look back to the beginnings of a work that is not yet done, and to a spirit which seems more than ever necessary. We look back, and we look forward in the only way possible at this stage of the work, and at this time in history—with rededication.

PAT WATTERS

The Durham Conference Statement:

A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South*

A STATEMENT BY SOUTHERN NEGROES

THE WAR HAS SHARPENED the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status, and the welfare of the country as a whole.

With these problems in mind, we, a group of southern Negroes, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, and in the belief that we voice the sentiments of many of the Negroes of the Nation as well as the South, take this means of recording our considered views of the issues before us.

(1) Our Nation is engaged in a world-wide struggle, the success of which, both in arms and ideals, is paramount and demands our first loyalty.

(2) Our loyalty does not, in our view, preclude consideration now of problems and situations that handicap the working out of internal improvements in race relations essential to our full contribution to the war effort, and of the inevitable problems of post-war reconstruction, especially in the South where we reside.

(3) The South, with its twenty-five million people, one-third of whom are Negroes, presents a unique situation, not only because of the size of the Negro population but because of the legal and customary patterns of race relations which are invariably and universally associated with racial discriminations. We recognize the strength and age of these patterns.

We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races or classes or creeds; however, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework.

(4) We regard it as unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life.

(5) We have the courage and faith to believe, however, that it is possible to evolve in the South a way of life, consistent with the principles for which we as a Nation are fighting throughout the world, that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fears.

*Statement of Negro leaders attending Southern Conference on Race Relations, Durham, N. C., October 20, 1942.

POLITICAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS

1. We regard the ballot as a safeguard of democracy. Any discrimination against citizens in the exercise of the voting privilege, on account of race or poverty, is detrimental to the freedom of these citizens and to the integrity of the State. We therefore record ourselves as urging now:

a. The abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting.

b. The abolition of the white primary.

c. The abolition of all forms of discriminatory practices, evasions of the law, and intimidations of citizens seeking to exercise their right of franchise.

2. Exclusion of Negroes from jury service because of race has been repeatedly declared unconstitutional. This practice we believe can and should be discontinued now.

3. a. Civil rights include personal security against abuses of police power by white officers of he law. These abuses, which include wanton killings, and almost routine beatings of Negroes, whether they be guilty or innocent of an offense, should be stopped now, not only out of regard for the safety of Negroes, but of common respect for the dignity and fundamental purpose of the law.

b. It is the opinion of this group that the employment of Negro police will enlist the full support of Negro citizens in control of lawless elements of their own group.

4. In the public carriers and terminals, where segregation of the races is currently made mandatory by law as well as by established custom, it is the duty of Negro and white citizens to insist that these provisions be equal in kind and quality and in character of maintenance.

5. Although there has been, over the years, a decline in lynchings, the practice is still current in some areas of the South, and substantially, even if indirectly, defended by resistance to Federal legislation designed to discourage the practice. We ask that the States discourage this fascistic expression by effective enforcement of present or of new laws against this crime by apprehending and punishing parties participating in this lawlessness.

If the States are unable, or unwilling to do this, we urge the support of all American citizens who believe in law and order in securing Federal legislation against lynching.

6. The interests and securities of Negroes are involved directly in many programs of social planning and administration; in the emergency rationing, wage and rent control programs. We urge the use of qualified Negroes on these boards, both as a means of intelligent representation and a realistic aid to the functioning of these bodies.

INDUSTRY AND LABOR

Continuing opposition to the employment of Negroes in certain industries appears to proceed from (1) the outdated notions of an economy of scarcity, inherited from an industrial age when participation in the productive enterprises was a highly competitive privilege; (2) the effects of enemy propaganda designed to immobilize a large number of potentially productive workers in the American war effort; (3) the age-old prejudices from an era when the economic system required a labor surplus which competed bitterly within its own ranks for the privilege of work; (4) the established custom of reserving technical processes to certain racial groups; and (5) craft monopolies which have restricted many technical skills to a few workers.

Our collective judgment regarding industrial opportunities for Negroes may be summarized as follows:

1. The only tenable basis of economic survival and development for Negroes is inclusion in unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled branches of work in the industries or occupations of the region to the extent that they are equally capable. Circumstances will vary so as to make impossible and impracticable any exact numerical balance, but the principles enunciated by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee are regarded by us as sound and economically essential.
2. There should be the same pay for the same work.
3. Negro workers should seek opportunities for collective bargaining and security through membership in labor organizations. Since there can be no security for white workers if Negroes are unorganized and vice versa, labor unions of white workers should seek the organization of Negro workers, on a fair and equal basis.
4. We deplore the practice of those labor unions which bar Negroes from membership, or otherwise discriminate against them, since such unions are working against the best interest of the labor movement. We hold that only those labor unions which admit Negroes to membership and participation on a fair and democratic basis should be eligible for the benefits of the National Labor Relations Board, Railway Labor Act, State Labor Relations Acts, and other protective labor legislation.
5. It is the duty of local, state, and federal agencies to insist upon and enforce provisions for the industrial training of Negroes equal in quality and kind with that of other citizens. We believe, further, that Negroes should have equal opportunity in training programs carried on by industries and by labor organizations.
6. We urge Negro representation on regional organizations concerned with the welfare of workers.
7. We regard the wage-and-job-freezing order of the War Manpower Commission as holding the seeds of a distinct disadvantage to Negroes and other marginal workers. Most of these workers are now employed in the lowest-income job brackets. The "freeze" order can remove the opportunity for economic advancement. There is as yet no assurance that under existing circumstances the War Manpower Commission can deal more equitably by the Negro in the future than it has in the past.
8. We are convinced that the South's economic and cultural development can be accelerated by increasing the purchasing power and skills of Negro workers.

SERVICE OCCUPATIONS

Any realistic estimate of the occupational situation of Negroes supports the view that Negroes will be employed in greatest proportions for a long time in service occupations. We see, however, possibilities of making of these fields scientifically guided areas in which training and organization will play a greater part in bringing about results mutually beneficial to employer and employee. We believe that greater service will be rendered and greater good will be engendered in the service fields if the following principles are observed:

1. More thorough training should be provided workers who plan to enter the service field, but the reward of the job and treatment on the job should be such as to make the workers feel that their training is justified. Opportunity should be given the service worker to advance through the opening up of additional opportunities.
2. A wholesome environment, living accommodations, food, uniforms, and rest rooms, all of an approved standard, should be provided service workers.

3. Opportunity should be given the service worker to live, after his stipulated hours of work, as an individual undisturbed in his private life by the whims and caprices of his employers.
4. In view of the strides made by labor in general, while the service worker's lot has remained about the same, service workers should be organized into unions with recognized affiliations.*
5. Service workers should be included in the provisions for old age insurance, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, the wage and hour act, and other benefits of Social Security legally provided to workers of other categories.

We believe that these provisions will help to insure some intelligent service and wholesome loyalty (which will improve both the quality of labor and personal relations) in service occupations.

EDUCATION

As equal opportunity for all citizens is the very foundation of the democratic faith, and of the Christian ethic which gave birth to the ideal of democratic living, it is imperative that every measure possible be taken to insure an equality of education to Negroes, and, indeed to all underprivileged peoples.

1. Basic to improvement in Negro education are better schools, which involve expenditures by States of considerably more funds for the Negro schools. This group believes that a minimum requirement now is (a) equalization of salaries of white and Negro teachers on the basis of equal preparation and experience; (b) an expanded school building program for Negro schools designed to overcome the present racial disparity in physical facilities, this program to begin as soon as building materials are available; (c) revision of the school program in terms of the social setting, vocational needs, and marginal cultural characteristics of the Negro children; and (d) the same length of school term for all children in local communities. Our growing knowledge of the effect of environment upon the intelligence and social adjustment of children, in fact leads us to believe that to insure equality of educational opportunity it is not enough to provide for the underprivileged child, of whatever race, the same opportunities provided for those on superior levels of familial, social, and economic life. We feel it a function of Government to assure equalization far beyond the mere expenditure of equivalent funds for salaries and the like.

2. The education of Negroes in the South has reached the point at which there is increased demand for graduate and professional training. This group believes that this training should be made available equally for white and Negro eligible students in terms defined by the United States Supreme Court in the decision on the case of Gaines versus the University of Missouri.

3. Where it is established that States cannot sustain the added cost of equalization, Federal funds should be made available to overcome the differentials between white and Negro facilities and between southern and national standards.

4. It is the belief of this group that the special problems of Negro education make demands for intelligent and sympathetic representation of these problems on school boards by qualified persons of the Negro race.

*In the present hysteria of many housewives who are losing poorly paid servants to better paying war industries, it seems desirable to emphasize that this proposal bears no relation to the fantastic and probably Axis inspired rumors of so-called "Eleanor Clubs."

5. The education of Negro youth can be measurably aided by the use of Negro enforcement officers of truancy and compulsory education laws.

AGRICULTURE

The South is the most rural section of the Nation, and Negroes, who constitute 33% of its population, are responsible for an important share of the agricultural production on southern farms.

We recognize that the South is economically handicapped and that many of its disabilities are deeply rooted in agricultural maladjustments. To win the war, there is need for increased production of food, fibre, and fats. In the present organization of agriculture, Negroes are a large part of the sharecropper and tenant group and a great majority of the rural Negro workers are in this class. Circumstances deny the Negro farmer sufficient opportunity to make his full contribution as a citizen. We suggest the following measures as means of increasing the production of the area, raising the status and spirits of Negro farmers, and of improving the region's contribution to the total war effort.

1. Establishment of sufficient safeguards in the system of tenancy to promote the development of land and home ownership and more security on the land, by:
   a. Written contracts
   b. Longer lease terms
   c. Higher farm wages for day laborers
   d. Balanced farm programs, including food and feed crops for present tenants and day laborers.
2. Adequate Federal assistance to Negro farmers should be provided on an equitable basis. The war effort can be materially aided if adequate provisions are made now for the interpretation of governmental policies to rural Negroes.
3. The equitable distribution of funds for teaching agriculture in the Negro land grant colleges to provide agricultural research and experimentation for Negro farmers.
4. The appointment of qualified Negroes to governmental planning and policy making bodies concerned with the common farmer, and the membership of Negro farmers in general farmers' organizations and economic cooperatives, to provide appropriate representation and to secure maximum benefits to our common wealth.

MILITARY SERVICE

We recognize and welcome the obligation of every citizen to share in the military defense of the nation and we seek, along with the privilege of offering our lives, the opportunity of other citizens of full participation in all branches of the military service, and of advancement in responsibility and rank according to ability.

Negro soldiers, in line of military duty and in training in the South, encounter particularly acute racial problems in transportation and in recreation and leave areas. They are frequently mistreated by the police. We regard these problems as unnecessary and destructive to morale.

SOCIAL WELFARE AND HEALTH

1. We believe that some of the more acute problems of Negro health, family and personal disorganization are a reflection of deficiencies in economic opportunity, but that social and health services for Negroes will continue to be necessary in considerable amounts even with improvement of their economic status. As a means of reducing the mortality and public contagion resulting from inadequacies of medical attention and health knowledge, this group believes that minimum health measures for Negroes would include the following:

a. Mandatory provisions that a proportion of the facilities in all public hospitals be available for Negro patients;

b. That Negro doctors be either included on the staff for services to Negro patients, according to their special qualifications, or permitted as practitioners the same privilege and courtesy as other practitioners in the public hospitals;

c. That Negro public health nurses and social workers be more extensively used in both public and private organizations.

2. We advocate the extension of slum clearance and erection of low-cost housing as a general as well as special group advantage. The Federal government has set an excellent precedent here with results that offer much promise for the future.

It is a wicked notion that the struggle of the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the Nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government.

The effect of the war has been to make the Negro, in a sense, the symbol and protagonist of every other minority in America and in the world at large. Local issues in the South, while admittedly holding many practical difficulties, must be met wisely and courageously if this Nation is to become a significant political entity in a new international world. The correction of these problems is not only a moral matter, but a practical necessity in winning the war and in winning the peace. Herein rests the chance to reveal our greatest weakness or our greatest strength.

The Atlanta Conference Statement:

Statement of Conference of White Southerners on Race Relations*

April 8, 1943

IN OCTOBER, 1942, a representative group of Southern Negro leaders met in Durham, N. C., and issued a statement in which they addressed themselves "to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations, within the democratic framework."

Their statement is so frank and courageous, or free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and at the same time shows such good will, that we gladly agree to cooperate.

We do not attempt to make here anything like a complete reply to the questions raised nor to offer solutions for all the vexing problems. We hope, however, to point the pathway for future cooperative efforts and to give assurance of our sincere good will and desire to cooperate in any sound program aimed at the improvement of race relations.

These Negro leaders rightly placed emphasis in their statement on discrimination in the administration of our laws on purely racial grounds. We are sensitive to this charge and admit that it is essentially just. From the Potomac to the Rio Grande there are some ten million Negroes. While all citizens are governed by the same laws, it is recognized that Negroes have little voice in the making and enforcement of the laws under which they must live. They are largely dependent upon the will of the majority group for the safety of life and property, education and health, and their general economic condition. This is a violation of the spirit of democracy. No Southerner can logically dispute the fact that the Negro, as an American citizen, is entitled to his civil rights and economic opportunities.

The race problem in any Southern community is complicated by our economic limitations. The factors which have kept the South a tributary section have also kept it poor and lacking in sufficient industry to develop and to provide enough jobs and enough public funds for every public need. Yet the only justification offered for those laws which have for their purpose the separation of the races is that they are intended to minister to the welfare and integrity of both races. There has been widespread and inexcusable discrimination in the administration of these laws. The white Southerner has an obligation to interest himself in the legitimate aspirations of the Negro. This means correcting the discrimination between the races in the allocation of school funds; in the number and quality of schools, and in the salaries of teachers. In public travel where the law demands a separation of the races, primary justice and a simple sense of fair play demand the facilities for safety, comfort, and health should be equal. The distribution of public utilities and public benefits, such as sewers, water, housing, street and sidewalk paving, playgrounds, public health, and hospital facilities should come to the Negro upon the basis of population and need.

It is recognized that there is often practical discrimination by some peace officers and in some courts in the treatment of Negro prisoners and in the abrogation of their civil rights. There is no such discrimination incorporated in the laws of any of the Southern states. False arrests, brutal beatings and other evils must be stopped.

In the economic field, unquestionably procedures should be undertaken to establish fully the right to receive equal pay for equal work. To do otherwise works a wrong to our entire economic life and to our self respect. With so large a proportion of our wage-earning population belonging to the minority race, if we cannot plan for a well-trained, well-employed, and prosperous Negro population, the economic future of the South is hopeless.

Most of the Negroes in the South are on farms and in rural communities. Failure to provide for them all the facilities for improving agricultural practices through schools, county agents, and supervision holds back all of the South. Fair wages, longer tenures of leases, and increased opportunities for farm ownership are also necessary.

All men who believe in justice, who love peace, and who believe in the meaning of this country are under the necessity of working together to draw off from the body of human society the poison of racial antagonism. This is one of the disruptive forces which unless checked will ultimately disturb and threaten the stability of the nation. Either to deny or to ignore the increased tension between the white and the colored races would be a gesture of insincerity.

That there are acute and intricate problems associated with two races living side by side in the South cannot be denied. But these problems can be solved and will ultimately disappear if they are brought out into an atmosphere of justice and good will. If we approach them with contempt in one group and with resentment in the other group, then we work on hopeless terms. The solution of these problems can be found only in men of both races who are known to be men of determined good will. The ultimate solution will be found in evolutionary methods and not in ill-founded revolutionary movements which promise immediate solutions.

We agree with the Durham Conference that it is "unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life." We agree also that "it is a wicked notion that the struggle by the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity, and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government."

It is futile to imagine or to assert that the problem will solve itself. The need is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation and a mutual respect.

The Richmond Statement:

Resolutions of the Collaboration Committee*

June 16, 1943

THIS IS A DAY OF GREAT DIFFERENCES, strong feelings, and epochal conflicts throughout the world. Yet the world's greatest need and hope is to find common ground for universal action and balanced harmony among all peoples. Manifestly, such a goal must be reached through cooperative approximation to the largest measure of agreement in line with the largest number of values and the largest number of people.

We face, therefore, the double crisis of standing firm for the conservation and preservation of human rights; yet to seek these ends by the way of peace and planning rather than by conflict and revolution.

In America, and particularly in the South, we face the problem of readjustments to meet the demands of present and post-war conditions with reference to the Negro and the future development of a great region of the Nation. This, exclusive of the war, is the great crisis of the South and Nation.

This is the problem of two great peoples caught up in the midst of transition between the powerful heritage of the past and the mighty pull of the future. For here is the white South, a great people often doing little things and good people doing bad things. And here is the Negro South, caught as always between the upper and nether millstones of conflicting forces and also paying the price of extraordinary transition from level to level of cultural achievement, and needing plenty of understanding and cooperation. And here is the white South inexorably conditioned by cultural complexes, suffering terribly, too, and needing sympathy and help as few peoples have ever needed in the annals of man. And, even more important, the two, white South and black South, are part and parcel of the Nation, whose people need scarcely less than the two regional peoples the sense of time and wisdom.

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status and the welfare of the country as a whole.

This is a rare challenge to the leadership of the South: to the white leadership to find new ways of cooperation and to justify increased confidence of the Negro leadership in the white South; to the Negro leadership, to sense the difficulties involved and to meet increasing demands, without slowing down their essential efforts.

As evidence of the promise of this leadership, two recent Southern conferences on race relations, one at Durham, under the auspices of Negro leadership, and one in Atlanta, under the auspices of white leadership, have blazed new trails. As a follow-up of these and with the above problems and backgrounds in mind, we, a group of Southern whites and Negroes, representing both the Durham and Atlanta groups, meeting as a collaboration committee at Richmond, Virginia, June 16, 1943, and following the general trend of the Atlanta group, urge the general adoption of the Durham statement entitled "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South," which has had extraordinary nation-wide endorsement.

The framers of this covenant, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, have included adequate and searching analysis of the principal issues involved, duly interpreted in their proper perspective. The problems so featured include political and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, social welfare and health.

In the area of political and civil rights: the essential problems featured were those of franchise and the ballot, jury service, personal security, services in public carriers, the elimination of violence within and without the law, the elimination of lynching, and the employment of an increasingly larger number of Negroes in the public service.

In the area of work opportunities: the increased training for all skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled labor, and opportunity for employment; the readaptation of labor union policies both for the best interests of Negroes and labor unions; the problems of dual standards of pay; support of, but guarding against discrimination in, local, state, and federal procedures; special problems of service workers and standards of living.

In the area of education: equalized opportunities in all aspects but especially including institutions of higher learning, professional training, and equal salaries.

In the area of agriculture: adequate opportunity for the Negro farmer, including a sound system of tenancy, adequate state and federal assistance, increased opportunity for farm ownership, fair farm wages, and the wider employment of Negro farm and home agents.

In the area of military service: along with the obligation to serve, the opportunity for full participation and advancement in the war activities and a continuing better adjustment of unsatisfactory situations.

In the area of social welfare and health: adequate provisions for safe-guarding the public health, for training physicians and nurses, and for their employment. Also, the erection of low-cost housing and other facilities for improving community life.

We recognize now the importance of affirmative action, without which we shall fall far short of our hopes and possibilities. To this end, we direct that the continuing committee, as appointed by the two groups now consolidated in this larger collaboration committee, be charged with the responsibility for working out methods and practical means of approach. We urge especially that efforts be begun to prepare the post-war world for a wise and successful reception of our returning soldiers and to prepare both our soldiers and the people for attitudes and procedures adequate to carry the great load of post-war needs. In all these, we urge the public to a new sense of the meaning of these needs as they accord with our professed principles of Christianity and democracy.

The Origin of the Southern Regional Council:

Writing a 'New Charter of Southern Race Relations'

As recalled by GORDON B. HANCOCK

WHEN I RELEASED to the Associated Negro Press in 1941 an article titled "Interracial Hypertension," little did it appear that there was being set in motion a chain of events that was to eventuate in the Southern Regional Council.

The article was read by Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Texas and Atlanta, who became somewhat alarmed at the tenor of the article, for set forth therein were certain disturbing facts about the racial tensions that were everywhere apparent. The Old South was making sure that the Negro would not indulge hopes of liberation at the close of World War II, as at the close of World War I, when he was sadly disillusioned by an outbreak of anti-Negro feeling that fairly swept the South.

Mrs. Ames, who was an official of the old Commission on Interracial Cooperation, wrote that she would like to discuss the whole matter with me, and offered to come to Richmond for the conference. She arrived a few days later in Richmond, registered at a hotel, and met with me at the colored YWCA, where we spent the greater part of an afternoon discussing "Interracial Hypertension." Our discussion hinged about a belief that a statement by Negroes themselves about what they expected of the post-war South and nation would help clarify matters and afford a new basis of interracial cooperation. Mrs. Ames further assured me that if I could get a group of leading Negroes of the South into a conference to make a statement to the white South, she would get a group of whites to consider our proposals. We agreed, and with this agreement, she went home and I went about the task of getting together a group of Negro leaders of the South.

I went to Norfolk to talk over the general plan with the late Dr. P. B. Young, and he immediately saw its possibilities. We accordingly met with two or three others on the campus of Virginia Union University, where I was teaching at the time. We decided to organize a Virginia committee which would act as host to the proposed conference. We later met and formed this host committee with Dr. Young as chairman.

Then arose the question of where we would meet. Richmond, Durham, and Atlanta were proposed as meeting places for our proposed conference. We agreed to meet at Durham, on October 20, 1942. Then arose the more vexing question of who should be invited. Most of the committee were in favor of inviting some of the leaders from the North, but a few of us contended that this would doom our meeting and our general plan, for Southerners would dismiss our statement summarily with the observation that it was drafted by northern "agitators." These few of us contended that ours should be a statement of Negro Southerners to white Southerners, and in the end our view prevailed.

But our choice brought down upon our heads the "curse" of some of our northern brethren, who evidently doubted the ability and manhood of their southern brethren. The flood-gates of criticism and disparagement were loosed against our proposed Durham Conference. As elected director of the conference, the burden of the suspicions and calumnies and harsh criticisms were leveled at me in the assurance that if confidence in me could be destroyed the whole enterprise would come to naught. The opposition failed to destroy the conference, for of the 75 invited, 65 attended, and most of the others were heard from by letter or telegram of approbation.

So determined were some of the enemies, that spies were dispatched to Durham to report whatever might serve their purpose of destruction. Those who met at Durham that eventful day not only wrought mightily in making the Southern Regional Council possible; they saved the director from "utter destruction" at the hands of those bent on destroying the Durham Conference, and all because southern Negroes dared to stand upon their own feet and make their own statement to the white South.

The Virginia Committee had voted unanimously that the writer should make the opening statement at Durham. That statement could easily have thrown things out of joint and thrown our meeting to the wolves. On the morning of October 20, there was an atmosphere of tenseness and anxiety.

The hour struck and we were in the middle of the now famous Durham Conference. Happily the opening statement seemingly relieved the tension, and upon its conclusion everybody seemed to be in harmony and full accord. My closing words were: "The sponsors of this conference may not have fashioned the most well-wrought conference imaginable, but what they did was at a tremendous sacrifice; for none of them had time and means to give as the cause demanded, but they did the best they could. We have brought to you a conference that is absolutely unfettered and unintimidated. There are no secret commitments, no secret understanding, no dotted lines, no secret financial underwritings. May God help us on this historic occasion to acquit ourselves like men."

This left the conference in a "let's go" mood, and from then on things moved. Although we had hoped to complete the conference statement within the day, Dr. B. E. Mays was among the first to contend that our opportunity was so great that we ought to take our time and make a statement commensurate with the possibilities of the occasion. A committee headed by the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson was sent on to Atlanta for the final drafting and the Durham Statement as it finally appeared is the work of this committee.

When the Durham Statement appeared, it stirred the South. Mrs. Ames made good her promise to rally the white leadership of the South, for in a relatively short time, a meeting of whites was called in Atlanta. The Durham Statement was the basis of discussion, and it was agreed that the white South would go along with the Negro South in finding ways and means of constructive cooperation and in finding a common denominator of constructive action in the improvement of race relations.

The Durham Statement enumerated a minimum of what the Negro wanted and the white South had accepted this minimum as a basis of cooperation, and this was the beginning of the dawn of a new day in the South: for it quickened a new impulse in the Old South and stirred the inspiration of Negroes.

With the conferees of the Durham and Atlanta meetings in virtual agreement, it remained to have representatives of the two conferences meet in a common session, which was called at Richmond June 16, 1943. Again the writer was chosen as director and to make the opening statement. (This matter of being elected director without "visible" means of "directing" and of making opening statements where the chance of saying "wrong things" was such a possibility, was becoming a serious matter fraught with Herculean tasks and great anxieties.)

According to plans, the Collaboration Conference was duly convened. Besides the representatives of the Durham and Atlanta meetings, there was an audience made up of those who had become interested in the tone of the other meetings. In his opening statement the writer stressed the crisis that had arisen in the South's Negro leadership: that the time was at hand when that leadership would be strangled or strengthened. The statement was largely a plea for a racial cooperation that took into account the ever-expanding ambitions of the Negroes who were more and more forced to appeal to law with their just demands. The case of teachers' salaries was given as evidence. Why could not the interracialists gain equalization of salaries instead of its being a matter of litigation? The argument ran that if Negro leadership, through interracial cooperation could not produce results, it was of no effect and would be discredited by Negroes themselves. It was further pointed out that the-time-is-not-ripe-yet attitude of so many white interracialists was obsolete and had to go.

Upon the conclusion of the opening statement one white clergyman arose and cold-watered the opening statement, and there was general confusion. It was at this critical moment that Dr. Howard W. Odum entered the picture and showed himself to be a moral and intellectual giant.

Dr. Odum was quick to see the wisdom and justice of the Negro's contention, in seeking to save southern Negro leadership, about to be sacrificed upon the altar of reaction. He depicted with dramatic power and eloquence the pathetic plight of his beloved South, caught in the cross-currents of crucial circumstances that foisted upon a great people momentous decisions which it would be tragic to evade. He pointed out with touching pathos that the situation could eventuate in a great triumph if the whites and Negroes of the South faced up to it like men, but he was equally poignant as he suggested the price of evasion and indecision.

Almost as if by magic under the spell that Dr. Odum had cast upon the conference there was a transformation in the spirit of those present and the conference became dynamic with hope and courage. It is safe to say that without Dr. Odum's masterly presentation and his prestige, his statesmanship, and his willingness to move forward and upward, the day would have been lost and with it the great opportunity to bless the great cause of race relations, and most certainly there would not have been a Southern Regional Council, which the late Dr. Charles Johnson called "a new beginning on a higher level." The moral stature of Dr. Odum was silhouetted against this critical occasion, and his moral and intellectual dimensions stood out in bold relief.

In reflecting upon that eventful day Dr. Odum wrote me: "Early that morning we realized that the Negroes had their top-flight leaders present and that most of the southern white leaders had defaulted; and when your magnificent address on the crisis of Negro leadership had been rebuked by Dr. Jones as going 'too far' and he lectured them in somewhat the old southern way, it became clear that there was a crisis." Dr. Young, presiding officer of the meeting had this to say: "Dr. Odum saved the day and the Richmond meeting from being a failure."

Representatives of the Durham Conference and from the Atlanta Conference and the Collaboration Meeting were sent on to Atlanta where the Southern Regional Council was organized. The history of the achievement of the Council is a vindication of what those southern Negro leaders saw in dim outline in Durham, October 20, 1942.

Great causes sometimes are delicately poised upon some slender event. And so great movements are often poised upon the behavior of individuals committed to serving the present age, their calling to fulfill.

One such individual is Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, who first saw the possibility in a meeting of white and Negro leaders to write a new charter of race relations, for the old charter written in paternalism had become obsolete. Without a Jessie Daniel Ames, and her vision and promise of white cooperation, there would not have been a Durham Conference.

The late Dr. P. B. Young who presided at both the Durham and Richmond meetings proved himself a great leader and without his great influence and that of his great newspaper, the Journal and Guide, which was our spokesman in those days when the enemies of the movement were seeking our lives, we could not have carried on and the Durham Conference would never have come to pass. Modesty forbids my saying that without a Gordon B. Hancock as "director" to absorb the terrible punishment meted out by foes of the Durham Conference there would not have been a Durham Conference. The burdens of suspicions and derision and calumnies fell with greatest weight upon him.

In conclusion let it be said that it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that if all southern white leadership had gone along with the Council and its program, and if the many so-called liberals had been real liberals as a few have been, the South would have been spared the travail of the hour!

Dr. Hancock, a resident of Richmond, Va., is a Life Fellow of the Southern Regional Council.

The Origin of the Southern Regional Council:

An Answer When Negro Southerners Spoke

As recalled by JOSEPHINE WILKINS

IT WAS A WINTER EVENING in early 1943. Jessie Daniel Ames had asked me to have dinner with her and we were sitting at a small table just inside the Peachtree entrance of the Piedmont Hotel in Atlanta. There was an atmosphere about the dinner that led me to stop abruptly and say, "Ames, we aren't just having dinner together. There's something more—out with it."

She smiled, and began to talk of the conference of southern Negroes recently held in Durham, North Carolina. She spoke of the vicious attack made on its leaders prior to the conference by the northern Negro press, and said she had pledged that if they went ahead with the conference there would be a following meeting of white Southerners to consider the statement they planned to issue. She said she wanted me to help her with it as she was frequently out of the city but would ask for no commitment until I was familiar with the whole background, and she pulled from her briefcase a thick folder to be taken with me following the dinner.

Mrs. Ames was field secretary for the old Commission on Interracial Cooperation which had its headquarters in Atlanta. The nation was at war, and the Commission's director, Dr. Will Alexander, had entered government service in Washington, leaving Mrs. Ames more or less in charge. We had become close friends in the League of Women Voters where I had just completed several terms as state president and she as a member of its board.

When I reached home that evening I opened the folder. It contained a quantity of correspondence and press clippings, chronologically filed and stapled to the folder with a long metal brace. First was a letter from Mrs. Ames to that stately gentleman, Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, then Dean at Virginia Union University in Richmond. Mrs. Ames wrote of having long read his column syndicated by the Associated Negro Press and that she was particularly interested in a recent one in which he said that perhaps the time had come when the Negroes themselves should draw up a charter. (President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill had had their rendezvous at sea and drafted the Atlantic Charter with its declaration on interdependence and the four freedoms.) The letter asked Dr. Hancock to enlarge his idea in an article for Southern Frontier, issued monthly by the Commission. I read on and came across a letter acknowledging the article.

His suggestion had appealed to her at the time, she wrote, and now "I am impelled to make a suggestion to you which I want you to consider. But, first, I must explain both my position on and my concern in the racial situation: I want Negroes to get as much recognition as citizens—full fledged—as possible; I want them to hold as much of the gains made in this field as possible after the war. It is at this latter point that my concern arises. Unless southern white people agree that this gain must be preserved, I am afraid of the future for southern Negroes. . . . Now and for the duration is our opportunity to convince the white South that the obvious minima of citizenship must be accorded for enduring peace, as well as for successful war."

I read on, interested. "White and Negro leaders of the South should agree on ultimate goals, immediate objectives and strategy. When we have done this, we can work both jointly and separately in carrying out our purposes. We should include in our program in the economic field, industry, agriculture and domestic service; in the educational field, salaries, equipment, free and equal educational advantages on all levels; in the field of civil rights, unrestricted franchise, equality before the courts, petty and state; in the social field, health and hospitalization, parks, playgrounds and housing. . . .

"This is my suggestion. Could you and two or three other Negro leaders from the deep South invite into conference a dozen others not dependent upon the Federal Government for their living and discuss the problems as you see them and come to some general agreement on what you want white people to do to help. Then later invite a small number of southern white persons, men and women, to join with you in working out the strategy to be followed.

"You may think that we ought or would want to sit in at the first conference. If you do, I would say that in my judgment we should not. . . . Any other procedure would in my opinion leave the whole plan open to attack by members of your race on the grounds that "Bourbon" white people of the South were already planning to re-enslave Negroes. An additional advantage would accrue by excluding white people until you had worked out your program: the white South would know what southern Negroes want and what they would expect to get in cooperation with the white South. . . ."

She ended her letter with, "I think there is value in this idea. It is unimportant whether or not you accept the plan as it is outlined here. But it is important that something be planned and begun now. The initiative should be taken by southern Negroes. I can promise you cooperation from southern white people."

I laid down the folder, my thoughts caught up in events following World War I, the revival of the Klan, the disillusionment of the Negro; and now he was again in the uniform of his country and already there were rumblings of similar after-war reaction. I read on, absorbed, well into the morning.

Carbons of letters followed one after the other: Dr. Hancock's conference with P. B. Young, of the Norfolk Journal & Guide, regarding the suggestion made by Mrs. Ames; copy of a letter sent by Dr. Hancock to a number of leading Negroes of the South polling their reaction to "a suggestion made by an interested white southerner" and quoting at length from Mrs. Ames' letter; his account of their enthusiastic response; meetings of Virginia Negroes and their invitation to some three score Negro Southerners to meet in Durham to formulate a charter for Negro citizens of the South; again their enthusiastic response.

Next followed numerous clippings from the northern Negro press, vicious attacks made on this move by Negro Southerners, and heaped in particular on the head of Dr. Hancock whom they sarcastically called "the gloomy Dean." One could not read these accounts without paying high and lasting tribute to this man and to all those who in the face of such criticism went ahead and brought forth that historic Durham Statement. No longer could the white South claim that it could speak for what the Negro Southerner wanted; he for the first time had spoken for himself.

The job at hand was response from the white South. A carefully chosen list of Atlanta men was prepared and on request of Bishop Arthur J. Moore, of the Methodist Church, they met for dinner in one of the small conference rooms on the second floor of the Piedmont Hotel; and this was followed by two other such meetings. The first one I shall never forget, the tension at one point as each man sat obviously fearful he might be singled out to head the southwide meeting of white Southerners which was under consideration. But when the decision to undertake it ultimately came, there was agreement that its call should carry the signature of each of the group. Bishop Moore consented to have the replies come to him at his home address.

There were 13 men, their signatures to the call placed alphabetically: C. H. Gillman (Regional Director, CIO); George L. Googe (Regional Director, AFL); M. Ashby Jones (Minister); Ryland Knight (Minister, 2nd Ponce de Leon Baptist Church); David Marx (Rabbi, The Temple); Arthur J. Moore (Bishop, the Methodist Church); Ralph McGill (Editor, Atlanta Constitution); Stuart R. Oglesby (Minister, Central Presbyterian Church); Gerald P. O'Hara (Bishop, Catholic Church); Dean S. Paden (President, King Hardware Co.); J. McDowell Richards (President, Columbia Theological Seminary); John Moore Walker (Bishop, Protestant Episcopal Church); and Goodrich C. White (President, Emory University).

Then came the attacks, this time by letter and more subtle and less personal than those made on the Negro meeting: "meddlers and carpetbaggers from the North who are stirring up this trouble" . . . "not the approach to the Negro question" . . . "bound to do more harm than good" . . . "approve of what you are trying to do but disagree strongly with the way you are going about it" . . . "there is no disposition on the part of the businessmen of this state" . . . "postpone until the war is over" . . . "the thousands of white boys in the armed forces would not appreciate any effort by any group," etc, etc.

The meeting was held in Atlanta on April 8, again at the Piedmont Hotel, on the mezzanine where the cocktail lounge is now located. Invitations had gone to a carefully prepared list of approximately 300 white Southerners, equally balanced between representatives of religion, business, education, etc. One hundred fifteen from ten states attended and wide response from others expressed interest and a desire to cooperate.

A draft of a statement responding to the Durham Statement had been prepared in advance and was offered at the morning session. During the discussion a small group of businessmen at the far end of the room fought first to keep any statement from being issued, then to get it postponed. Finally a committee was appointed to meet during lunch and bring in a recommendation on the matter. We met in a small room adjoining the main one. And the high point of the day came there, when Bishop Moore rose, with the weight of his body and prestige, and looking directly at a man across the table, in substance said: "Mr. Smith, businessmen in equal number with others were invited to this meeting. They had the opportunity to attend. They chose not to come. The meeting is in process. I for one am unwilling to wait longer on the businessmen. And I say to you, Mr. Smith, the businessmen may be missing the boat!" That settled the matter. The statement was approved that afternoon, signed by practically all, and given to the press. Other names added by wire and mail brought the total number of signers to 292.

The Atlanta meeting of white Southerners had authorized the appointment of a Collaboration Committee to meet with a similar committee of Negroes from the Durham meeting, and Ralph McGill, who had chaired the Atlanta meeting, was asked to appoint it. These two committees met together in Richmond at St. Paul's Church on June 16. P. B. Young, from the Durham group, presided.

The opening address was made by Dr. Hancock who pointed out dramatically the importance of the day and made a ringing appeal to the white South for a more advanced policy toward the Negroes of the South. Unfortunately, Dr. Hancock was followed by an elderly white minister who in the paternalistic manner of the old South cautioned slowness, just what the Negroes feared, and a pall fell over them. But the caution served to rally the whites and Dr. Howard W. Odum, of the University of North Carolina, rose and coming to his full height reversed the tone of the meeting.

Discussion continued throughout the day. The conference ended with a Richmond Statement and with a bi-racial Continuation Committee created and charged with the responsibility of determining ways and means for the white and Negro South to work together toward implementing the Durham Statement. Still there was a certain anxiety among the Negroes, as expressed by Dr. Hancock a few days later when he wrote, "I still wonder if we are going to be left with a conference in our laps. I hope not and I pray not but if our white friends are going to be overcautious we are not going to accomplish much."

The success of these three meetings now drew to the movement the full support of Dr. Will Alexander, director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, who was still with the war effort in Washington, and Dr. Odum, then president of the Commission. They, together with Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk

University, who headed the editorial committee for the Durham Statement, threw their wide influence behind the movement. These three had a long record of joint work in the South and were frequently referred to in warm admiration, and sometimes otherwise, as "The Trinity."

Interest was revived by them in an idea that had lain dormant for a number of years, and I found myself meanwhile recalling a sequence of events: a letter written by Dr. Odum back in the spring of 1938 in which he referred to the possible formation of a "southern regional council with representatives from each of the southern states;" an evening with him around that time when he unfolded a large sheet of paper headed "Southern Regional Council" and showed me a diagram of the South's major problems; and his near-bitterness on feeling blocked in furthering the idea when the president of his university became head of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare formed unexpectedly that fall. It was this idea that was now brought forward again and developed.

Thus when the Continuation Committee appointed at Richmond met at Atlanta University on August 4, Dr. Odum was elected chairman of the meeting, and a proposal was brought in to set up a southwide council with broad scope. Following a day-long discussion, the proposal was approved and a resolution establishing the organization now known as the Southern Regional Council was adopted. The Continuation Committee was made its nucleus.

A charter was applied for by Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University, Dr. Charles Johnson, Ralph McGill, Bishop Moore, and Dr. Odum. The charter was granted on January 6, 1944. A charter meeting was held at Atlanta University on February 16-17, and just prior to its opening the Commission on Interracial Cooperation met and merged the Commission with the newly formed Council. All those who had participated in the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond meetings, together with members of the old Commission, were made charter members. Bishop Moore was elected president and when he could not serve, Dr. Odum was elected. A board and an executive committee were chosen, and Dr. Guy B. Johnson and Dr. Ira DeA. Reid were made staff directors. The Southern Regional Council was launched!

"Great causes," as Dr. Hancock has aptly said, "sometimes are delicately poised upon some slender event." Nineteen hundred sixty-four marks the 20th anniversary of the Southern Regional Council. When its quarter-century arrives a few years from now, how better could we observe the occasion than by having a fully documented history of the Council's origin and the time out of which it came, prepared and ready for publication. In Tryon, North Carolina, in Mrs. Ames' library, are a dozen or more folders—their contents carefully classified and chronologically filed—that record this eventful period. It was truly a meaningful one for the South.

The South of the Future

December 12, 1951

EIGHT YEARS AGO, the Southern Regional Council was born out of the conscience and high resolve of a democratic nation at war. Today, in another period of international tension, we are faced with a renewed challenge to provide leadership and direction in a troubled region. It is essential that we assess clearly and wisely the role that the Southern Regional Council is to perform in this critical time.

We do not believe in the exclusive validity of any single approach or any single organization. There is not only room, but a desperate need for a wide variety of programs concerned with broadening democracy through legal, economic, legislative, religious, and educational means. Moreover, such programs are needed on all levels —national, regional, state, and local. Every group, like every individual, should chart its course with due regard for the special contribution it is fitted to make.

The role appropriate to the Southern Regional Council is evident in its origin and make-up. The Council's main asset is and has always been the people of the South who understand and want the full practice of democracy, and who at the same time know intimately the old evils that burden the South, and their causes. From such people is the Council's membership drawn. They have wanted a regional organization, not out of any provincial desire to separate the South's problems from the nation's, but out of the conviction that such an organization has unique advantages. It can express the best and often neglected elements of Southern thought and conscience; it can serve as a convincing demonstration of Southerners working together as fellow citizens without regard to race; and it can tap local resources and initiative often inaccessible to agencies outside the region.

The Council seeks to be a practical organization, emphasizing working solutions rather than spectacular pronouncements. Indeed, that philosophy is basic to an organization which hopes to open closed minds and substitute reason for prejudice.

The Council, by its very nature, is not a "mass pressure" organization. The number of persons in the South who are able and willing to reject the taboos on interracial effort in their own communities is growing, but it has not yet reached mass proportions. Meanwhile, the Council's membership can function effectively as enlightened citizens acting through the civic life of their communities in behalf of our common principles. Their methods are the established ones of conference, factfinding, and persuasion.

The Council takes no part in political activity. However, it can and does consult with public agencies and officials and makes its influence felt for truly representative government.

The council's functions may be briefly summed up as follows:

To serve as a meeting ground for citizens of all races, occupations, and religious persuasions.

To present the facts about the region, and their implications, through newspapers, radio, magazines, pamphlets, and other public media.

To counteract appeals to prejudice and violence by demagogues, professional bigots, and hate organizations.

To provide a program adaptable to local need in both the relatively backward and the relatively advanced areas of the South.

To translate appropriate research findings from universities and other centers to the practical situations with which the action program will be concerned.

To give special emphasis to the devlopment of leadership among promising young Southerners of all races.

To convene, by interest group, key persons in the various fields of Southern life, so that steps to genuine integration may be representatively agreed upon.

To stimulate local initiative to work for local solutions in full democracy, so that legislation and judicial rulings may be translated into justice for the individual in his everyday life.

The basic machinery necessary to enable the Council to work effectively at these tasks is: (1) trained, competent, professional persons of both races working in each Southern state as agents of improvement in public life; and (2) staff in a central office of the Council to direct and service the field people.

The declared purpose of the Southern Regional Council is "to attain through research and action the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region." This objective has lost none of its timeliness since it was first adopted. Although the past eight years have brought notable progress in the South, the job remaining is a vast one, and the pressures of national and international events demand an even speedier advance. Many of our institutions continue to make unfair and unwarranted distinctions between citizens solely on the basis of race. Outmoded traditions, unjustified fears, and ancient prejudices continue to exact a heavy toll on the unity, productiveness, and integrity of our society.

It is the ultimate hope and aim of the Council that it may help in bringing solution to regional problems that transcend the question of race — problems economic, social, ethical, which affect impartially people of all races. But, for the present, the unique liability under which the South labors arises out of an unreasoning racial disharmony. The first task of informed and conscientious Southerners is to strive to create here the atmosphere in which artificial distinctions and discriminations based upon race will no longer persist. Only when that goal has been attained will the energies of enlightened men be fully released for the great task of realizing all our potential resources, natural and human.

The south of the future, toward which our efforts are directed, is a South freed of stultifying inheritances from the past. It is a South where the measure of a man will be his ability, not his race; where a common citizenship will work in democratic understanding for the common good; where all who labor will be rewarded in proportion to their skill and achievement; where all can feel confident of personal safety and equality before the law; where there will exist no double standard in housing, health, education, or other public services; where segregation will be recognized as a cruel and needless penalty on the human spirit, and will no longer be imposed; where, above all, every individual will enjoy a full share of dignity and self-respect, in recognition of his creation in the image of God.

Equal opportunity, truly defined, includes all this and more. We have no illusion that it can be realized in the South quickly or easily or perfectly. Nor do we imagine that the Southern Regional Council can play more than a modest but creditable part toward its achievement. Yet it is the ideal toward which we strive and, short of which, we have a duty to remain dissatisfied. For it is nothing less than the American ideal.

A Statement of Views

By the Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council

December 30, 1963

I. Three Centuries of Moral Crisis

THE SOUTH'S HISTORY for centuries has been interwined with the travail of racial unrest and injustice. This injustice has been condoned and shared by the other sections of the United States and, indeed, has been part of the common practice of the European-American world. There is nowhere we can turn that the infection of racial prejudice and discrimination has not spread.

These are days of turmoil, but also of hope. Negro Southerners, and Negro Americans generally, in their long struggle against injustice have steadfastly rejected the self-defeating temptations of those who proclaim that Negroes should segregate themselves from whites behind their own wall of hatred; of those who have advocated organized violent reprisal against white men; and of those who by insidious teaching and tactics have urged Negro Americans to join the ranks of the world-wide Communist conspiracy against constitutional democracy. They have, on the contrary, held to their faith in American institutions and to the inextinguishable instinct of men to deal fairly and honorably with each other.

White Southerners have a much inferior record of loyalty to the principles of America and of the Judeo-Christian religion. They have been subverted in great numbers by bodies such as the Ku Klux Klan and the white Citizens Councils, which are a corruption of all that American ideals proclaim. Even worse, they have in yet larger numbers surrendered to those social and economic desires and conveniences which blunt the moral sensitivity of men and women toward their neighbors.

Today, however, white Southerners are manifesting a new and a quickened understanding of the political and economic dependence of the South's peoples on one another, and, above all, of their moral interdependence. Generations of white and Negro people have equally and together built this region, imparted to it what virtues and strengths it has, and made the South's positive contributions to the nation and to all mankind.

Out of affection for the South, and out of a belief in the sanctity of every individual as a child beloved of God, we suggest the following thoughts to the public in this year 1963, the centennial of several great events of American history and a year also of unprecedented anxiety and disorder and tragedy.

II. The Two Leading Issues

The Southern Regional Council has always been committed to the achievement of the goal of justice for all, and the consequent elimination of discrimination and inequities through education, understanding, and cooperation at the local level and within each community and state. We believe that this is still the primary and most effective way. Surely, however, all must recognize that where there is a breakdown in this primary approach, resort will inevitably be had to legislation and demonstrations.

In the past, and most especially during the last 80 years or so, the South has deliberately created laws and public policies to keep its two races apart and to discriminate against its Negro citizens. At the same time, southern political leaders contended that law can never be used to bring the two races together or to suppress discrimination. They had thus effectively removed from Negro Southerners every power and privilege of protest, except the privilege of leaving family and neighbors by moving to the North or West.

That we have progressed far in the years since World War II is evidenced by the fact that the present two issues of greatest urgency to our domestic strength and tranquility are the uses of law and public policy to undo the wrongs of the past, and the right and propriety of protest demonstrations to speed this process.

III. Law is the Servant of Justice

As to the first issue, and while recommending that voluntary solutions to cure racial inequities should always be sought diligently by both white and Negro leaders, we think there is a clear necessity for legislative and executive actions by the local, state, and federal governments. We are not, in the South or in the country as a whole, starting from scratch; we have an enormous housecleaning and rebuilding job, and governmental power should be employed for this public service.

Under our system of federalism, most of the issues of civil rights and race relations could be settled by action of local and state governments. Only their failure to do so has caused the federal government to intervene and continues to make strong federal action necessary, because the condition of our Constitutional rights and of our race relations is a national burden and disgrace. In this connection, we take great encouragement from those federal court decisions and those state enactments which are ending to some extent the vicious and undemocratic apportionment of seats in our legislatures and in Congress; there is good reason to hope that, as urban centers of the South are accorded their fair representation, and government thereby becomes responsive to majority opinion and needs, a new and more responsible politics will grow up in the South.

The increase of federal concern and activity in recent years has done much good. America is a better land because of the brilliant thrust of President John Fitzgerald Kennedy's moral and political leading and because of President Johnson's resolve to "move forward to eliminate from this nation every trace of discrimination and oppression."

We need to recognize fully and clearly the two just demands of what is called the 'Negro revolt.' One is that there be an end now to all forms of institutionalized segregation and discrimination; on this there can be no viable compromise. The other is that affirmative measures be adopted to integrate Negroes and other minorities into free participation in the nation's public life and economy.

The federal government does not serve the public well when the help it offers, through either legislative or executive actions, is minimal; when it treats symptoms and not the problems; when it merely palliates disorders, leaving them to fester and to nag at the nerves of the people; or when it allows its money to be spent in ways that perpetuate or strengthen discrimination against the welfare or dignity of any class of citizens.

Again we indicate our belief that vital problems of race relations could be well settled by state and local communities. We commend those southern cities which in recent months have established effective bi-racial commissions and committees. We believe that the essence of good human relations lies in the search, within each community, for laws and practices mutually satisfying to all its residents. We believe that the South, and each community of it, and the nation to which they all belong, must take an interest in the welfare and the development of each individual, and that only as it does so will it itself prosper.

None of the issues of civil rights is likely to be solved fully while there exists, throughout the population, the present wide differentials of educational opportunities, nor while unemployment is as large and menacing as it is and has been. We are gratified by the industrious, even imaginative, endeavors now underway or being discussed in several southern states to lift educational levels. But federal leadership in these intricately related fields of education and employment is a continuing necessity. The current rate of unemployment is not only an economic drag but frustrates even sincere governmental and private efforts to overcome racial discrimination. Job scarcity has become an omnipresent motive for demonstrations, and may predictably engender more and bitter protest.

We believe that the South, difficult as are its present problems and unhappy as its history has been, can, nevertheless, make a new social life that is richly humane, because it will have grown out of the honestly faced and concrete necessities of a common life. As today's immediate challenge is civil rights, so tomorrow's will be full integration. We are optimistic that a new South, born of struggle, will, with courage and intelligence, reshape its economic and educational practices as needed to integrate all its people into a society that serves the free and full development of each individual.

The means to this end is a thoroughly democratic, thoroughly responsible politics.

IV. An Historic Opportunity

There is no virtue per se in street demonstrations, but only the self-blinded fail to see the grandeur of the protest movement which since early 1960 has surged through the South.

Through this movement Negroes seek no rights or privileges for themselves alone. They seek only those belonging to all American citizens. A wise society would encourage and applaud this discontent with inferior status, especially as its end result is to make more secure the rights of all.

Demonstrations are a direct reaction to the failure or the laggardness of white leadership. The public leaders of the South have it in their power at any time to stop demonstrations by satisfying the demands of the federal Constitution, of justice and of religion.

We are little impressed by public opinion polls which reveal Negro bitterness or white prejudice. No informed and intelligent observer has ever doubted the existence of either. Bitterness and prejudice are now, as they have always been, the conditions against which the responsible institutions of American society — governments, churches, press, educational and professional institutions, business corporations — must contend and which they must rectify.

We commend those Negro and white citizens who, through lawful assembly, peaceful picketing, and other forms of orderly demonstrations have used the methods of democracy to advance human rights.

We commend their leaders, who have constantly taught that demonstrations must be non-violent, in spirit as well as in form.

We ask the nation's understanding of and compassion for those white Southerners who, because of the teaching and example of their civic leaders, perpetuate violence and spread malice. We would remind our fellow Southerners that, as the record clearly shows, the bombers, the killers, the haters never act except in areas where they are tolerated by official and community attitudes.

We come back, therefore, to the need for strengthening the leadership of the South. Because we believe profoundly in democracy, we think that democratization of southern public life is the pathway to strength. We believe that the greatest contribution which Negro Southerners can make today to the national welfare and to their own is to register and to vote responsibly, and, together with white citizens, to establish truly representative government in the South.

The qualities which are exhibited in the protest demonstrations are qualities that deserve other outlets. Patience, forbearance, faith in human decency, reliance upon intellectual and moral power — these are qualities needed in politics, in the schools and universities, in the churches, in business, in all of our society. May this nation have the wisdom to draw strength from them.

School Integration Low, Says Council

ATLANTA (AP) — Southern school systems generally have fallen down on compliance with the desegregation provisions of the Civil Rights Act, the Southern Regional Council declared Saturday.

The bi-racial group said a survey shows only 151,409 Negroes attending desegregated public school classes in 11 states in the South, 5.2 per cent of the South's Negro school census.

The council's report compares with 216,600 Negroes in desegregated schools reported earlier by the Office of Education. But the report said no agency—federal, state or local—seems to have accurate figures on desegregation.

Government Blamed

It blamed all levels of government for what it called failure to carry out the spirit of the school desegregation provisions.

The council noted that virtually all school systems in the South certified that they would operate without discrimination this year in order to receive federal school funds. But it called many of these claims false.

"Just as the claims in many instances are false, it is hard to assume other than that many of those signing the statements deliberately set out to fool those reviewing the desegregation plans," the report said.

A lack of exact information and the tendency of some school officials to exaggerate the amount of desegregation has given the nation a much more optimistic view of the South's progress than the facts warrant, the council said.

It said many Southern school authorities have been evasive and called for more stringent regulation by federal school authorities.

Pressures and intimidation against Negroes was cited as another major problem.

"The performance in the South falls far short of what the law calls for, or what most observers expected during the first year," the council said.

The reports estimate of the percentage of Negroes enrolled in desegregated schools in the South, ranged from 20 per cent in Texas to only 25 per cent in Alabama.

Other estimates included: Virginia 11.3, Tennessee 9.1, Florida 5.9, Arkansas 2.5, North Carolina 2.1, South Carolina 1.5, Georgia 1.3, Louisiana .68, and Mississippi .34.

The report said federal workers involved in the task were dedicated, but overworked people.

"It is hardly the fault of the office of education, for example, that little or no budget was provided for administration of Title VI funds, or that the few staffers who could be hired had to be brought on the payroll too late to do the job adequately.

"Perhaps the White House and Congress share some of the blame for this. . .

"The letter and spirit of the civil rights law encouraged voluntary compliance if at all possible.

Biracial Group Asks U.S. Act On Poverty Plan, Integration

By The Associated Press

The Southern Regional Council called Saturday for federal action improving poverty program administration and school integration in the South.

The council released the texts of two resolutions adopted at its 22nd annual meeting here Nov. 15-16.

A resolution directed to the Office of Economic Opportunity specifically asked federal rulings directed at antipoverty programs in Atlanta and Memphis.

"At issue in Atlanta," the biracial council said, "is the question of adequate representation of the poor on a community action planning board.

"At issue in Memphis is the question of whether representatives of the poor should be elected or appointed by city officials."

The council said the Economic Opportunity-Atlanta, Inc., board of directors rejected a proposal that one-third of its membership be from the ranks of the poor, but added four such representatives of the poor to a membership of at least 17.

COUNCIL Executive Director Paul Anthony said, "This raises precisely one of the questions with which our resolution is concerned — whether representation of the poor shall be substantial."

The council took two stands concerning the poverty programs:

"That the Office of Economic Opportunity implement its policy that the poor be represented in policy-making capacities on the local community action agency boards, and that it require this representation to be in substantial numbers.

And, "That the OEO require that representatives of the poor be democratically elected by their peers in the target areas in some feasible fashion rather than be appointed by local governing bodies."

THE COUNCIL said questions have been raised to whether various official reports on the extent of school desegregation in the South reflect the true picture.

"Certainly," the council said, "such reports have not adequately covered the private and extra-legal economic and social pressures exerted to limit the rate of integration."

The council called for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to "make renewed efforts to determine the facts about school desegregation in the South."

The council also said HEW should consider using "independent agencies, groups and individuals" in its probe.

The education resolution asked that programs be provided "of technical aid to teachers and others to prepare themselves for positive roles in the change to an integrated educational structure."

The Council Continues To Grow

(Special file) SRC

When Atty. Gen. Nicholas Katzenbach spoke here the other day, he saluted the Southern Regional Council for its "more than two decades of careful, courageous, and consistent devotion to the afflictions and the aspirations of the South.

"The increasing commitment of the nation toward both the humanity and the rightfulness of human rights is in no small part the result," the attorney general continued, of the council's activity.

The occasion of the attorney general's address was a luncheon at which the council launched its new foundation-supported Voter Education Project.

And earlier in February it was announced that the council would receive $300,000 from the Ford Foundation to help strengthen state and local human-relations councils in 11 Southern states.

So the council continues to grow and to move forward. And as it does so, the region also progresses and moves forward.

Regional Council To Help Eliminate Slums, Ghettos

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — A new project of the Southern Regional Council will offer professional help to city officials trying to eliminate slums and ghettos.

This organization works quietly to improve racial relations in the South. It is concerned with farming as well as voting; jobs as well as juries.

"We are not a typical civil rights organization," said Paul Anthony, executive director of the Atlanta-based council. He has a staff of 35 and a budget this year of more than $1 million. Policy is in the hands of the biracial council — 100 Southern men and women.

Projects range from information services on school integration procedures to a study of persons thrown out of work by automation.

The council's most dramatic work has been in voter registration.

From 1961 through 1963, SRC helped put about 700,000 Negroes on the voter lists in 11 Southern states. Now another project is under way, aimed at the more than two million adult Negroes still unregistered in the South. There are about 2.3 million Negro voters.

"In a nonpolitical way we want to develop effective use of the ballot," said Anthony, who contends registration alone is not enough.

"There is an obvious need to develop an educational program to show how the vote is tied up in the political process."

He cited as examples Atlanta and Memphis, Tenn., where large numbers of Negroes failed to vote in elections.

One approach to the SRC project will be college scholarships for part-time work. Leadership training and workshops will be held. SRC plans to provide the know-how and money

About $350,000 a year for the next three years will go into voter education and registration. Funds for SRC projects come mostly from foundations.

SRC, which avoids demonstrations, has organized state councils on human relations in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Arkansas, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina and Virginia. Last year the state councils had 12,000 members and spent about $300,000

SRC functions like an umbrella in some respects. Its voter project will be coordinated with five major civil rights organizations. It serves as secretariat of the Southern Interagency Conference, a quarterly meeting of more than 40 agencies and groups involved in civil rights and human relations.

Its projects include

—Collecion and distribution of 300,000 books, most of them for Negro college libraries, community centers and schools.

—Assistance in and analysis of federal programs for fair employment and antipoverty efforts.

—Research in improved desegregation of schools.

A group of Southern Negroes met Oct. 20, 1942, at Durham, N.C., and issued a statement calling for nondiscrimination in voting and juries; equal, if separate, schools, and steps to end lynchings and other brutalities.

Six months later 115 Southern white leaders met in Atlanta white leaders met in Atlanta and concurred generally in the statement by the Negro group. Committees from both groups met and SRC was created i, January, 1944.

Chartzr applicants included publisher Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution, Dr. Howard W. Odum of the University of North Carolina, Bishop Arthur J. Moore of the Methodist Church, Atlanta, and Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University.

Among the charter members was Dr. Horace Mann Bond, an Atlanta college professor and the father of Rep.-elect Julian Bond, barred from the Georgia House of Representatives this year.

The SRC president is John H. Wheeler of Durham, a Negro bank president. There are four vice presidents. Two are white, two Negro, including Clement. Anthony, who is white, has been on the SRC staff since 1956, and its diretor since last October.

From 1941 through 1963, SRC helped put about 700,000 Negroes on the voter lists in 11 southern states. Now another project is under the more than two million adult Negroes still unregistered in the South. There are about 2.3 million Negro voters.

"In a nonpolitical way we want to develop effective use of the ballot," said Anthony, who contends registration alone is not enough.

"There is an obvious need to develop an educational program to show how the vote is tied up in the political process."

He cited as examples Atlanta and Memphis, Tenn., where large numbers of Negroes failed to vote in elections.

Scholarship Approach

One approach to the SRC project will be college scholarships for part-time work. Leadership training and workshops will be held. SRC plans to provide the know-how and money.

About $350,000 a year for the next three years will go into voter education and registration. Funds for SRC projects come mostly from foundations.

SRC, which avoids demonstrations, has organized state councils on human relations in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Arkansas, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina and Virginia. Last year the state councils had 12,000 members and spent about $300,000.

SRC functions like an umbrella in some respects. Its voter project will be coordinated with five major civil rights organizations. It serves as secretariat of the Southern Interagency Conference, a quarterly meeting of more than 40 agencies and groups involved in civil rights and human relations.

Numerous Projects

Its projects include:

—Collection and distribution of 300,000 books, most of them for Negro college libraries, community centers and schools.

—Assistance in and analysis of federal programs for fair employment and antipoverty efforts.

—Research in improved desegregation of schools.

Began in 1942

A group of southern Negroes met Oct. 20, 1942, at Durham, N.C., and issued a statement calling for nondiscrimination in voting and juries; equal, if separate, schools, and steps to end lynchings and other brutalities.

Six months later 115 southern white leaders met in Atlanta and concurred generally in the statement by the Negro group. Committees from both groups met and SRC was created in January, 1944.

Charter applicants included publisher Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution, Dr. Howard W. Odum of the University of North Carolina, Bishop Arthur J. Moore of the Methodist Church, Atlanta, and Dr. Rufus Clement, president of Atlanta University.

Among the charter members was Dr. Horace Mann Bond, an Atlanta college professor and the father of Rep.-elect Julian Bond, barred from the Georgia House of Representatives this year.

The SRC president is John H. Wheeler of Durham, a Negro bank president. There are four vice presidents. Two are white, two Negro, including Clement. Anthony, who is white, has been on the SRC staff since 1956, and its director since last October.

Negro Vote Was Effective In South, Council Reports

The South's 2.7 million registered Negro voters were a major factor in elections last month in Dixie, but still only half of the Negroes of voting age in the South registered, the Southern Regional Council reports.

In an analysis of its Voter Education Project, SRC claimed that Negroes provided the winning margin for a U.S. senator, one or possibly two governors and at least two congressmen.

At the same time, SRC said that much work remains to equalize Negro voter registration with white registration. The council called for more federal examiners under the 1965 Voting Rights Act to help Negroes register.

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project, said that Negroes must close the registration gap on whites "if they are to have a fair share of the voice in Southern politics."

COMPARED TO the 2.7 million registered Negroes, the council noted, whites have 14.4 million.

Nevertheless, SRC credits Negroes with having substantial effects on key races throughout 11 Southern states.

Twenty Negroes were elected to state legislatures in the South, and Negroes were also elected to county-level posts—one as sheriff.

In Georgia, returns indicated that about half of the 300,000 registered Negroes went to the polls. SRC said their votes were split about evenly between Republican Howard (Bo) Callaway and write-in candidate Ellis Arnall.

A Negro was elected to the school board in Hancock, which was the first Georgia county to have federal poll watchers.

SRC'S ANALYSIS shows that Negroes clearly provided the winning margin for Winthrop Rockefeller's election as governor of Arkansas. An estimated 80,000 to 90,000 Negroes voted, nearly 90 per cent of them for Rockefeller and more than enough to provide him with his 45,000-vote margin. SRC estimated that two-thirds of Arkansas's registered Negroes voted.

Negroes in South Carolina "plainly provided the margin for a U.S. senator" and probably for incumbent Gov. Robert E. McNair, who turned back Republican Joseph O. Rogers Jr. by 72,000 votes, SRC reported.

The Negro turnout in South Carolina was estimated at 100,000, slightly more than half of the Negro registration of 191,000. SRC says the Negro vote was almost totally Democratic.

Mr. Blanton won by 2,700 votes as nine predominantly Negro precincts in Memphis gave him 7,824 votes to 353 for Republican Hurst.

Also in Tennessee, SRC noted that six Negroes were elected to the legislature—an increase of five.

IN ALABAMA, Negroes did not turn out as heavily as they did in the May primaries—possibly because both candidates for governor were segregationists, SRC said.

The May turnout was estimated at 74 per cent of the registered Negroes; the general election brought out less than half. The heaviest Negro vote went to incumbent Sen. John Sparkman, easy winner over Republican John Grenier.

Five Negroes were elected to county offices in Alabama, including Lucius Amerson as sheriff of Macon County. In Dallas County, scene of the Selma racial disturbances last year, Sheriff Jim Clark was defeated by Wilson Baker, racially a more moderate candidate.

'Play Within A Play—'

Atl Const 8-29-67

Dr. Martin Luther King and directors of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference quite unavoidably are confronted with what might be called a sociological schizoid condition — a confrontation with valid but contradictory objectives — a play within a play.

The South would seem to be the natural field for harvest. A thorough, well organized campaign of voter registration would attain long desired objectives in relatively little time. Indeed, voter registration, chiefly by SCLC and the Southern Regional Council, plus assistance from local and state groups, already has begun to pay off in healthy results.

Mississippi's recent Democratic primary, for example, saw 11 Negro candidates, of character and ability, win nominations. Some will be elected in the upcoming general election. In Georgia nine Negroes hold seats in the state legislature—more than are in like offices in any other state save Illinois and Michigan. A Negro sheriff is doing well in his first term in Alabama.

The Highlights

These are merely the highlights of a general story which includes election of Negroes to various public offices in the South, appointments in the private sector on various boards of education, hospitals, Chambers of Commerce, and so on.

One of the highlights of SCLC's recent 10th anniversary celebration in Atlanta was a report of the addition of $25 million in job income for Negroes in Atlanta across the past three years by "operation breadbasket" — a SCLC inspired campaign.

Whether more jobs can be attained in this manner than by demonstrations and massive non-violent "dislocations" in northern cities is the unresolved issue.

Dr. King and his staff are, along with others, dedicated to making every American citizen an equal in economic, political and educational opportunity, and in acceptance as a person and a citizen. A schizoid situation, however, exists in the civil rights movement that creates enormous difficulties.

The ambivalence lies in the fact that civil rights, per se, have largely been attained. With the exception of a slowly declining number of rural counties, the right to register and vote, to be a candidate for office, to file federal protests against job discrimination, to have equal educational opportunity and to use public accommodations is daily more strongly established.

Distressing Area

But there remains a great and distressing area of public life in which housing, jobs — chiefly these two — are being withheld. The fact that the slum landlord, ruthless in exploitation of the poor, has the protection of the free enterprise system is an unhealthy paradox in our local and national life.

SCLC's problem is enormously complicated by the Black Power "guerrilla - revolution" movement, which is extremely anti - middle - income-Negro, anti - white, and anti-Semitic. It works to incite the very poor. There are now almost 30 million Americans who are so poorly educated and so bankrupt of training and skills that they and their lives are, or should be, on our national conscience. (There are among these a smaller percentage of poor white persons in equal deprivation.)

We need not exactly imitate the old depression years' CCC, WPA and PWA, but we can create something like them to fit the context of today when there is not a general depression, but extreme poverty and affluence side by side.

The radicals find all this grist in their mill. But the radicals are not, and cannot be, the answer.

SCLC has a difficult decision ahead.

ON THE NATIONAL CRISIS

should be noted that only a minority of Negroes have succumbed to the destructive fury expressed in the roits. But the suffering and injustice which have stirred their fury are borne by many millions more, whites as well as Negroes

Particularly is this true in the South. However, we can take neither comfort nor any degree of self-satisfaction out of the fact that until this moment, most of the riots and the worst of them have occurred outside the South We can only aknowledge that historically the South has exported people of both races not properly prepared for life in a complex modern nation, and with them have developed new variants of the deprivation and racial antagonisms that have so long crippled the South. And we can only look about our own region and know that the same conditions which have exploded into riots exist in many places in the South. The starvation-level poverty in many parts of the rural South is a particularized problem of ours, more severe and punishing probably than any other poverty in the nation.

Progress in race relations and against poverty in the South has been great in recent years. But it has not been enough. While these states have made efforts toward compliance with federal civil rights laws, perhaps to a greater degree than the rest of the nation is aware of, there has been achieved in no area of desegregation the goals of national law and comment. In the basics of making a living, the South's per capita income has increased at a greater rate than that of the nation since 1950. But in terms of actual dollars, the gap between the South's per capita income and that of the rest of the nation has widened.

In these and other endeavors, the South has been gaining, but not enough.

In 1960, when white violence was the problem, a Southern Regional Council publication, 'Racial Violence and Law Enforcement," stated: Law enforcement is . . . an essential factor in the progress of race relations. In the continuing racial crises of the South, the police have two basic responsibilities: to enforce the laws with absolute impartiality; and secondly, to maintain a climate of public order in which constitutional liberties can be freely exercised, by white men or Negroes, by integrationists, or segregationists." These responsibilities remain.

There should be no confusion of rioting with either the tradition of non-violent Negro protest demonstrations or with the honorable philosophical principles of civil disobedience. Unlawful violence by a mob has none of the moral defense or force of these traditions, and such violence must be quelled, just as white mob violence against constitutional peaceful protest has to be. But in both instances, we must be alert to the dangers of excessive, unconstitutional use of police force; we must look with apprehension on any tendency to be satisfied merely with the momentary ending of the system of violence without following through with treatment of the social and economic malfunctionings that are the underlying causes of such violence.

We must note too another grave factor in our current crisis. There now are millions of Americans outside our economic system, neither contributing to it or benefiting from it. This must realistically be seen as a serious threat to that economic system.

The Southern Regional Council supports and urges national efforts to remedy problems of race and poverty. We support and urge similar efforts on the state and local level in the South, public and private. We need to continue present efforts and improvise creative new approaches to solve such regional problems as rural and urban poverty, educational deprivation, and race relations. The South has yet the opportunity to go beyond technical compliance with law to the functioning of a truly equal, harmonious society. And because it has come to basic changes in the nature of American society later than the rest of the nation, the South also has greater opportunity, yet, to avoid mistakes others have made. We, the South, can still avoid in most cities the development of ghettoes. We can utilize intelligent planning to make people rather than things the central factor in industrialization, urbanization of agriculture, and the utilization of natural resources and the South's as yet largely unspoiled beauty of landscape.

The Southern Regional Council believes that the good will between the races in the South has not deteriorated in these past years of tense, total change of the legal framework of relationships between the races. Indeed, we believe that relationships have been improved to the extent that Negro Southerners have gained in self-respect and status in society, and to the extent that they have come to equal footing in their day to day face to face encounters with white Southerners. We continue in the conviction that for the South and for the nation, the only realistic and moral goal in regard to race relations is the full integration of Negroes and other minority groups into the American society. We recognize and applaud efforts of such groups to develop legitimate methods of gaining objectives of self-interest, economically and politically. But we continue to oppose segregation and separation as antithetical to everything America stands for. It is our belief that Southerners, white and Negro, have moved and are resolved to continue to move toward the kind of society, one of equal opportunity and human dignity, made possible by the Constitution of the United States.

It is toward this high goal rather than to the absence of riots that we must look.

Fully aware of the need for fact and sympathy in doing so, we are compelled as Southerners, out of a knowledge of our own region's tragic history of racial antagonism, to speak to the nation, urging that it act against the causes of the riots and not merely with repressive force to end them. Call

We believe that the South has a unique and powerful contribution to make to the solution of the agonizing problems of this nation. Therefore, we are calling upon Southerners, both white and black, to meet in order to take advantage of an exciting possibility: that the old Confederacy can show the rest of the nation the way to a society of true equality. We believe that the South has been denied this opportunity in the past because of the relationship between the races.

Race hatred was made the basis of many public institutions and precisely for this reason, the South has confronted the issue in its starkest form. In the North, prejudice was much more sophisticated. It employed hidden, complex mechanisms, like the job and housing markets. And its discreet ways of exploiting and brutalizing Negroes allowed - and still allows - many whites to evade the basic moral question.

In the Fifties and Sixties, the courage and non-violent dedication of Southerners, black and white, destroyed the formal, institutional system of segregation. Because of this process and other recent experiences, the South understands, as no other section of the country does, that it must make a fundamental, ethical choice.

Throughout the South there are also millions whose consciences have been sorely tried and changed and who are now prepared to join in building a new South based on the worth of men and women as individuals. We propose to appeal to the conscience of these men and women on behalf of a united South prepared to eliminate poverty and establish justice for all.

Historically, the South has paid the price of economic backwardness in return for the North's agreement to bring reconstruction to an end and permit the system of segregation. The "triumph" of white supremacy turned the area into a semi-colonial dependency of the advanced industry in the rest of the country. As a result, the impoverishment of the overwhelming majority, both white and black, was guaranteed.

But here again there is a positive aspect to a tragic legacy. Because the South is even now still arriving at the stage of modern technology, it need not repeat the errors which were committed in the North.

By jamming Negroes (many of them displaced persons who had been driven from the southern fields) into teeming, rat-infested ghettos, providing them with inferior schools which did not prepare many of them for the economy and society in which they were to live, and by thus imposing the economic and social conditions of the affluence, the North laid the basis for the racial violence and hatred which now racks its great cities.

We believe that many Southerners - including some who are not initially moved by conscience but seek only their self-interest - do not want to repeat these tragic patterns. Out of morality and out of practicality, we have profound reasons to seek a new relationship between the races as a fundamental first step toward a new and progressive South. Having done this, the vision of democracy we hold for the South can be realized.

If the South is to build a modern economy and be restored to its rightful place in the nation socially and politically, it cannot fool itself, as the North does. Economic and social justice are essential for all if peace and progress are to prevail. No other approach can avoid the same explosive injustice that rends the North.

Therefore, we summon Southerners, both black and white, to the duty, the opportunity and the challenge to participate in a common effort, laying aside past racial atagonisms, to construct a just social order for all people.

Magazine Cites Poverty Figures

One-fourth of the white people and two-thirds of the Negroes in the South live below poverty levels.

So says the current issue of New South, quarterly magazine of the Southern Regional Council. The figures reportedly come from government agencies.

Page after page of the issue details living conditions of whites and Negroes in Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Kentucky and Florida.

The Bureau of Census reported in 1960 that about 70 per cent of rural Negro homes and 27 per cent of white were deteriorating and dilapidated.

SOME 75 PER CENT of Negroes on farms and 69 per cent of Negroes off farms were poverty stricken in 1964, the report indicates.

The same figures showed 26 per cent of the white people living on farms and 19 per cent off farms were living in poverty.

What's the remedy for the poverty-stricken? What does the future hold for them?

"Southern officialdom generally treats victims of poverty as if they had committed some crime, losing their civil and human rights in the process. This permits disengagement from the poor by officialdom or at best grudging doles," the report states.

The South struggling to get into the American economic mainstream needs help, the Southern Regional Council publication asserts. And that help is there.

"The federal government annually offers millions in welfare monies that are not accepted," the author says. "Is it because the money is tainted, coming from the reviled seat of central authority?"

The author concludes this is not the case.

THE ANSWER is priorities. Highway funds from the federal government are snatched up before the ink has dried on the appropriation bill.

"But in 1967, 13 Southern and border states forfeited more than a quarter of a billion federal welfare dollars because they would not put up supplemental funds to raise their per capita welfare payments to the national average of $31.61 per month," the author states.

For 150 pages the magazine relates poverty cases. Then in summation, there is a checklist of 11 states which lists events, developments and trends in civil rights, justice, politics, employment and other aspects of Southern change.

The poverty story was written by Paul Good and illustrated with photographs by Al Clayton, a Nashville photographer.

Mr. Good is a former television newsman who has covered civil rights and race-related news around the South for many years. He is a frequent contributor to the Nation and now makes his home in Connecticut.

'NEEDY TIME'

Rural Poor Viewed in SRC Study

Atl Const 4/18/65 (S/sc.)

By ACHSAH NESMITH

"The needy time is now," a Southern Regional Council study of poverty in the rural South, includes a chapter on a family in Lee County, Georgia, in its recently issued quarterly publication.

The 150-page study by Paul Good discusses such problems of the poor as discrimination in federal farm programs, efforts to stop Alabama Negro farmers from forming a co-op and an 18-year-old Georgia mother's efforts to care for her malformed baby while paying off $1,500 in hospital bills on her $23 a week salary.

In Baker County, Georgia, where four huge plantations comprise one-half the land area and more than half the county's inhabitants receive free commodities under food programs, Good notes that officials in Moultrie turned down a day-care center after Baker residents voted to do without their Head Start program when told they could not have both.

The study also deals with a white family in Bainbridge, where the mother "states as an unalterable fact that there is no way her children can go to high school; she knows that there isn't any way the spare financial figures of the family can ever fatten."

(Currently, benefits are figured on approximately 80 per cent of what the Welfare department considers the individual or family need, up to the maximums allowable.

State director William H. Burson pointed out that this does not include many optional programs Georgia does not participate in, noting that his department lost $12 million in federal funds in the process of cuts from his requests made by the governor and the legislature.)

The SRC study is highly critical of federal farm programs for their discriminatory practices in allowing Negro tenants to be dispossessed of land they have farmed for generations, and for failure to provide equal training, loans and other opportunities for Negro farm dwellers. Nearly three-fourths of Negro farm dwellers are below the poverty level, compared with one-fourth of white farm dwellers.

Good suggests a federal training and public works program to increase skills of farm dwellers. At the same time, he said, the federal government should provide better housing and needed plumbing, water and other facilities, and better programs to help tenants and other poverty-stricken rural dwellers get enough land and sufficient training in modern farming methods to make a living.

Whence The Disorder

THE IRONY of the age is that the man who is running for the presidency primarily to defy the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision now has been upheld by that court in his own legal battle.

Yes, said the Supreme Court Tuesday, George Wallace's name must be allowed on the ballot of Ohio, otherwise damage is done to the 14th Amendment's equal protection clause.

"That's a right decision," crowed Wallace in Los Angeles that night. And then he made a promise that as President he would reverse the "liberal" decisions of the court.

THE SAME 14th Amendment was applied by the Supreme Court in 1954 to the question of whether the states had a right to bar Negro children from attending superior white schools; whether these children were being denied their equal protection that amendment guaranteed.

The states had no such right, said the court.

In the South, politicians roared and set about to defy the law of the land. Eventually, George Wallace was inaugurated as Governor of Alabama with a promise of "segregation forever!" The lawlessness began — lawlessness that he now rides as the one issue he hopes will propel him into the White House.

BUT HOW, you may ask, is today's lawlessness associated with that 1954 court decision?

On the same day that the court's pro-Wallace decision was announced, the Southern Regional Council issued its annual report on the aftermath of that decision, entitled: "Lawlessness and Disorder: Fourteen Years of Failure in Southern School Desegregation." Throughout those years, the officialdom of the South consistently had manipulated administration of schools to avoid complying with the law, even as lower federal courts in the area consistently commanded them to stop stalling.

"The clock has ticked the last tick for tokenism and delay in the name of deliberate speed," said Judge Wisdom of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals to Jefferson County, Alabama in 1967.

Yet today, some 88 percent of the South's 2.6 million school children still are attending totally segregated schools.

THE SRC REPORT said that preguideline experience saw little real violence in their resistance — it was to come later in a wave of terror in rural areas "unmatched since post-Reconstruction whites rode around in bedsheets."

"There was Mansfield and Clinton, and Little Rock and New Orleans," said the report of the earlier period, "where screaming mother mobs appeared on television as the first wave of mass media theater of the absurd. But the violence was done mostly to psyches of the few Negro children."

With all due respect for the learned men of SRC, we submit that this analysis is not entirely correct.

True the children involved in the early experience with desegregation were hurt — suffering fright, loneliness and the scars of being violently scorned.

But what of their peers in the cities and elsewhere around the country who were watching them go through their agony? What effect on them was the mob display of defiance of the law? Whence came today's mob psychology aimed at the law?

THE SEED of it, we say, was planted in Wallace country. It was here that massive defiance of the law began with the cry "Segregation forever!" It was here that yesterday's children got the idea that if you do not like a law, you do just anything to defy it — including violence. It was here that the Supreme Court, the very citadel of justice and law, could be spat upon.

George Wallace was a leader in setting the mood that has been the cause of the fires in our cities, for the children of yesterday saw his triumph as a breaker of the law.

But, says the court, such a wrecker of the law nonetheless has a right to be tested in an election.

THE · NEW · SOUTH

The New, Newer, Newest South!

They say "the Deep South is transforming, or changing, or emerging into a new era." But hasn't it always, ever since THE war?

1886: "The New South"! Henry Grady's phrase caught on: Harper's Weekly printed the pictures on these pages within a year after his famous speech to the New England Society of New York. It was a special supplement on The New South, heralding the area's industrial resurgence, one aspect of Grady's flowery oration. Since then, the appellation has cropped up with a confusing consistency. Practically each year, someone proclaims this the New — or Newest — South.

Perhaps Grady let his words get a little ahead of reality in other matters when he asserted that, "The New South presents a perfect democracy"; "We have reached the point that marks perfect harmony in every household"; "(The Negro) shares our school fund, has the fullest protection of our laws and the friendship of our people." But if the Atlantan's "vision of a restored and happy people" was stretching it somewhat (he was speaking, after all, to a gathering of Yankees) the effect of the speech was beneficial: It helped make known that to some degree the South was, forced to or not, successfully wrestling with the strange and deep problems proposed by a sagging, one-crop economy, by an aura of defeat, by the challenge of the freed slaves. The New South of that time was aggressive, achieving, recuperative and commercially militant, as contrasted with the ante-bellum meditative, leisurely and academic posture. Grady's speech also invited a formal, if not universally satisfying, rebinding of the ties between the North and the South.

Harper's Weekly's acknowledgement of this was but one result of the speech.

Florida historian Rembert W. Patrick reminds us that the existence of a "New South" implies the pre-existence of an "Old South" — which in turn implies a long existence — "but in reality the ante-bellum Deep South endured for only one generation." The vision of singing slaves and sentimentality along the Suwannee was a myth, says Patrick. "(After reconstruction) a mythical Old South floated cloudlike from the past to cover the ills of the New South." If the economy had changed drastically, the social philosophy had not. Through compromise, and the attrition of boredom with the struggle, the social revolution dictated by the outcome of the war was forgotten, and indeed, much of the rest of the nation entered into a consensus which tacitly approved the South's philosophy.

Another historian of the South, C. Vann Woodward, writes that the first real crack in the national consensus did not come until Harry Truman backed the recommendations of his Committee on Civil Rights at the Democratic convention of 1948. "The implications were ominous and immediately apparent. This meant a return to principle, a shift from 'uplift' to rights, from paternalism to equality, the breakup of compromises, accommodations, and concessions that dated back to 1877." The South more recently, he writes, "has had its 'Epitaph' written and its 'Mystique' debunked." Thus Woodward gave hope that a South newer in more than economy was in the making.

The turbulence of the years following Truman, and the Supreme Court's desegregation decisions of 1954, have helped change, again only to a degree, the social philosophy of the New South. University of Alabama political scientist Dr. Robert B. Highsaw said in 1964, "A transformation occurs when there is a change in external form or in inner nature or function. And in this sense the Deep South is transforming, or changing, or emerging into a new era."

Almost 80 years after the first Harper's Weekly supplement on "The New South," the magazine's successor, Harper's, issued a special section on "The South Today." In it not only was the region's progressive economic identity acknowledged, but Dr. Woodward had this to say about the identity of the Southern people: "In a new search for identity, the Negro is fully engaged. In fact, he has taken the initiative and the white man reacts to him. Their discovery of each other will define a distinctly new period of Southern history and a new Southern identity." An identity of the spirit, so to speak, to complement the physical, outward identity already discovered.

And in 1966 a quarterly publication of the Southern Regional Council, appropriately named New South, with editorial certainty wrote: "There is, indeed, a new South once again."

Was it a "New South" in 1886? Is it a "New South" in 1968? Or any time in between? Perhaps, as with any growing, developing personality, the South dies a little and is partially reborn each day, year, decade. As long as this is true, the region should be thankful. Only if the region becomes static and the Old South, real or imagined, takes over, would it have cause for total despair. —HANK BLACK.

The answer is simple: The men who were in the tanks might be dead, but the tanks, despite their mangled appearance, are not. In fact, the mission of the depot, under the direction of Col. S. M. Burney, is to restore life to the shambled tanks and send them back to Vietnam.

The first thought that strikes you — rather, the second; the first is about the men who had been inside — is that we'd be better off to leave them in the jungles.

Tank repair makes sense, and cents, too

But Burney, himself just back from Vietnam, tells you why we return them from across the ocean, around to the port of either Mobile or New Orleans, then by barge and train to the depot. And he makes a lot of sense . . . and cents, too.

"When a tank gets busted up over there," he said, "even though the tank is no longer in shape to operate, it's still worth roughly $150,000. "That's a lot of money in anybody's book. So we ship them back here. The usual cost of overhauling them is about $35,000 per tank. When we've finished, and ready to ship the tank back, it's valued at $225,000. That's good business."

Not only good, but in a day of big government spending, refreshing to the taxpayer. At Anniston Ordnance, they're saving money, time, and costly parts.

The tanks aren't the only vehicles overhauled here. The biggest volume is received in the Armored Personnel Carriers, which are more prone to being destroyed because they don't have armor plating of the tanks. They usually haul 10 or 11 men — which means the long rows of twisted heaps at the depot often served as mass coffins for clusters of GIs in the Southeast Asia battleground.

The men who had ridden them had a sense of humor as they went into combat — a humor tinged with a dash of fatalism, of the futility of existing. You see it on some of the signs painted on the vehicles. One said, "The Untouchable." Another, "Happy House." One had a four-leaf clover on it, another a psychedelic design and the word "Love." And someone had painted the words "You Missed," on a APC which had been racked by a huge armor piercing shell. Maybe someone in the crew lucked out and painted the sign. More than likely, though, it was someone else, back at an embarking point in Vietnam.

Whatever the story of each of the vanquished warriors, their armored steeds usually can be reshod and re-equipped for another jungle joust.

In addition to the overhauling of combat vehicles, the depot serves as a major storing area for munitions, vehicles and fuel

Armored vehicles are stripped down, rebuilt.

Many tanks look irreparable, but they aren't.

Anniston Depot one of state's big businesses

Burney's operation is one of the biggest business ventures in Alabama. Few industries can boast the number of civilian workers (4,300 from all over North Alabama, including hundreds of women and three blind persons and 260 other handicapped individuals), the payroll or the technical know-how. The depot is known as the best combat vehicle overhauling station in America. "When we finish overhauling a tank and put it back on a train for shipment to Vietnam," said Burney, "it's actually in better shape than it was when it was new."

for Lance missiles. It is one of the chief shipping points in the eastern half of the United States for military parts, and maintains a huge parts repair division. And finally, the post serves six Southern states as the calibration center, a place where all the technical know-how of the military is put into play in the accurate checking of weapons sighting devices.

But right now the depot's major mission is the tank and APC overhaul. It brings the war home everyday to the workers . . . and they take pride in sending it back without delay. THE END)

RALPH

McGILL

2 and 2 Make 4 or 22

Atl Const 12/21/68

It is possible to take two and two and make of them either four or 22.

Analysis of Southern change offers this possibility. Shall we talk in terms of 22 or 4?

When Southern legislatures meet in January, only three will be lily white. They are South Carolina, Arkansas, and Wallaceland.

In state legislative races, Negro candidates in the old Confederate states won enough victories to increase the number of black legislators from 23 to 30. Five of these were in the Senate chambers.

Georgia led in this political demonstration of the very best kind of "black power"—political power. A total of 14 Negroes will sit in the 1969 legislature, two senators and 12 representatives.

For the first time in history the North Carolina and Florida legislatures will each seat a Negro member. Tennessee elected two black senators and will again have six representatives, a total of eight. Texas has two representatives and one senator. Mississippi, Louisiana and Virginia each have one representative to their legislatures.

Local Positions

Other Negroes were elected to local positions, city and county. An estimated 300, most of them hold-overs, are in these minor offices which are, in another sense, important because they are "local."

This is progress. It is sensational when one considers that not until the voting rights legislation of 1964, implemented in 1965, was campaigning by Negroes possible on a regional basis. There remain, however, centers of denial of voting rights. But, progress made unquestionably exceeds the most sanguine expectations of 1964.

The Southern Regional Council has provided the major impetus in voter registration. Their efforts are being intelligently increased. "Black power" at the ballot is a welcome addition to government. Experience is limited to about four years. But so far, the thrust of Negro legislators has been toward improving democratic processes—not limiting them.

Against this background it is easy to declare that two and two make 22. Certainly the gains in so brief a span of time are substantial. They demonstrate once again how long the political development of the nation was crippled and retarded by state and local laws. There are still some who say that progress comes only when men's hearts change and that laws can't accomplish reform. That piece of piety is, now as before, bunk.

Attitude Change

There is perhaps one piece of truth in it. Nothing seems to change the "heart" of a tough, beat-'em-over-the-the-head rural sheriff as much as the registration of several thousand Negroes.

Meanwhile, the probability of 2 and 2 making four must be given attention. The Negro and the poor white, more particularly the black man, still are leaving the South. The movement is north and west, chiefly the latter. Their educational qualifications are limited. They will add to the welfare problems of the cities to which they move.

The economic, social and political status of the Negro has remarkedly improved. But decline in these same statistics for the ghetto dweller and the rural poor keeps the Negro generally in about the same position.

At the turn of the century some 90 per cent of all Negroes were in the South. As late as 1940 that percentage was about 77.

Since that time, motivated by the war plant labor demands of the Second World War and the post-war displacement of Negro farm labor by machinery, chemicals and technology, more than 3.5 million Negroes have left the South.

It is interesting, dismaying and very thought provoking to play with these statistics—does 2 and 2 make merely four or 22?

ENFORCING CIVIL RIGHTS LAWS

In 1954, the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision started the most recent phase of the civil rights revolution. The 1964 Civil Rights Act was passed, in part, to enforce this decision. But the effect of the 1964 legislation has been unclear to most of the nation. Moreover, recurrent reports of "progress" in isolated communities have confused the picture further. Are Southern schools more or less segregated today than they were in 1954? Are Southern liberals satisfied with past efforts and optimistic about the prospects for change? What are the political obstacles to Congressional action to enforce Federal civil rights laws? (See Current April 1967, page 52; July 1966, page 36; September 1965, page 6; October 1964, page 21; June 1963, page 6; and September 1960, page 29.)

THE PERSISTENCE OF RACISM

The Director of Information for the Southern Regional Council in an introduction to a recent Council special report on school segregation in the South:

Pat Watters

"This report is the third in a period of four years in which the Southern Regional Council has attempted to tell the nation of the deplorable degree of failure in the South to comply with the law of the land against racial discrimination in education, and to suggest the terrible implications of this failure.

"In the previous two reports, in 1965 and 1966, there were empirical and psychological reasons for including some guardedly optimistic, some hopeful words, saying that surely the situation would be corrected. This would come, it could be felt, once the nation realized the extent of failure, of resistance by men of public trust in the South, of ineptitude and unrealism on the part of those charged with enforcement, of savage damage done to children of both races by this enduring record of flaunting the law.

"This time there seems almost no hope, virtually no reason to find optimistic words, to say things may improve. The mistakes of the past are repeated. The nation has not seemed aware even of the failure, let alone resolute enough to end it.

"Such a dismal report comes at a time when many Americans—young people and Negroes especially—are disaffected, disillusioned, disgusted with the government, the basic institutions, the socially expressed values of their country. Riots, repressions of civil liberties, distrust to the degree of hatred of police by many citizens, acrimony so bitter in the exchange of ideas that debate degenerates into cat-calls, the murder of leaders—these are the marks of the disintegration to which American public life has come. A tendency to anarchy, a willingness to destroy the good along with the bad of such a basic institution as higher education, is evident on the one hand. A tendency to right-wing totalitarianism is evident on the other.

"And the public expresses its perception of all of this with a cry for law and order. Politicians use the term as a shibboleth. There have been lawlessness and disorder rampant across the South since 1954 regarding the just requirement that racial discrimination in education be ended. This has been the signal failure in a whole incredible series of failures in the rights of Negroes, in society's obligations to the poor. Children are starving among us, and the official reaction is most often to deny the existence of that starvation, rather than to respond to it, alleviate it.

"The real story told in this report is that of where the real breakdown in law and order, all along, has been. It is a terrifying story of the object lesson in dishonesty and hypocrisy our government and our society have provided for a whole generation of young Americans. The only real hope that we can put into a report like this is the fervent one that the American people will come to see what true law and order means, and act at last to achieve it, with justice for all." (Lawlessness and Disorder, Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 16, 1968)

THE FULL CIRCLE OF FAILURE

The Southern Regional Council's research director:

Glenda Bartley

"In the long decade between the Supreme Court's first decision in Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education and passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, faith in the ability of Federal courts to affect substantial integration in the public schools of the South had sharply diminished. At the time Congress gave legislative sanction to the nation's fundamental law, there were only 34,105 (1.17 per cent of Negro enrollment) Negro children attending school with whites in the 11 southern states. Hope now hinged on Title VI of the Act, which contained the ingredients for a small revolution. Then, for three, bitter, frustrating defeated years, attention was focused on the enforcement agency for Title VI—the Department of Health, Education and Welfare [HEW]. It seemed that HEW's Office of Education with its power to cut off Federal funds now had the weapon to wring compliance from the previously unbudgeable South, that school desegregation would cease to be a phenomenon of urban tokenism.

"Essentially, the shift away from the courts to the executive branch made school desegregation wholly an administrative matter.

"In the first year of this administrative era (1965), the Office of Education issued guidelines for compliance with the Act. The freedom-of-choice clause (theoretically allowing parents to send their children to any school in a given system) in these guidelines, and in those issued subsequently, still placed the burden of desegregation on Negro school children and their parents, but the weight of resistance was shifted from Southern legislatures to individual school administrators. Neither the novices at HEW nor experienced observers outside the South calculated the nature and ability of their new adversaries. School administrators in a region yet uncommitted to education are a lonely and beleaguered lot. (Support for education as a regional panacea is more dogma than dollars.) Early outraged protest over Federal intervention and Federal control soon settled into the sure manipulation by one parallel bureaucracy of the other.

"It was also during the brief period before schools opened under the first guidelines that the real violence set in. The previous 10 years had been relatively free of it in the matter of school desegregation. There was Mansfield, and Clinton, and Little Rock, and New Orleans, where screaming mother-mobs appeared on television as the first wave of mass media theater of the absurd. But the violence was done mostly to psyches of the few Negro children. During the first judicial era (1954-64), the mode of Southern private resistance was as often economic as physical terrorism. And the targets of the bombs, beatings, burnings, bullets, firings, credit cut-offs, and foreclosures were most often not parents who tried to send their children to 'white' schools, but people who tried to gain access to public accommodations, register to vote, and the like. This was largely because there were virtually no Negro parents making the attempt in the rural areas and small towns where the varieties of terrorism have been most virulent. In the cities, where most of the (token) school desegregation occurred during the first judicial era, the terrorism was mainly within the schools, a low-grade, day-by-day torture of the Negro children by their schoolmates, teachers, and administrators. Out in the rural areas of the South, where law enforcement was repressive before it became fashionable to be so, the advent of the guidelines, the threat that black children might actually go to school with white children, brought a wave of terror unmatched since post-Reconstruction whites rode around in bedsheets. And economic retaliation against the few Negroes who chose the 'white' school did not abate.

Have the media distorted reality?

"In September 1965, 184,308 (6.1 per cent) Negro children enrolled in 'white' schools. In spite of the increased violence and the pitifully small number of Negroes in desegregated situations, there was a national misunderstanding of what was happening in the South. There were several reasons for this. The administrative experiment was taking place in rural areas of the South—crossroads towns and hamlets ill-geared for news coverage. . . . And, since there had been virtually no desegregation at all before, any small gain was often hailed as a triumph. Another reason for the national misunderstanding was perhaps caused by national news media's probably unconscious wish to have done with the violence attendant on any significant social change in the South. This passion for tranquility, for order, has led many a responsible reporter, magazine, newspaper, and television network to announce the advent of another school year as an occasion of 'increased desegregation,' or even 'massive desegregation . . . without violence.' (An example of such was the story which ran under a headline proclaiming that school desegregation swept peacefully across Dixie: the story itself recounted instances of desegregators' homes fired into—as many as 32 times—in three towns in one state alone.) . . .

"In 1966 there were 2,598,842 (or 88 per cent of the Negro enrollment) in all-Negro schools, more, due to population increases and the small amount of desegregation, than had attended segregated schools in the year of the first Brown decision. New guidelines were issued in December 1966, but it was about over—the administrative era. Negro parents, target of every trick known to a national minority accustomed to working its will on the nation in matters of race, were getting tired. Negro children, in all too many instances in desegregated schools abused, excluded from activities, were disillusioned. Private agencies' field workers, who had often been Negroes' only assurance that all of white America was not hostile, that they and their children were not totally alone, were reluctantly pulling out.

"When school opened in September 1967, 86 per cent of Southern Negro students remained in segregated schools. Figures for the Deep South were more depressing: Alabama, 94.6; Mississippi, 96.1; South Carolina, 93.6; Georgia, 90.1; and Louisiana, 93.3.

Freedom of choice

"Defeat for the administrative experiment in education in the only large nation without a national school system came for a number of reasons. Freedom of choice was a fatal blunder. It allowed the violence to work its will, permitted white terrorists a victory denied their 'respectable' counterparts of the 1950's. Negro parents, who had from the first simply been interested in getting their children the best education available, failed to see the educational value of losing a job, being shot at, in order that the children might attend a school only a little less bad than the 'Negro' one. Even without white resistance, the free choice concept in its pure form is an administrative impossibility. Realizing this early on, authors of guidelines and court orders as well were forced to attach exemption clauses (read as loopholes by Southern schoolmen) taking into account such physical realities as 'proximity,' 'overcrowding' and the like. . . .

The obstacles to racial balance

"Title IV, little noticed in 1964, has haunted all the efforts launched under Title VI. There are many districts in the South which are like Washington, D. C., where the school population is mostly Negro and defies conventional zoning or other plans to make it desegregated. Such districts in the South are still overwhelmingly rural, but Atlanta, Memphis, Richmond, and other cities are already, or soon will be, in this category. Title IV prohibits 'busing' to achieve racial balance. How then desegregate majority-Negro districts, or large school systems in which de facto housing segregation perpetuates school segregation? Pairing (making one elementary school serve grades 1-2, another grades 3-4, etc., drawing children from wider geographic areas in the process), said some experts. Combination pairing-zoning, said others. And still others suggested educational parks, Federally-financed in fringe areas to accommodate suburban whites and ghetto blacks. This would be achieved with urging from (the same) Title IV's technical assistance teams and pressure of fund termination from Title VI. . . . The restriction on busing eliminated the possibility of drawing up zone plans which would ultimately destroy the dual school structure—erase the designations 'Negro' and 'white.'

"It is therefore useless (and even cruel) to criticize too strongly the failure of the Office of Education to map a strategy other than freedom-of-choice. The weapon—termination of Federal funds—did not prove effective. Most often the sufferers were the pitiful black schools. Many Southern superintendents seem to hold to the philosophy that 'Negro' and 'Federal' are synonymous terms. These schoolmen use Federal school funds, like those allotted under Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act for upgrading education in 'deprived' areas, to bring Negro schools' per pupil expenditures up to the level afforded 'white' schools by local finances."

In Unadilla, Ga., the eight Hunter children were the only desegregators. Until he graduated, Roy Hunter was beaten several times by schoolmates. Mrs. Hunter was harrassed. In 1968, Unadilla lost its Federal money—$200,000. All but $25,000 of that money had gone to the Negro school. The community raised taxes to replace the $25,000 and the superintendent announced that since the school system no longer received Federal funds, the "white" school would no longer accept black children. But the Hunter children returned to the "white" school in the fall of 1968.

THE NEW JUDICIAL ERA

"March 29, 1967 marked the advent of the second judicial era in school desegregation. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting en banc (full court), directed each state within the circuit to take all necessary affirmative action to bring about a 'unitary school system in which there are no Negro schools and no white schools—just schools.' In October 1967, the Supreme Court refused to review the order, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People declared the Fifth Circuit ruling to be 'the most influential school desegregation opinion' since Brown vs. Topeka. Indeed it was. In effect it gave legal sanction to the guidelines, while insisting that freedom-of-choice plans would be thoroughly examined by the courts to determine whether the method was working.

"On May 27, 1968, the Supreme Court issued a similar ruling, stating that: 'In desegregating a dual system of public education, a plan utilizing student "freedom-of-choice" is not an end in itself but is only a means to the constitutionally required end, the abolition of the system of segregation and its effects, and, if it proves effective, it is acceptable, but, if it fails to undo segregation, other means must be used to achieve that end.' Clearly freedom-of-choice had failed in almost every instance to abolish 'the system of segregation and its effects.' . . .

"At the same time civil rights and legal agencies were renewing their efforts to desegregate Southern schools, Education Commissioner Harold Howe II was expressing Federal relief at the re-entrance of the courts in a manner which should have been ominous to those who were anticipating a new concerted effort by executive and judicial branches. Howe said: 'Our policies are clearly supported by the courts. . . . It's not as necessary now as it formerly was for those of us in education to have a role in civil rights compliance.'

"A Federal district court in Alabama had issued an order (also in March 1967) which would, in fact, result in a collision of the two branches of the Federal government in the matter of school desegregation. Lee vs. Macon County placed 99 of Alabama's 118 school districts under court order. These were districts that had formerly been operating under HEW guidelines. During the summer of 1967, HEW declared that the Lanett, Ala., school system was not in compliance with the guidelines and was therefore ineligible for Federal aid; Lanett school officials protested that they were now under a court-approved plan, and in July the court held that it was the court's responsibility to determine whether school systems were in compliance with its order. Urging HEW to continue investigations and to report any failures to comply, the court warned, however, that HEW could only take action with its specific approval.

"But meanwhile, all across the South during 1967 and the spring and summer of 1968 old school cases were reopened and new ones filed. District courts in numerous cases overthrew freedom-of-choice plans and ordered school boards to submit geographic zoning plans drawn so as to afford substantial desegregation.

Is re-zoning effective?

"In many respects the new judicial era was exactly like the old. It introduced an entirely new concept in equal education to Southern whites. No less revolutionary than the Supreme Court's announcing in 1954 that separate educational facilities were inherently unequal was the idea that desegregation meant white children attending formerly 'Negro' schools. Freedom-of-choice had been the interim separate but equal, not a transitional concept, but educational dogma. HEW's acceptance of gradualism was not nearly so damning as its acceptance of the Southern solution. Freedom-of-choice meant Negroes, as many as could stand it, in white schools. New, court ordered, the zone concept literally meant mixing the schools. Administrators . . . reluctantly drew up the new plans. Through the late spring and early summer resistance grew. Just as in the first judicial era, it was mainly the cities of the South that were affected. And the resistance had a citified, sophisticated new look, not seen since the administrative experiment moved the issue to the rural South. Committees, organizations (Stand Together and Never Divide, etc.) of white parents formed (re-formed, in many instances—a new generation of resisters) to fight for freedom-of-choice. Almost without exception they were victorious.

"The new judicial era fell victim to many of the traps that had plagued the old one. Federal judges, admittedly not educators, were often forced to believe elaborate arguments by schoolmen that what the courts requested was simply not (immediately) possible. Redraw all school boundaries . . . 75,000 children involved . . . teachers already assigned . . . overcrowding . . . undercrowding . . . busing. . . . You see, your honor, we would very much like to comply with the court order, and we will . . . but not now. (A Federal district judge in Mississippi recently ruled that, since whites would pull out of a zone-desegregated school system, freedom-of-choice was constitutional. This bit of tortured judicial reasoning was engendered by a poll, conducted by whites, of whites in the district. The poll revealed that white parents would refuse to send their children to public schools; therefore, no desegregation would exist. So, freedom-of-choice would, at least in theory, allow more desegregation.) Also, pressure by white parents in many locales had almost the same effect as threats by Southern legislatures a decade before. These parents, through their organizations, said they would, and in some instances did, close the schools down. . . .

. . . in Mobile?

"Mobile, Ala., seemed to sum up the first year of the new judicial era: The Mobile case had been in court for many years. The system was operating under freedom-of-choice. In 1967, 2 per cent of Negro school children attended 'white' schools. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in March 1968, instructed the school board to adopt a rigid (no provisions for transfers within the system to avoid attending a desegregated school) zone plan, which would have placed about 1,400 white children in formerly all-Negro schools. White parents organized (Stand Together, etc., and Whites Organized for Rights Keeping); the area's state senator filed a motion in Federal court seeking to overturn the new ruling on grounds it would be unsafe for white children to attend all-Negro schools. After a summer of legal battling the Federal district judge who had issued the initial order came up with a plan allowing senior high schools to operate under freedom-of-choice, requiring specified attendance zones for elementary and junior high schools, and permitting more liberal transfers within the attendance zones. When school opened in September, an estimated 3,500 Negroes were in formerly all-white schools; but very few whites were in formerly all-Negro ones.

. . . in Mississippi?

"Mississippi, as usual, was the epitome of frustration, confusion, and a certain hope. School cases in 50 of Mississippi's 148 districts are to be reopened in the fall. A spokesman for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., the most active agency in the legal battle for school desegregation, was confident that in most of those districts freedom-of-choice would be discarded and zone or pairing plans required. The spokesman also stated that such action would result in whites pulling out of the public schools in several districts. 'It depends on the district,' he said. 'Where whites are proud of the schools, where the schools are good, whites will stay. In the Delta, where schools are bad, whites will probably pull out.' He cited Corinth, a relatively prosperous community in northern Mississippi, as an example of a good school system's holding whites in spite of a comprehensive zone plan that would result in substantial desegregation. Though Mississippi still has a tuition grant statute, which theoretically could support private schools, there is little chance of its indefinite survival. The Legal Defense Fund spokesman, wise in the ways of Mississippi, and still hopeful, said 'Whites will probably go through the full cycle of resistance and come back to reconciliation again—just as they did before.' He felt that the South might yet solve the problem of desegregation before the North began, really, to grapple with it.

"There was the chance, a slim one, that the courts might succeed, might assure justice at last to school children in the South. But all the foregoing history indicates failure, and the results of the first year of the second judicial era bear out this gloomy prophesy. Though no official figures were available in late September 1968, the old pattern seemed to hold. A few more Negroes in school with whites in the cities; in some instances rural 'Negro' schools closed and the entire student body absorbed by the 'white' ones; a minuscule number of whites in formerly all-Negro schools. The second judicial era would, it seemed, encounter the same dilemma that doomed the first one: Gov. Lurleen Wallace, paraphrasing another Southerner who flouted the law when it suited him to do so, said of the Fifth Circuit ruling, 'They have made their decision, now let them enforce it.' . . .

The impact of Brown vs. Board of Education

"The results of 14 long years of methodizing, legalizing, computerizing, analyzing, and finally, mortifying what is, after all, the basic right of every American child—the right to a good education, the right to enter any building to get that education—will long be felt in this nation.

"We teach children, all children, that the United States of America is dedicated to law and order. We lie. We have shown a generation of American children, in the public institution closest to their lives, the schools, that this nation's fundamental law need not be obeyed; we have clearly demonstrated to them that what we expect is their conformity to lip service to the shibboleth. What will be the awful effects of this lie upon children, black and white alike? What depths of disillusionment when they hear us say 'law' and observe only 'order?'

"After a generation has beheld successful evasion, rationalized vaccillation, outright flaunting of the law, only a country absolutely wedded to the totalitarian concept of order without law could turn on the victims of lawlessness and accuse them of destroying the fabric of society." ("Full Circle of Failure," Lawlessness and Disorder, Southern Regional Council, Oct. 16, 1968)

WILL CONGRESS ENFORCE THE LAW?

After reviewing the record of efforts by Congress to weaken the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the editor of the Southern Regional Council's publications comments on the prospects for enforcing existing Federal civil rights legislation.

Robert E. Anderson, Jr.

"The story of how desegregation still hovers at a low level of tokenism involves not only official defiance of the Federal government and intimidation of Negro parents and students but, of late, extremely effective persuasion by Southern Congressmen. . . .

"In June of 1968, a coalition of Southerners and Northern moderates united in the House to bring about what Georgia Congressman John Flynt described as 'Congressional sanction to freedom of choice.' On a crucial 139-109 tally, the House voted to retain the so-called 'Whitten Amendment' to the HEW Appropriations Act. That amendment (named after its sponsor, Rep. Jamie Whitten, D., Miss.) stated:

" 'No part of the funds contained in this Act may be used to force busing of students, abolishment of any school, or to force any student attending any secondary school to attend a particular school against the choice of his or her parents or parent. . . . No part of the funds contained in this Act shall be used to force busing of students, the abolishment of any school or the attendance of students of a particular school as a condition precedent to obtaining Federal funds.' . . .

"The impact of the House action sent shock waves into civil rights ranks, raising serious doubts as to the Congressional will on its own school desegregation legislation. Despite the fact that HEW, under reorganized enforcement procedures, continued to talk tough about its future plans and, conceding the goodwill and intentions of its compliance officers, the agency would obviously have been crippled in its enforcement efforts by the Whitten Amendment. Some civil rights observers thought the amendment would so seriously restrict future HEW desegregation efforts as not only to legalize freedom-of-choice desegregation plans but to make them the only sort of desegregation plans acceptable. . . .

The legislative labyrinth

"The Whitten Amendment—pushed in the Senate by Georgia Sen. Richard Russell—ran into opposition in the Senate Appropriations Committee. Liberals succeeded in adding a clause making the appropriations restrictions applicable only to instances where HEW might attempt to 'overcome racial imbalance.' Southerners on the committee gained concessions from their Northern colleagues when the committee approved another Russell-sponsored amendment requiring HEW to assign as many compliance officers to Northern states as to the South. The committee also approved two other segregationist amendments, preventing HEW from cutting off funds derived from timber taxes or from denying school lunch and medical service funds to Southern schools. In September, the full Senate approved the committee bill with the amendments cited.

"House proponents of the legislation, however, were set for a showdown fight and in a House-Senate conference committee succeeded in reinstating the Whitten Amendment. The appropriations bill was resubmitted to the House which in an abrupt about-face rejected the Whitten Amendment outright by a 175-167 vote. Southern civil rights forces, prepared for the worst, were astounded; Southern Congressmen objected.

" 'We had the votes,' lamented Georgia Congressman John Flynt, 'if the people had been there.'

Congress vs. the Supreme Court

"Beyond the immediate effects of the Congressional action on school desegregation (and the mere fact that the Whitten Amendment could gain the Northern support that it did was in itself a sobering commentary on the national commitment to integration), civil rights forces saw another potentially greater threat both to the civil rights cause and to civil liberties. Implicit throughout the House debate on the Whitten Amendment was the sentiment for Congressional restraints on the Supreme Court. That sentiment was translated into action with passage of the controversial 'anti-crime' bill, a portion of which specifically nullifies a Supreme Court decision in regard to the admissibility of voluntary confessions in criminal proceedings. Most certainly it was a factor in the decision of some Senators to oppose the elevation of Justice Abe Fortas to Chief Justice of the Court.

"Yet in the realities of American politics, even pessimistic civil rights advocates doubted that the Congress will succeed in actually bringing about a legal reversal of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decisions. Even an attempt to do so would bring the nation to a constitutional crisis such as it has not had since the Civil War. More likely, there will be continued efforts to render the rulings meaningless through appropriations restrictions and reductions. Northern liberals who seem to have no hesitance in siding with Southern segregationists on such restrictions when they see de facto segregation threatened would hardly go along with an overt racist effort to nullify the courts. Southern Congressmen, too, apparently have learned just how far they can take their Northern colleagues. House debate on the Whitten Amendment, for instance, was largely void of the fire-eating oratory characteristic of Southern Congressmen in the wake of the 1954 Brown decision. Thus if current trends in the Congress continue—trends which increasingly seem to reflect opinion of a portion of white middle-class America, politely affirmative on such easy either/or issues as the end of de jure segregation in the South, but increasingly testy and antagonistic toward implementing measures that will cost more than lip service—dismantling of other civil rights enforcement and procedures might also be expected.

"The Federal structure itself perhaps doomed the administrative effort to achieve desegregation. Empowering an agency to carry out Congressional mandate allows legislators (who control the real power) the right to give and to take away—to speak out vehemently for civil rights and then on critical roll calls to cripple the agency charged with guaranteeing those rights. In 1964, the nation seemed bent on conferring citizenship on Negroes. Stokely Carmichael articulated black power in 1966 and white power seemed to breathe a sigh of relief that Negroes no longer deserved nor even desired the honor.

The South: barometer of national will

"The fact is that while Northerners have only recently begun to wrestle with the thorny problems of de facto segregation, many Southerners at least have come to view the process of school desegregation as a rather dull serial in which each year begins with high expectations and ends with disappointing results. They see the slow pace of school integration as a barometer of the whole national will in the matter of civil rights enforcement. For certainly all of the law and all of the court decrees necessary for the fulfillment of a century's promise have been made. What remains wanting, after all of the high and noble sentiments have been expressed, is the commitment to implement them.

"In the meanwhile, the disgrace of continued failure to bring about an end to dual schools was having precisely the effect that white racist elements in the South had striven without success in previous years to bring about. As the summer of 1968 unfolded and a new school year approached, many Negroes, reflecting in varying degrees a concept of 'black awareness,' had come to feel that school desegregation is no longer a relevant issue. 'Why don't whites ever transfer to our schools? Why should we be the ones to do all the sacrificing?' Some voice the attitude, too, that if 'quality' education can be achieved in an all-Negro school, then why should Negro children suffer the pain, the estrangement, the cruelty they subject themselves to in desegregating a 'previously all-white school.' 'Separate but equal,' never achieved when it was the law of the land, becomes now a sour goal of the disappointed, disillusioned, and betrayed." SCHOOLS AND SEGREGATION

Plans for the decentralization of our metropolitan public schools have brought into sharp relief the readiness of a part of the Negro community to abandon integration in favor of community—in effect black—control. Can integration still be achieved? Is there time to try?

ARE INTEGRATED SCHOOLS STILL POSSIBLE?

A staff correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor comments on the recent interest shown by educators for joint city and suburban planning in order to bring about more integrated public schooling.

Dorothea Kahn Jaffe

"It would be easy to give up trying to find a way to get enough white children to balance Negro enrollments in all black neighborhoods in American cities. It seems an impossible task. Unless housing patterns are changed and white families return to the city from their suburban retreats the present ghetto school districts will continue all black. The present districts, that is.

"Concerned educators are talking about restructuring the educational system so as to change the size and character of today's districts. They would redraw all urban districts to cross city boundaries and embrace suburban territory.

"Structural change was one of the main subjects under discussion at a summer conference of the President's Commission for the Observance of Human Rights Year, 1968, held at Martha's Vineyard, Mass. Most participants urged the need for radical changes in financing also.

"The metropolitan district would not be simply the old city school district enlarged. It would be an area, possibly a pie-shaped wedge fanning out from the inner city, which would support better-equipped, better-taught specialized schools. Children from the inner city and youngsters from the suburbs would travel to the school within the district which best served their needs. Some would be located in educational parks, or campuses, with types of equipment which no single school could afford. Others would be located close to a college center, sharing college facilities.

"This would not be an economy program. The educators who discussed it said building for it would cost millions and call for substantial aid from state and Federal governments. Action by state legislatures would also be needed to permit metropolitan financing. And the legislature, to pass such an act, would have to be assured of some support by both the suburbs and the inner city.

"It won't be done in a day, that is certain. There is sure to be opposition from blacks as well as whites. Black power people have largely given up on integration and have turned to advocacy of schools taught by black teachers who would give children pride in their race. Many white parents, by the same token, insist on having their children educated in their own suburban environment.

"But those who think seriously about the matter are likely to conclude that all groups benefit when children of different racial and economic backgrounds get to know each other in school situations. Experiences tend to prove this conclusion to be sound. But it is obvious that to get support the truly integrated schools must provide better education than the segregated children, white and black, are now getting. Changes in financing the schools will be necessary.

"The process will take time. Meantime every effort should be made to improve inner city schools, conference members agreed, not as a permanent solution but as an emergency measure." (The Christian Science Monitor, Oct. 5, 1968)

CAN THE SUBURBS JOIN THE CITY?

The education editor of The Christian Science Monitor explains how the problem of racial imbalance might be solved in the greater Boston area.

Cynthia Parsons

"Those interested in solving the problem of racial imbalance in the segregated schools of large Northern cities are beginning to talk seriously about something called the metropolitan school district. To help our readers understand this controversial subject Joan Forbes, a staff cartographer, has drawn a map of Boston and environs [see page 46] which illustrates a possible metropolitan school district divided into six sub-districts.

"This is a special Christian Science Monitor map, and not a projection being used by any school official or civic group interested in solving Boston's racial imbalance problem.

"Boston has a small Negro population—about 12 per cent. Black children make up less than 20 per cent of the total school enrollment. Yet segregated housing patterns have resulted in nearly all Negro children attending about 50 predominantly black public schools.

"Boston's racial imbalance problem is relatively simple to solve, should the Board of Education want to solve it. Within the present school district, by gerrymandering school assignment lines, each school could be assured of a better racial mix. But there are many other cities which have such a large per cent of Negro pupils spread over such a large concentrated area—for example, Chicago, New York, Baltimore—that redrawing attendance lines is insufficient to solve the racial imbalance problem.

"Hence, the reason for wanting a much larger school district, one that includes the suburbs and the inner city under the same administration.

"By using Boston as an example, it is possible to show what these school innovators have in mind. The dotted black lines on the map break the city of Boston into six sub-districts. The southern sub-district, for example, embraces parts of Boston, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Quincy, Weymouth, Hingham, Braintree. The solid black lines indicate main transportation arteries which feed each sub-district. Transportation lines into Boston lend themselves readily to a semi-circular metropolitan district split into six pie-shaped wedges. And the circumferential highway (Route 128) circling the city provides excellent lateral movement.

"Metropolitan school district planners envision large school complexes—education parks—somewhere between the crowded inner city and the rural edge of the suburbs. Such educational centers in the Boston area might well be located on or near Route 128. These centers would include several elementary schools, junior and senior high schools providing both academic and vocational programs, large library facilities, recreation programs, adult education locations, and a junior college. Some existing school buildings would be used for schools, but many as civic centers for neighborhood programs and preschool centers while regular school pupils move out to small schools within large educational parks.

"Educators who advocate this radical approach see such metropolitan planning as not only solving the problem of integration, but of providing greater educational facilities at lower cost, a more comprehensive program blending vocational and academic programs, and a far wider tax base to take the load off the heavily burdened city and suburban taxpayers.

"Boston's six sub-districts would fit in one administrative whole, somewhat akin to the decentralization plan advocated by the Ford Foundation for New York City. Each metropolitan Boston district would have its own school board, its own administrators, its own freedom to meet special community needs. But the grand district, including more than 30 separate cities and towns, would be the tax base, and would have its own school board especially concerned with building a relationship between the district and the state legislature as well as the state department of education.

"The metropolitan school district concept is not just around the corner. It may be light years away, but then again, determined forces for change may be able to get their message across sooner than that. Certainly the city joining the suburbs for better schools is one of the main topics at this year's parent-teacher meetings.

"Before such a plan could ever go into effect, all of the cities and towns involved would have to give up their autonomy in running their own schools. School sub-district lines would have little relation to existing town and county lines; instead they would be their own political entities." (The Christian Science Monitor, Oct. 5, 1968)

Study in 7 States Shows Sentences Based on Race

By CHARLES POU 4-6-69

Atlanta Journal Political Editor

A clear pattern of sentence disparity between black and white offenders exists in the administration of southern justice, according to a report just issued by the Southern Regional Council.

The SRC study, entitled "Race Makes the Difference," was based on research compiled in the summer of 1967 by law students working for the Council's Project on Crime and Corrections.

Seven states are examined in the study—Arkansas, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

IN FIVE of the seven states, more Negroes than whites were incarcerated. The percentage of Negro prison population in the states were: Georgia, 60 per cent; Arkansas, 65 per cent; Alabama, 58 per cent; Virginia, 59 per cent; Tennessee, 45 per cent; South Carolina, estimated 50 per cent.

The report, drawn from study of 1,205 cases, asserts that the average sentence for black offenders for all crimes was 16.8 years; for whites, it was 12.1 years. For crimes against persons the averages were 22.8 years for Negroes and 20.6 years for whites. For crimes against property, Negro sentences averaged out to 7.4 years and white sentences to 5.9 years.

Some southern states would not permit the researchers to study available records. On this point in Georgia, the report asserted:

"Georgia permitted a summer field worker to collect some cases from the records. When it was discovered that the worker in question had not completed the sample, we requested permission to send another worker.

"The department of corrections begged off due to the difficulties and confusion involved in moving their offices from one building to another. The Georgia Board of Pardons and Paroles refused to cooperate on the grounds that their records are state records . . ."

Ark Gazette 12/1/69

ATLANTA (AP)—The Agriculture Department remains the federal government's worst offender in discriminating against Negroes, the Southern Regional Council said Saturday night.

"Until the United States Department of Agriculture moves forcefully to end patterns enforced by decades of dominance by Southern white supremists, black Southern farmers will be denied equal protection under the law," the Council declared.

The report especially cited patterns of racial discrimination in the Extension Service, Soil Conservation Service and Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation service.

The Southern Regional Council is a private research agency devoted to equality of opportunity. It is financed partially by the Ford Foundation.

The report said the Farmers Home Administration has done more than any other to correct racial inequities than any other branch of the Agriculture Department.

FHA lends low interest money for farm operations, expansion and improvement.

The Council noted that since 1964, FHA has required that counties with Negro populations of 20 per cent or more have at least one representative on the county FHA committees.

It was noted, however, that FHA recently reported that minority groups held only 7 per cent of such positions in the South and that the agency had called for an increase.

'69 Breakthrough Fails to Develop

An expected 1969 breakthrough in Negro representation on ASCS county committees did not materialize, the Council said.

It reported that only one Negro was elected in September to an ASCS county-level committee in the South, bringing the total to two Negroes among 4,100 such committeemen in the region.

County-level ASCS committees determine individual crop allotments in their counties.

"That means that black representation has risen to slightly more than one-twentieth of one per cent on the county committees in a region where Negroes are 13 per cent of the farm owners," the report said.

It noted that Negroes comprise 20 per cent or more of the farm owners in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina.

The council said Otis Pinkard was elected to a county-level ASCS committee in Mason County, Ala., last year, and William S. Payne was elected in Marshall County, Miss., last fall.

Farmers also elect community-level ASCS committees and, on these, Negroes lost ground, the report said.

It said that of 30,000 alternate and regular community ASCS positions in the 11-state area, only 380 were filled by blacks in elections this year. This was a decrease from 418 in 1968, the council said.

One Killed, Seven Injured In Collision

Gazette State News Service

HELENA — One person was killed and seven injured in a three vehicle collision Saturday on U.S. Highway 49 near Wycamp (Phillips County).

State Police identified the victim as Frank Benjamin Rohrscheib, 22, of West Helena, a passenger in a car driven by John R. Smith, 22, of Hammond, Ind., who was injured.

Others injured were Tom McIntosh, 56, of Marvell, the driver of another car; Joseph E. Waddell, 40, of Midlothian, and Mrs. Helen Houston, 59, of Memphis, all passengers in the Waddell vehicle.

State Police said the accident happened when Smith lost control of his car on a curve and side-swiped the McIntosh car which skidded sideways into the Waddell pickup truck.

A native of Helena, Rohrscheib was an employe of the planters Service Company.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Rohrscheib of West Helena; a brother, Truet Rohrscheib of West Helena; a sister, Mrs. Robin Sims of Iowa, and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Blaine of West Helena. Funeral will be at 4 p.m. today at Barton Baptist Church. Burial will be at Sunset Memorial Park by Citizens Funeral Service of West Helena.

Regional Council Says Schools Order Ignored

2 Federal Agencies Drag Feet On Court Edict, Report Claims

By MIKE BOWLER
Atlanta Constitution Education Editor

The U.S. Supreme Court's historic school desegregation order of Oct. 29 has been ignored by the Justice Department and handled with "questioned" dispatch by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the Southern Regional Council charges.

In a report titled "The Federal Retreat in School Desegregation," the council says both federal departments have dragged their feet since the high court's ruling that "all deliberate speed" is "no longer constitutionally permissible" and that the new obligation is "to terminate dual school systems at once. . . ."

The report charges that although Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell pledged to use "every available resource" to implement the mandate, "intitial actions indicated that his department was not seriously interested in immediate desegregation."

The Justice Department "refuses to act even in districts already involved in litigation," the report says, and its inactivity has prompted a group of black parents to sue Mitchell and his associates for violating the U.S. Constitution.

So weak has been the Nixon administration's enforcement of the court mandates, the SRC study adds, that the NAACP Legal Defense Fund may become "the real Justice Department," with President Nixon and Mitchell aligned with Southern segregationists.

MEANWHILE, although HEW has taken positive steps since Oct. 29 against districts which have reneged or have failed to submit acceptable desegregation plans, the report charges that "even these actions fail to take full advantage of the (Supreme Court's) decision because the department refuses to revise any of the 1970 voluntary plans in the light of new judicial standards calling for immediate desegregation."

The study quotes Paul Rilling, Southeast regional director of HEW's Office of Civil Rights, as saying it would be unfair to those who entered into "good faith agreements" on 1970 plans to reopen the cases now.

But it states: "The primary responsibility of OCR (the civil rights office) in the field of education is to bring about desegregated schools. OCR personnel and local school officials are mutually bound by the court's new directive. Districts entering into so-called 'good faith agreements' to desegregate in 1970-71 under the old ground rules should be required to revise their plans to comply with the new standards."

HEW ALSO has contributed to delay in desegregation, the report says, by failing to speed up its enforcement process and by bowing to political pressure in places like Palm Beach, Fla., Chester County, Tenn., and 21 court-order districts in South Carolina.

But in some districts, such as Clarke and Fulton counties in Georgia, the report says HEW stood firm "in the face of strong political pressure to do otherwise."

HEW in Fulton "had to contend with the vociferous intervention of (5th District) Rep. Fletcher Thompson who stated his intention to seek the impeachment of Secretary (Robert) Finch."

HEW's enforcement proceedings, which led to federal fund terminations when districts refuse to desegregate, have left some cases in limbo for years, while others (34 in Georgia) have had their funds terminated, the report says.

It says Hart County, Ga., was found guilty in January 1968, nearly two years ago, but has had no funds cut off.

HEW informed Americus, Ga., of its intention to initiate enforcement proceedings three years ago last Friday, according to the SRC, but no additional steps have been taken.

IN ADDITION, the study says, "the administration . . . has ignored at least 80 school districts with majority black populations, permitting continued segregation."

The report attacks President Nixon's "Southern strategy, which cynically appealed to the most reactionary of Southern and national attitudes and practices."

The "go slow" attitude did not begin with Secretary Finch's July 3 statement rejecting "a single arbitrary date by which the desegregation process should be completed," the report asserts, but was in evidence as early as February.

Updated HEW figures, disclosed for the first time in the SRC report, imply that, for whatever reasons, more Southern districts reneged on desegregation plans this fall than ever before.

Forty-seven of 145 Southern districts (33 per cent) with final integration plans this fall ignored them, HEW said, compared with 7 of 97 (close to 7 per cent) last fall.

THE REPORT says, "Civil rights groups believe there is little reason to assume that the administration's attitudes and ambivalence encouraged any district to implement its plan."

The 70-page report was researched and written by Horace Barker, a political science graduate student at Columbia University. It is the Southern Regional Council's third report since 1965 on the progress of school desegregation and the mood of the South.

The report's conclusions parallel those of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, which issued a study Sept. 11 concentrating on the judicial aspects of Southern desegregation.

Charges Desegregation Efforts Have Been Slowed Down

Special to The Chattanooga Times

ATLANTA—A report issued Saturday by the Southern Regional Council charges that the federal government has slowed the pace of Southern school desegregation and indirectly abetted defiance of the law in local school districts.

The report documents what it terms erosions in desegregation policy, culminating with the Nixon administration's August 1969 request for delay in desegregating schools in Mississippi.

Hope of reversing the slowdown and establishing consistent policies came only after the landmark Oct. 29 decision of the Supreme Court involving 30 Mississippi school districts, the report holds.

It describes that decision, which obligated school districts to "operate now and hereafter only unitary schools," as a moral and legal rebuke to that aspect of the administration's "Southern strategy" which appealed to "the most destructive of human attitudes and practices in Southern society."

A major effect of federal policy during the last 10 months was to encourage Southern school officials to continue to seek ways of retaining, rather than ending, segregated education, the report says.

It describes instances in Tennessee, South Carolina, Texas, and Louisians where local officials cited the administration's ambivalent policies as the major reason for opposing meaningful desegregation.

Moreover, the report declares, there was a significant increase in the number of reneging districts in the six Southern states covered by HEW's regional office ni Atlanta. In 1969, 47 (33 per cent) of 145 districts committed to implementing desegregation plans reneged. In 1968, only seven (10 per cent) of 97 districts reneged.

The report notes that the administrative standard developed by the Office for Civil Rights during 1968 required complete desegregation in almost every school district by September 1969.

A major effect of federal policy during the last 10 months was to encourage Southern school officials to continue to seek ways of retaining, rather than ending, segregated education, the report says.

September Deadline

The report notes that the administrative standard developed by the Office for Civil Rights during 1968 required complete desegregation in almost every school district by September 1969.

Disricts could apply for a September 1970 deadline only if they faced serious construction difficulties, or if a majority of their students were black. If OCR approved a 1970 deadline, the district still was required to implement interim steps producing an increase in student desegregation during the 1969-70 school year.

The first official retreat from these standards was a policy statement issued jointly by HEW and the Justice Department on July 3 the report notes.

The new policies eliminated the established September 1969 and 1970 deadlines by rejecting "a single arbitrary date by which the desegregation process should be completed. . . ."

The report holds that this led to increased confusion over the administration's position by declaring that although districts generally still would be expected to complete desegregation by September, 1969, the administration would consider ". . . . sound reasons for some limited delay . . . taking into account only bona fide educational and administrative problems."

Although the July 3 statement was the first announced change in policy, the council's report found that the administration had compromised the 1968 administrative standards as early as February.

Intervention

The report noted that in May high administration officials intervened in cases involving 21 court order districts in South Carolina to revise desegregation plans prepared by HEW staff experts in the Division of Equal Education Opportunity. The last-minute revision violated established administrative standards to give the districts more time to desegregate, the report holds.

The council's report emphasizes that the Supreme Court's decision gave the administration an unprecedented new opportunity and obligation to reverse its "go slow" approach of the previous ten months.

"Never before has the executive branch had such a decisive and straightforward mandate to eliminate dual school systems."

But despite the momentous decision, the report adds, the only significant positive response from the administration was a series of new steps taken by HEW to enforce desegregation in districts which were not operating under approved voluntary plans.

The report says that most disappointing to those people wanting an end to segregated schools has been the refusal of the Justice Department to press for any speed-up in the pace of desegregation in districts under court order.

The report concludes by pointing out what it calls an absence of presidential leadership on school desegregation.

Council Says Labor Woes Just Beginning for South

Journ-Const

Date? About 1969

By The Associated Press

Higher wages, higher taxes and a lot more municipal labor trouble are in store for the South, according to a recent study, the Southern Regional Council said in Atlanta Saturday.

A report on the conflicts between increasingly aggressive public employe unions and largely unprepared municipal governments appears in the June issue of South Today, the monthly newspaper published by the council.

The study says that although the main battlegrounds so far have been Atlanta, Memphis and Charleston, public employe disputes are taking place throughout the South and strikes will continue to spread.

The report continues that a number of significant trends have emerged from municipal labor problems in Atlanta, Memphis, Charleston and elsewhere. Among them it lists:

—Resistance to union organization and collective bargaining as such is melting away.

—While the results are far from uniform, organized groups of public employes generally are making advances all along the line in wages, fringe benefits and working conditions.

—The civil rights overtones have sometimes blurred basic economic issues involved, leaving the public largely unaware of the plight of municipal employes and of their determination to do something about it by traditional trade union methods.

—The difficult process of public institutions dealing with newly militant employes has been strained to the breaking point by the inexperience of public officials in dealing with labor problems.

WHILE PUBLIC employes traditionally have been at the bottom of the employment ladder, the study says that in the South they have been paid considerably less than in other regions of the country, although their pay in the South's major cities compares favorably to some areas of the North.

The report says the public employes, increasingly impatient with the economic plight that finds them behind workers in private industry, are organizing at an accelerated rate. It reports that the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes currently has some 30,000 members in the South and quotes one official as predicting membership of 200,000 within five years.

It cites the recent Atlanta strike as an example of an unnecessarily prolonged strike. Atlanta Mayor Sam Massell, considered one of the South's most liberal big-city mayors, fired 1,600 strikers three days after the strike began. The strike quickly became what the report calls "a game of municipal Indian wrestling." When the strike ended after 36 days with a 75 cents a day, one-step pay raise for 2,314 workers, city administrative officer Dan Sweat was pushing for the addition of a trained labor man to the city administrative staff.

SAYING the Atlanta strike underscored some important realities of public employe labor disputes, the report says that when the mayor makes himself a front line target for the union, he becomes a symbol of the antiunion resistance. It suggests that a city should have competent labor relations officials to carry on day-to-day negotiations with the mayor acting as a behind-the-scenes force, stepping to the forefront only to announce a settlement or some other dramatic move.

The report concludes:

"The power held by public employes is plain. They provide services that a city or hospital or whatever can ill afford to be without. Until recently they have been unwilling to test the laws and customs that have prevented them from using labor's ultimate weapon, the strike. Now they're making the tests."

Study Finds Poor Are Heavily Taxed in South

WASHINGTON—The nation's poorest section, the South, places a greater share of state and local taxes on the poor than does any other region, concludes a study released by the Southern Regional Council.

The report is by Dr. Eva Galambos, an Atlanta research consultant. The SRC is a biracial, nonpartisan, nonprofit organization founded in 1944 by such persons as the late Ralph McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, and several Negro educators. Its history dates back to the 1919 founding of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation.

In an introduction to the report, Paul Anthony, SRC executive director, notes the study "grew out of a conviction that state and local governments were not adequately equipped because of outmoded tax structures to deal with a host of unmet public needs.".

The South makes heavy use of the sales tax, which is regressive in that its impact decreases as income increases. Those southern states having income taxes do not make them anywhere as progressive as the federal income tax, Dr. Galambos concludes.

The economist also criticizes local income taxes, as well as the practice of lowering taxes on businesses to attract new industry. Where states grant property tax moratoriums to new industries, the report notes, "the burden of providing schools for the additional children brought into a community as a result of a new plant falls on traditional tax sources." In 1965, Alabama's "new industry exemption" was estimated to have cost state and local governments from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

SALES TAXES, which hit the poor harder than any other major source of tax revenue, account for 58.1 per cent of state taxes nationally. In the Southern states, these general and selective sales taxes range from a low of 46.8 per cent in Virginia to 77.9 per cent in Mississippi.

Other state figures include: North Carolina, 57.2 per cent; South Carolina, 64.9; Georgia, 68.8; Florida, 70.1; Alabama, 70.1; Tennessee, 71.4; and Arkansas, 65.3.

Despite being regressive, the popularity of sales taxes increases with the state legislatures. In 1969, South Carolina raised the general sales rate from 3 to 4 per cent, and Texas, from 3 to 3.25 per cent. Both states also raised the selective sales tax on cigarettes, from 5 to 6 cents in South Carolina, and from 11 to 15.5 cents per pack in Texas.

Proposals to increase the sales tax rate have been suggested for Georgia and North Carolina in 1970.

Some relief could be provided by the use of tax credits. Dr. Galambos notes that Colorado permits a $7 credit against family state income and a $7 rebate per person where no income tax is owed. In the Virginia gubernatorial campaign last fall, a tax credit was discussed to give relief from the sales tax on food.

NATIONALLY, states with income taxes derive 22.4 per cent of their revenue from income taxes. But in the South only Virginia, with 30.3 per cent, exceeds this level. Tennessee receives but 1.8 per cent of its financing from income taxes; Mississippi, 3.4; Louisiana, 5.2; Arkansas, 11.0; Georgia, 15.1; South Carolina, 15.8; Alabama, 12.0; and North Carolina, 22.4 per cent.

Moreover, the state income taxes are not "progressive." Dr. Galambos points out that not only rates but the income bracket where progression stops must be considered..

In Alabama and Mississippi, progression stops at $5,000; the cutoff point is $10,000 for Georgia and the Carolinas. In Virginia it is $20,000, with $25,000 for Arkansas, and $50,000 in Louisiana. Tennessee has an income tax only on interest and dividends.

Dr. Galambos is also critical of local personal income taxes which are often just "payroll taxes." This is regressive, since the typical municipal payroll tax levies a flat rate on wages and salaries of individuals and the net profits of unincorporated businesses. The payroll tax does not touch interest, rent or dividends. A genuine local income tax, she asserts, would include interest, dividends and capital gains.

THE SOUTH lures industry with its low business tax load. Due largely to its severance taxes, Louisiana leads the Southern states in total revenue derived from all business sources, 45.1 per cent, or nearly triple the national average of 17 per cent.

But Florida obtains only 9.7 per cent of its revenue from business. Climbing upward from Florida in the amount of revenue from business are Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, North Carolina, Texas and Louisiana.

The property tax, which plays a small role in state finances, nevertheless accounted for 66 per cent of all local government revenue in 1967. Southern property taxes are low, compared to the national per capita average of $132.81..

Arkansas is highest with $113.23; lowest is Alabama, at $34.12. When viewed as the amount per $1,000 of personal income, the national average is $45.27. Only Virginia and Florida exceed $40; Alabama is lowest, $16.65.

DR. GALAMBOS found that local governments in the South use service charges and fees far more than other sections of the nation. Nationally, such fees account for 23.5 per cent of local revenue; But Alabama obtains 42.9 per cent from this source, declining to 21.9 per cent in Virginia. The economist concludes that the dependence on service charges is due to "the failure of most Southern states to permit local governments to levy taxes sufficient to obtain needed revenues."

Three major approaches would tend to correct these inequities in the South's tax structures, Dr. Galambos concludes:

- —Increased use of the income tax with more progressive rates at both state and local government levels.
- —Since sales and property taxes are not likely to be abandoned, tax credits and rebates offer an alternative to offset the burden on low-income families.
- —Equalized property assessments would distribute the tax burden more equitably and raise the revenue potential.

[1] Cities are ranked from high to low on the basis of local direct taxes as a percentage of gross income.

[2] Real estate tax estimates are based on a home with a $19,000 market value. Amounts were originally computed for 1966 on the basis of effective property tax rate data for selected major local areas, reported by the U.S. Bureau of the Census in Taxable Property Values, Vol. 2 of the 1967 Census of Governments. The 1966 estimate for the largest city in each State was reviewed by a knowledgeable official in each such city and updated to 1968 for this presentation. In a number of instances, local estimates for 1968 deviated significantly from the 1966 difference was at least one-third in the following cities: Newark, Detroit, Anchorage, Charlotte, and Atlanta.

Your Tax Burden

THE TAX reform bill may bring some relief to John Q. Public, but it has been criticized by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and others as taking away federal revenue needed for welfare, education and other programs. Some foresee higher local taxes to finance needed services. Just how much a "typical family" of four pays in the largest city of each state is found in this table from "Urban America and the Federal System," published by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

Police 'Over-Use' Hit at Augusta

Journ. Const 6-7-70

By JACK NELSON
Los Angeles Times News Service

Police gunfire that last month killed six blacks at Augusta and two at Jackson State College reflected a national "escalation of animosity and official violence" aimed at dissent, the Southern Regional Council has declared in a report.

The council, an Atlanta-based civil rights research group that long has studied racial violence and police reaction to it, said the killings "occurred in an atmosphere of mostility encouraged by inflammatory statements of leaders . . . which exacerbate tensions between groups and which seem to approve the over-use of police and military force. Goveernors of states, congressmen and even the President and the vice president have been criticized for such utterances."

The 76-page report said President Nixon's public comments after the killing of four Kent State University students on May 4, preceding the Augusta and Jackson State incidents, was an "abdication of responsibility."

THE REPORT cited the President's comment that the Kent State incident "should remind us all once again that when dissent turns to violence it invites tragedy."

The council noted that after the Feb. 8, 1968, incident in which highway patrolmen killed three black students and injured 27 others at Orangeburg's South Carolina State College, it issued a lengthy report warning that get-tough policies by law enforcement "carry into highly volatile situations new elements of danger. Order must be maintained, but the duty of society and of police is that it be so with a minimum of force.

"At least suggested — in Orangeburg and evident in other situations that have arisen in the South and other parts of the nation—is the frightening spectacle of an over-escalation of police and military force."

POINTS in common between the Augusta and Jackson State incidents which are "applicable to such tragedies across the nation," the council reported, include:

—Failure to cope fully with long-neglected problems of racism and poverty.

—Death and injuries from heavy caliber ammunition. "The nation needs to demand and somehow effectively enforce a prohibition on police and the National Guard from resort to gunfire where less lethal methods would prevail. Never should be tolerated random firing without given orders, without warnings, without conventional, nonviolent methods of crowd control."

—Hostile police attitudes toward black people and toward a general principle of the right of protest, and ineffective riot control training by police.

—Unanswered critical questions about what happened, and why.

"Perhaps the nation needs to consider an investigative body —something more than a temporary 'blue ribbon' committee as proposed by the present administration," the council declared. "Representatives on it of the classes of citizens who consider themselves victims of police oppression would seem mandatory."

Soviets Break Own Record In Space Time

From Wire Reports

The Soyuz 9 spaceship, with two men on board, broke the Soviet record for time in space Saturday.

Valery Bykovsky remained up just 54 minutes short of five days in the Vostok 5 in 1963. Cosmonauts Andrian Nikolayev and Vitaly Sevastianov matched that record Saturday and their flight continued.

No official word has been given on how long Soyuz 9 will be up. It seems meant to determine human reactions to long periods in space. Reports Saturday referred to continuing experiments on board.

The Soyuz 9, launched Monday, still has a long way to go to match the American record for time in space. Gemini 7 logged 13 days, 18 hours and 35 minutes in 1965.

Reverse Trend Shown in Integration Survey

Southern Negro Youths in White Schools Voice Separatist Views, Group Reports

SRC

BY KENNETH REICH
Times Staff Writer

ATLANTA — The Southern Regional Council Wednesday reported that a survey it made of black students in four school districts affected by integration orders showed the students "were clearly being edged toward separatist views" by their experiences in the integration process.

What is happening does "not seem to be a mass embracing of separatism," said the 46-page report. "When the students did talk separatism, they did not seem to do so out of intellectualized doctrine. Few spoke in the harsh, anti-white, anti-human terms of the violence-prone street militant."

But taken as a whole, the report continued, many black students in Mobile, Ala.; Charlotte, N.C.; and Greenville and Beaufort, S.C., had been soured on integration by "their humiliating experiences in desegregated classrooms, the sense of their own government's betrayal in enforcement and finally . . . the influence of 'black consciousness' thought that has been articulated by some black leaders for some time now."

Hoped It Worked

In some cases, however, black students voiced almost plaintive hopes that integration could be made to work.

"Integration of students is a good thing, if it can work," said one Greenville youngster. "It just has to work. But one thing I dressed one way and they are dressed another way and he has to go back and dress like them. He can't wear his Afro (hair) in a white school. There are rules at . . . schools that black people cannot wear Afros, cannot wear beards and dashikis. Your hair has to be not over so many inches, you can't wear dashikis unless it's tucked in you pants."

Another Mobile student said, "You can't take a black student out of a black school where he has been all of his life and throw him in a white school for one semester and expect him to pass.

Need to Adapt

"You can't do that. You've got to give him a chance to adapt to the white man's way. Anyway, you'll turn him white, white, white. Teachers are turning children white because they have to adapt to the white man's way, not our way."

Particularly in Mobile, the students exhibited little faith in the democratic process.

"You mean that all men were created equal?" asked one. "I don't believe this, because when Thomas Jefferson wrote it he did not intend it for the black man because black men were rated not as men but as maybe one-quarter human, or equal to a horse or a cow. Historically, it was not intended for the black man."

Hoped It Worked

In some cases, however, black students voiced almost plaintive hopes that integration could be made to work.

"Integration of students is a good thing, if it can work," said one Greenville youngster. "It just has to work. But one thing I don't think is too fair, some of the black schools weren't too well equipped. So before they made the change, they went around to the Negro schools painting them up for the white children.

"If the black schools were not right in the first place, then how come they built them like that?" the youngster asked.

Another black student recalled, "When I went to Greenville Junior High, the speech teacher was very old and she would say, 'All the niggers stand up,' and that made us mad and there is still prejudice about it."

Grades Lower

Other blacks complained their grades were lower at their new schools. "I found that students that were making C's went down to D's and students who were making A's went down to Bs'," said one. "The teachers were never satisfied. They would always find fault in our papers. We could never write a perfect paper . . ."

"I say, let's start separatism," said one black Mobile student among many in that city who voiced support for a recent proposal by the Congress of Racial Equality to establish separate white-and black-controlled school districts there.

The interviews indicated that most Mobile blacks believe white schools rob blacks of their identify and make them feel inferior.

Loses 2 Ways

One youngster put it this way: "OK, the teacher looks at him in the morning, one little black kid, and to make him feel good he says 'Good Morning' to him and says nothing to the other folks and that's turning the white folks against him and at the same time it's making him feel inferior.

"He may be walking down the hall and they look at him and he is rules at . . . schools that black people cannot wear Afros, cannot wear beards and dashikis. Your hair has to be not over so many inches, you can't wear dashikis unless it's tucked in you pants."

Another Mobile student said, "You can't take a black student out of a black school where he has been all of his life and throw him in a white school for one semester and expect him to pass.

Need to Adapt

"You can't do that. You've got to give him a chance to adapt to the white man's way. Anyway, you'll turn him white, white, white. Teachers are turning children white because they have to adapt to the white man's way, not our way."

Particularly in Mobile, the students exhibited little faith in the democratic process.

"You mean that all men were created equal?" asked one. "I don't believe this, because when Thomas Jefferson wrote it he did not intend it for the black man because black men were rated not as men but as maybe one-quarter human, or equal to a horse or a cow. Historically, it was not intended for the black man."

A Beaufort, S.C., girl who had attended a white high school last year declared, "I was alienated at Beaufort High because I was black and I was there. But at Robert Smalls (a former black high school), I could relate to masses of black people. I valued this more than I valued integration."

Reject Black Schools

At Beaufort, with massive integration to be implemented this fall, all the students from the two former black high schools are being bussed to the previously predominantly white Beaufort High, which will have to go on double sessions. The school board is refusing to use either of the black schools for whites.

"They should have zoned us," said one black high school junior. "Instead we have massive bussing and double sessions . . . It's always black people who are bussed to white schools. The white administrators think their kids are too good to go to black schools. The white man feels the black man is not good enough to be where he is. That's the truth of it."

Defense of the integration ideal, however, came from several Charlotte youngsters.

Lauds Integration

"Integration is worth the trauma," said one. "You know you are achieving, you're getting somewhere, you see some light, some hope. You can prove to the white man that the black man can comprehend."

"Whites have a lot to learn from association with us," said another. "It's better if they learn early. The blacks need it, too. I know too many blacks who say they hate all white people. Integration is good."

But another student remarked, "If there's got to be integration, I'd like to see the white people suffer, let 'em all feel the pinch and pain."

Integration Pushes Blacks Into Views of Separatism

By KENNETH REICH
Los Angeles Times News Service

The Southern Regional Council in Atlanta reports that a survey of black students in four school districts affected by integration orders showed the students were being edged toward separatist views by their experiences in the integration process.

What is happening does "not seem to be a mass embracing of separatism," the 46-page report said.

"When the students did talk separatism, they did not seem to do so out of intellectualized doctrine. Few spoke in the harsh, antiwhite, antihuman terms of the violence-prone street militant."

BUT TAKEN as a whole, the report said, many black students in the cities of Mobile, Ala., Charlotte, N.C., and Greenville and Beaufort, S.C., had been soured on integration by "their humiliating experiences in desegregated classrooms, the sense of their own government's betrayal in enforcement and finally . . . the influence of black consciousness that has been articulated by some black leaders."

In some cases, however, black students voiced almost plaintive hopes that integration could be made to work.

"Integration of students is a good thing, if it can work," one Greenville youngster said.

But as one black student recalled:

"When I went to Greenville Junior High, the speech teacher was very old and she would say, 'All the niggers stand up,' and that made us mad and there is still prejudice about it."

OTHER BLACKS complain their grades were lower at their new schools.

"I found that students that were making Cs went down to Ds and students who were making As went down to Bs," one said.

"The teachers were never satisfied. They would always find fault in our papers. We could never write a perfect paper. They would always find fault in them."

Many Mobile students voiced support for a proposal by the Congress of Racial Equality to establish separate white-and-black-controlled school districts there.

Most Mobile blacks said they believed white schools rob blacks of their identity and make them feel inferior.

A BEAUFORT GIRL who had attended a white high school last year said:

Another Charlotte student said:

"I believe integration has to work. If the parents and adults would only stay out of it and let the kids work it out. It's the only way to advance . . . through education in the white man's way."

The Southern Regional Council is a foundation-funded human relations group based here which conducts studies throughout the South.

CAMPUS MOD SQUAD

HOUSTON (AP)—Campus policemen at the University of Houston will exchange the traditional police uniform this fall for red blazers with dark trousers and black ties.

An emblem on the pocket of the blazer will identify them as campus officers.

The new uniform costs $60, about $190 less than the old garb.

Security Chief Larry W. Fultz said he hoped to have campus security cars repainted red and white, the school's colors. He said on the back of each car will be the words "Pride, Integrity and Goodwill."

The initials, he points out, spell "pig," militants' name for policemen.

Civil Rights in South: Quieter 70's

Glamor Fades---
Not Nitty-Gritty

By JIM LEESON

DURING the decade of the 60's, it was obvious where the civil rights "action" was. The impact of the firehoses and police dogs in Birmingham, the confrontation at the Selma bridge, the open resistance by white parents and public officials to school desegregation — all held the center stage on radio and television, and on the front pages of the newspapers.

JIM LEESON is editor of the Race Relations Reporter, published by the Race Relations Information Center, Nashville.

A special correspondent for The Journal Forum, Leeson's report on the changing civil rights scene includes information provided by two officials in Atlanta, still involved in the day-to-day struggle.

The names "King" and "Kennedy" led a list of men who provided inspirational leadership for the movement on a national basis. Slogans and acronyms identified with the various fronts of the civil rights movement were readily identifiable to large segments of the nation.

WHERE TODAY are the causes, the leaders, the slogans, the organizations that have an image and impact comparable to those of the 60's?

Or, for that matter, where have the followers of the leaders gone, the blacks who once marched in the streets, the white liberals who openly supported changing the South? Is the civil rights movement in the 70's dead . . . or just different. And what has caused the change?

Obviously, those are major questions that draw different answers.

The drama of civil rights in the South during the 1960's contrasts sharply with the quieter 1970's, causing some to consider the civil rights movement as being dead, or at least at a standstill.

A variety of reasons are cited. Another view is that the civil rights movement, through a natural evolvement, has entered a second stage that is less visible but just as essential. Those same reasons that can be said to have caused the "death" cused on the white liberal, using the more scholarly approach of research and information. Lewis, who is black, now heads the Voter Education Project, whose primary goal is a more direct activism — registration of Southern blacks.

Where today are the causes, the leaders, the slogans, the organizations that have an image

John Lewis has experienced the whole spectrum of civil rights activity in the South, beginning with the Nashville sit-ins in 1960, continuing with the Student Non-Violent Co-Ordinating Committee (SNCC) across the South, and now serving as head of VEP in Atlanta. Lewis believes that the civil rights movement has not died but has developed into its natural second stage.

"WE NO longer have the national symbols, the national leaders of the thrusts that you witnessed during the early and mid-60's," Lewis said recently. "But the spirit of the movement and the concern, for the most part, are still there. It's the concern of local leaders and indigenous organizations through the region.

"Although we don't have 'Snick' and 'Slick' (SCLC — Southern Christian Leadership Conference) and CORE (Congress of Racial Equality) working throughout the Deep South as they once did, the spirit of the movement is still very much alive in the concern of the people," Lewis said. "It was good to have those civil rights organizations to go through the South to inspire the people to act.

However, Dr. King and CORE and the others couldn't remain in the community forever. The Project but the emphasis will remain on the basic goal of local voter registration of blacks. VEP makes small grants only to local, indigenous groups across the South.

"We probably have greater contact with local groups than any other organization and I see us as broadening that base of contact," Lewis said. VEP has funded its first Mexican-American group in Texas and is planning to help register some low-income whites in Tennessee.

AS AN organization primarily for white liberals, Southern Regional Council is concerned about its role in the new stage of the region's civil rights activity. SRC currently has a special review committee studying how the organization should operate and what its goals should be.

SRC's executive director, Paul Anthony, says that "one of the most pertinent questions today is, 'Where is the white liberal, what is he doing?' " He continued:

"You could argue, for all purposes, that SRC is a middle-class outfit, both white and black members. You could argue that we are—as we have traditionally been—particularly conscious of

A variety of reasons are cited. Another view is that the civil rights movement, through a natural evolvement, has entered a second stage that is less visible but just as essential. Those same reasons that can be said to have caused the "death" of the movement are considered in this instance only to hamper the effectiveness of current civil rights activity.

Where today are the causes, the leaders, the slogans, the organizations that have an image and impact comparable to those of the 60's? Or, for that matter, where have the followers of the leaders gone? . . .

Some of the reasons that are said to have influenced the "death" or the "effectiveness" of civil rights are:

— The Nixon administration. Despite the administration's protests that it has received little credit for making civil rights accomplishments, President Nixon, Atty. Gen. Mitchell and lesser members of the administration are still seen as "unsympathetic." Some critics of the administration go a step further and say that the government deliberately works to hinder advancement of civil rights.

— Black militancy. Beginning in the latter part of the 60's, "white liberal" and "integration" came into disfavor among many blacks and the more militant blacks eventually rejected any association with whites. Even some of the less militant blacks found themselves being rejected.

— Loss of leaders. The deaths of Martin Luther King and John and Robert Kennedy left civil rights activists without leaders who provided the encouragement and inspiration necessary for a regional or nationwide movement.

— Competing issues. The antiwar movement has attracted many who might otherwise be active in civil rights activities. And the national war effort in Vietnam has diverted money and public interest from the civil rights issue. More recently, such issues as ecology and sexual freedom entered into competition. And the civil rights picture has broadened to include all parts of the country.

— Federal co-optation. With the advent of large spending programs on poverty, education, community action and civil rights, the government hired large numbers of activists, at considerably higher salaries. A human relations worker making $4,000 or $5,000 in the 60's could easily get a federal job paying at least double that amount, if not more. The two-fold effect was to bring an activist into the establishment and to accustom him to a standard of living that would make him dependent upon the system.

The government openings scooped up a considerable portion of the civil rights leadership, from the local level on up. One civil rights activist who stayed with a private organization reports that it takes "three or four drinks" for some of the former activists now with the government to admit they would like to quit "if they could find a job paying that kind of money."

— Tight money. Federal legislation has made foundations more careful about the types of programs eligible for grants. And economic conditions generally have limited the amount of money available.

WHETHER THESE conditions have "killed" or merely "injured" the region's civil rights movement, many of the organizations and the people of the 60's are still alive and kicking for change.

Two of these civil rights activists are Paul Anthony and John Lewis. Anthony is white and heads the Southern Regional Council, headquartered in Atlanta, a group that admittedly has fo-

"It was good to have those civil rights organizations to go through the South to inspire the people to act.

However, Dr. King and CORE and the others couldn't remain in the community forever. The people had to act on their own.

Lewis sees that civil rights action now is the "tedious, nitty-gritty" work at the local level, bringing into practice the legal principles that were won by the mass marches and protests. "Without the drama, without the press, it's that type of work that will have a real impact on county and city government, on the lives of the people."

"Selma, Birmingham, St. Augustine, Albany —there was no master plan or blueprint on how to move from one step to another. But out of this crisis, what has developed is a new face of the movement—concern over political power, economic development, a great interest on the part of the people," Lewis said.

IN THE majority-black communities, such as Hancock County, Ga.; Jefferson County, Miss.; or Greene County, Ala., blacks found that even with control of the elective offices, unless they gained economic power the white people still remained in control, Lewis explained. The "civil rights" goal then becomes one of providing the black elected officials with technical assistance on how to establish an economic base, how to bring in jobs.

"We must provide them with something that the people can get hold of," Lewis declared. "If not, they will have the same kind of frustration as under the whites. And whites would say, 'Look, they elected blacks and they couldn't produce.' "

'We no longer have the national symbols, the national leaders or the thrusts that you witnessed during the early and mid-60's. But the spirit of the movement and the concern, for the most part, are still there.'

Where have the white liberals gone, the churchwomen, the wives of businessmen, the members of an "old family" who participated in the civil rights of the sixties? "They're around," Lewis said, "but for some reason they are out of it now. More and more, they are doing things on their own.

"After the Selma crisis, we had a period where more and more people would say, 'I will do something as an individual.' There still is some fear of being identified as a 'white liberal.' But they say, 'I don't have to make a statement; I will just do; I will act.' "

IN THE whole struggle, the federal government of the 60's played the role of "sympathetic referee," Lewis said. "Today, people—black and white—don't see the government as a sympathetic referee. Local people feel completely out of it as far as the federal government is concerned. The federal government is not responding."

The King and Kennedy assassinations also had their effect on the spirit of the people, Lewis believes. "The little people—again, black and white —identified with them. They had a greater degree of hope."

These developments and new conditions have some implications for Lewis's Voter Education

We probably have great[illegible] groups than any other organization and I see us as broadening that base of contact," Lewis said. VEP has funded its first Mexican-American group in Texas and is planning to help register some low-income whites in Tennessee.

"You could argue, for all purposes, that SRC is a middle-class outfit, both white and black members. You could argue that we are—as we have traditionally been—particularly conscious of the white community as our constituency and, I repeat, that is not our whole constituency. . . . But we have tried to reach the white opinion makers and the white leadership."

. . . Southern Regional Council is concerned about its role in the new stage of the region's civil rights activity. SRC currently has a special review committee studying how the organization should operate and what its goals should be.

Although SRC formally ended its membership program in the mid-50's, the organization has provided financial and technical assistance to state human relations councils over the years. "In 15 years, SRC spent more than $2 million on locally controlled, inter-racial movements," Anthony said.

"Where they now are vigorous, they are vigorous largely because they have, for all purposes, given up any emphasis on encouraging an inter-racial harmony per se. They have adopted a constituency far more specific and controllable. The best example is the Georgia Council on Human Relations, which remains a statewide inter-racial effort but has a vigorous young black man as its director. Its sole program is black economic development in Hancock County, Ga."

BLACKS ARE in political control in that black-majority county and the economic development programs there include a catfish farm cooperative, a loan fund for black businessmen, a black theater and a cement-block factory. The Georgia Council will receive grants totalling $1 million this year, according to Anthony, and will spend "99 per cent on that one project in Hancock County." This will amount to more than all the other state councils together will receive, he noted.

"Southern Regional Council came into existence symbolically as a body of Southerners, white and black, and has had an overriding purpose during its lifespan to integrate the institutions of the region," Anthony said. "They have attempted to do this—and still do—largely through having white and black Southerners persuading those who control institutions or make policy, to integrate."

Anthony reports that there currently is a "vocal minority" opposed to this role for his organization. "A majority of the staff and council leadership still wants SRC to have the purpose of integration as its overwhelming purpose. We want to be the influence that causes others to make this happen," he says.

BUT OPPOSITION to this role comes from "young blacks" on to "foundation officials," who cynically refer to such a role as "teasipping" and "not where the action is." Anthony notes that "there is precious little place any more in government or in the foundations for the gentlemanly conniver."

He has far more difficulty raising foundation support for his $750,000 budget than he would have for raising the same amount for a local action project.

"If SRC wanted to be an action agency, we could do so." But he is convinced that both approaches—the "gentlemanly conniver" and that of an action program—are necessary. "If everyone jumps on the single approach, we will be making a mistake," he said.

SRC Workers View Youth As Main Desegregation Key

By HARMON PERRY

Three representatives of the Southern Regional Council (SRC) Wednesday criticized the pace of school desegregation in the South and apathy among those who could bring about smooth and successful integration.

However pessimistic Pat Watters, Clarence Wright, and Leon Hall were about some of the incidents that have resulted where desegregation has occurred, they appeared optimistic about the future because of the growing signs of understanding between black and white youths.

DURING a panel discussion before the weekly Hungry Club forum, the SRC trio said the success of school desegregation will come because young students are beginning to move against racism and other things they once did not understand.

Their assessment of the school situation in the South and their predictions of what to expect is based mainly on their findings during several weeks of observing school operations, mediating groups of black and white students, and listening to what students have to say.

School administrators and other adults would do well to listen to what young people are saying and give them a chance, said Watters, a former newspaper editor who spent several weeks studying the school situation in Charlotte.

"Young black and white students indicate an hardening attitude of wanting to work things out and get an education, but adults, from the Nixon administration on down, have not lived up to the promise," declared Watters.

WATTERS SAID there has been more school desegregation in the South than most people realize, but at the same time not as much as the administration says. "Most of the desegregation has come through court orders."

Youth is saying that unless adults take a two-way look at the school situation and listen to the young, there is danger of widespread disorder, Watters warned.

Wright, a youth community organizer for SRC, said adults dominate and take the lead in Georgia schools "with nobody listening to the young people."

Civil Rights Group Eyes New Policy

By Philip D. Carter
Washington Post Foreign Service

ATLANTA, April 24 — The days have passed when the Southern whites and blacks who worked for the Southern Regional Council couldn't dine together legally in downtown Atlanta. Now both friends and officials of the liberal civil rights-oriented organization are asking whether the times haven't passed by the SRC itself.

In its 27 years, the council has functioned largely, as executive director Paul Anthony puts it, as "a behind-the-scenes influence on public policy" in the areas of race relations and regional development.

The group's commitment to racial integration attracted violent abuse from some white politicians during the '50s and early '60s. This year, by contrast, two newly elected Southern governors asked the SRC for help in planning policy for their states.

Despite—or perhaps because of that kind of modest success, "to an awful lot of people we aren't where the action is," Anthony says.

Today, the SRC's 100-member board met in Atlanta to discuss a new role for the council as a "mission-oriented" organization.

Announcement of the group's decision is likely in the next few days.

A special urgency under lay the day-long closed discussions. The Ford Foundation, source of about half the council's annual $858,000 budget, has warned the group that it might stop the funds next year.

Some Ford officials are known to feel that the SRC, which it has helped support since 1965, was concentrating too much of the energy of its 30-member staff on projects of marginal importance.

In recent years, the staff has dealt with the full spectrum of Southern social and economic problems, from urban school integration to the northward migration of blacks displaced from the South's farms.

There are two regular council publications — a quarterly, "New South," and a monthly, "South Today." In addition, the information and research staff publishes periodic lengthy reports on particular Southern problems.

During the height of the civil rights movement in the South, the SRC was directly involved, through its Voter Education Project (VEP), with the enfranchisement of thousands of blacks.

Last year, however, VEP became a separate organization, largely because of the strictures of new federal tax laws. That move left the council with only a few lightly staffed and funded field projects in the areas of school desegregation, housing and manpower development.

A special review committee was formed last year under the chairmanship of Frank Smith, a former Mississippi congressman who now serves as a director of the Tennessee Valley Authority. In a recent memorandum, he presented a "consensus" recommendation that the council "build upon its experience and its strengths, its reputation and its channels of communication with social activists, to become a 'mission-oriented' organization."

This proposal, which was presented to the board today, stressed creation of special-issue task forces like consumer activist Ralph Nader's "Nader's Raiders." These groups, drawn from council employees, council members and outside experts, would serve essentially as fact-finding bodies.

The purpose of the task forces, said Smith, would be to "support or initiate litigation, to provide documentation for investigative bodies, commissions, legislative committees, to furnish ammunition for local action groups and to prod influential leadership that has failed to take action in the best interests of its constituency."

Southern Regional Council Role-Change Discussed

Council Charges Racism Prevents Assistance To Poor

The State 5/2/71

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)—Racial discrimination and poorly written federal guidelines are prohibiting needy rural families from getting housing assistance, according to a report issued by the Southern Regional Council.

The SRC charged that "traditional racism" in the Farmers Home Administration and its parent organization, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, prohibits fair dispersal of loans to needy blacks.

The charges appeared in the council's monthly publication, "South Today."

Loan funds of the FBA have been greatly increased in recent years, the report said. But it contends the money, "like the majority of other rural loan packages, is not designed to reach the poor."

The report maintains that rural America has 60 to 70 per cent of the nation's substandard housing and that "a large percentage of this is in the South."

It contends the housing blight continues to exist in large part because of the FHA "is superconscious of the desires of Congress and super-sensitive to the charge that it is giving money away in a socialistic fashion."

The report contends that persons whose incomes fall below the federally defined poverty level are excluded from eligibility in the most important parts of the housing program.

The SRC labels the U.S. Department of Agriculture as "an extremely conservative branch of the government which has been firmly in control of the less visionary members of Congress since shortly after World War II."

WANTED—Saint and martyr. Must be willing to catch hell from all directions. Must have hide thick as rhino and be sensitive and litmus paper. Answer to 100 liberal Southerners, be responsible to nation, live up to strong legacy. Other duties include raising funds, acting like Ralph Nader, leading civil rights groups, appeasing staff of 30, and running annual meeting. Applicant will understand job is impossible and has no future.

That want ad could run this morning for a new executive director of the Southern Regional Council, the nation's oldest Southern-based civil rights organization.

Paul Anthony, the executive director for the last six years, is leaving. Like the four directors who preceded him, Anthony leaves an exhausted and care-worn man. And like the others, he leaves an impossible job behind.

Housed in a warren of offices frequently piled high with cardboard boxes and decorated by quilts carried on such things as the Selma march, the SRC has come to another turning point.

Not only must it vacate its quarters at 5 Forsyth Street (because the building will be demolished this fall). It also must embark on a new set of goals.

Anthony believes the SRC should continue to stay one step away from the angry direct involvement of other civil rights groups. Some of the foundations which sponsor the SRC reportedly hope to push it to more activism.

Anothony always has pushed research and publishing. Some of the money-givers apparently want Nader-type bulldozing.

These conflicts appear to have something to do with his decision to leave the SRC when a successor is chosen. Some sources say the decision on a successor will not come very quickly.

Brave words are being spoken about the council as the change in command occurs. Dr. Raymond Wheeler, president of the SRC, said "prospects for the future of the organization are indeed bright. We have an unusually well-informed and active board and executive committee, a talented staff, and new and exciting plans for applying our special skills and concerns to the problems of the Southern region during the 1970s."

The words may be braver than the outlook warrants. It is no secret that the Ford Foundation has applied real pressure for changes in the program. And the lesson of that is clear: Anytime a foundation begins to apply tough pressure, the organization is in serious trouble of cracking wide open.

Stories circulate that Ford is pushing to have SRC move into fields entirely unrelated to civil rights. They appear to be intent on getting more reports on pollution and planning, as well as other fields where a variety of organizations already are at work.

Only time will tell whether these new goals are the ones to be pursued.

But one thing is clear. Anthony will make a valuable addition to somebody's staff. He said, "I do not consider that I am leaving the Southern Regional Council. No one committed to its purposes ever does."

At 43, Anthony will move on to some related field. His predecessors have joined foundations and faculties. He probably will make a similar connection.

As for a successor, the want ad is accurate. The job is one that seeks the man—for no man in his right mind would apply for it.

End Near for No. 5 Forsyth Street, Atlanta, Called Place at Which 'New South' Begins

By JAMES T. WOOTEN

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Aug. 20—When Gunnar Myrdal returned to the South this year after an absence of nearly three decades, one of his appointments was at No. 5 Forsyth Street, an aging office building deep in the downtown core of this city. "So, this is where it begins," the celebrated Swedish sociologist muttered to himself as he strode into the little lobby. "Where what begins?" an acquaintance inquired. Dr. Myrdal, author of "An American Dilemma," a widely read volume on race relations in this country, harumphed professorially.

The Talk of No. 5 Forsyth Street

"Why, the New South, young man," he replied. "The brand new, American South."

While some deny the existence of any such region and others pinpoint its origins elsewhere, many knowledgeable Southerners believe the cutting edge of much substantive change in this part of the nation has been honed in recent years inside the dirty, old building at No. 5 Forsyth.

A list of its past and present tenants reads like the index to a scholarly tome on Southern liberalism.

The Southern Regional Council, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, the National Sharecropper's Fund, the Atlanta Council on Human Relations, the National Domestic Worker's Union, the Law Students Civil Rights Research Council, the Voter Education Project and the Institute for Southern Studies have all been quartered there at one time or another in the last dozen years.

Moreover, the black and white men and women who have labored within its walls—lawyers, writers, researchers, preachers, teachers, philosophers, polemicists, politicians and propagandists—have created a flood of projects, campaigns, lawsuits, books, panphlets and papers whose impact on the South can only be described as substantial.

As a result of their efforts, schools and a variety of other institutions have been integrated, a million black people registered to vote, elections won and lost, white politicians tempered, black candidates encouraged and supported, and popular racial traditions challenged and changed.

One of the most significant campaigns created and supervised in the building was the Voter Education Project's drive in the mid-sixties that added more than a million black Southerners to the voting list. Another was the suit by the American Civil Liberties Union that brought about the capture of nearly every political office in Greene County, Ala., by black candidates.

Consequently, the attitudes of Atlantans toward the five-story building have always been mixed.

"I think of that old wreck as a sanctuary for renegades who insist on telling the truth," the late Ralph E. McGill, publisher of The Atlanta Constitution, once wrote in his front-page column.

"Sooner or later, the people who work there figure in most of what is important to the South and much of what is important to the nation," Julian Bond, the black legislator-lecturer, once observed.

"Phooey," was Lester G. Maddox's opinon when he was Governor of Georgia. "The whole place is crawling with subversives. It ought to to be torn down and paved over."

That is exactly what is planned now for No. 5 Forsyth Street, not because Mr. Maddox wants it that way but because the space the building now occupies has been chosen as the site for a parking garage or, as some insist, for a new bank.

In a city studded with modern jewels of stone and steel and glass, its disappearance from the downtown panorama will no doubt be a positive contribution to the over-all architectural quality of the area.

On the ground floor are a jewelry store, a finance company, a fast service print shop and a restaurant that recently closed its doors. Its 60-year-old brick facade, respectably red in its younger years, now wears a sooty cloak, and its tandem elevators creak and squeak arthritically as they creep up and down within its innards.

All around No. 5 Forsyth, rising high above it, are other skyscrapers and bank buildings, symbols of Atlanta's downtown affluence. Thus in a way the grubby old building stands as a reminder that Atlanta was not really built during the administration of former Mayor Ivan Allen Jr., his recent book and the Chamber of Commerce notwithstanding.

But whatever its esthetic deficiencies, old No. 5 is remembered by dozens who have inhabited it at one time or another for other reasons.

Vernon Jordan, newly appointed as Whitney Young's successor at the helm of the National Urban League, remembers it as the place where he and most everybody else in the building were photographed every day by state police officers checking up on the Voter Education Project.

"It got to be kind of a joke with all of us," Mr. Jordan said. "You know, the girls would say they hoped the guy with the camera got their good side, and all that."

Other former residents of the building who have assumed influential positions in the world of charitable or civil rights oganizations are Harold Fleming, who now heads the Potomac Institute, and Leslie Dunbar, director of the Field Foundation.

Mr. Dunbar's successor as executive director of the Southern Regional Council, Paul Anthony, remembers the problem created in the council's offices when the board of directors of the Field Foundation, one of the council's benefactors, came to Atlanta for an integrated dinner.

"That was back in the early 'sixties, when things weren't near as loose as they are now," Mr. Anthony, who will soon resign, recalled. "We looked all over this town for a place that would serve a meal to black and white people at the same table in the same room at the same time—and there just wasn't one."

So the meal was catered to No. 5 Forsyth and Mrs. Marshall Field, Adlai Stevenson, George W. Ball and the rest of the board sat down to dinner amid the clutter of the council's offices.

But soon now, the scene of such memories will be wiped from the map of Atlanta, and the last remaining tenants are trying to arrange for their new quarters. At a conference last week between staff members of the Southern Regional Council and the American Civil Liberties Union, some of their problems came to light.

"The space in that building we looked at is quite suitable for both of us," Morris Brown, an A.C.L.U. lawyer, commented.

"Well, then, why don't we take it?" Mr. Anthony asked.

"Seems the owners aren't quite sure they want us both there—I mean in tandem like this," Mr. Brown answered. "Maybe one of us, but both of us together has them a little nervous."

"What about the other building?" Mr. Anthony asked.

"Well, it looks as though the A.C.L.U. would have to be on the second floor," the lawyer replied.

"What's wrong with that?"

"Well, I was thinking about bombs, you know," Mr. Brown said.

"Shoot, the fire department can get to you that much quicker if you're on the second floor," Mr. Anthony concluded.

Inaction On Hunger 'Incredible'

Doctor Puts Blame On Congressmen

By CHEREE BRIGGS
Knight Newspapers Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — A leading Charlotte internist — and a nationally recognized authority on hunger — says he finds it incredible that four years after hunger in America became an issue, no final solutions are in sight.

These strong words were written by Dr. Raymond Wheeler, who has testified numerous times before congressional investigating committees and appeared twice on network television. He puts the blame for the hunger that exists in America — but especially the hunger in the 11 southern states — squarely on Congress.

In an article written for The New South, quarterly publication of the Southern Regional Council, of which Dr. Wheeler is president, the doctor calls hunger a comparatively simple problem for this country.

"THE CONGRESS of the United States could solve this problem in 30 days were it not so locked in by the mossback tradition of personal greed and insensitivity to human need. It seems incredible that, after four years, no final solutions are in sight."

Now Dr. Wheeler has assembled a number of statistical studies (some of which

"By not feeding our children adequately, we may be negating our efforts to educate them and we may be creating problems for the future."

are annual federal reports — others from special reports and experts) and coupled them with his poignant account of the bloated stomachs and the countless diseases that plague the poor.

Their children are born hungry — and often stay that way. And more of their children die than do those born to families of average or higher incomes.

FOR EVERY 1,000 babies born in the United States, 20.7 die before their first birthday. In the south, the picture is far more bleak.

In Mississippi in 1967, 512 white babies (22.6 per thousand) died, as compared to 1,122 black babies (47.4).

Behind the numbers, Dr. Wheeler's report reflects the social impact hunger may have on crime and unemployment rates in this country.

FIRST, he says that the children the team observed were simply not equipped to function in school, learn a trade or act as responsible citizens in "a complex society such as ours."

Wheeler concludes that malnutrition impairs learning and performance, first by inhibiting the growth and development of the central nervous system during gestation and the first few months of life, and second by harming the brain by increasing the likelihood of infection. Both of these are purely physiological.

The third effect of malnutrition may be more devastating than the physical ones.

After citing a noted child psychiatrist's observations on a child, his relationships and hunger, Dr. Wheeler wrote:

"BY NOT FEEDING our children adequately, we may be negating our efforts to educate them and we may be creating problems for the future.

"Many of these children grew up distrusting society and in conflict with it. They may become psychological cripples.

"How we feed our youngsters, then, may have a direct bearing on their capacity for social adjustment, on the potential of our society for crime and social disorder, and on the perpetuation of the effects of malnutrition from one generation to the next."

Dr. Wheeler asked, "Why have we not demonstrated the capacity to respond . . . to eight million children who are spending their formative years in a grinding poverty which destroys for them all hope for a meaningful future?"

Dr. Wheeler began the field trips which resulted in this report in 1967, when he was both a consultant to the Field Foundation and a member of the Citizens Board of Inquiry Into Hunger in the United States.

Thank you for forwarding my letter (9-1-72) to ask Ford Foundation funding to Mr. Pendleton.

In my file to you, I mentioned my work in the (small) University of Miami urban research unit. I have some "before" and "after" photographs of physical arrangements and improvements I made there, after only three months.

Since Ford originally granted U of Miami's urban center funds, I felt you might be interested in seeing the improvements of the time, however small. At time of improvements, Miami's Metro Commission subcommittee - a 32-member group - to suggest Metro Charter changes was meeting in the room, and several of the members were complimentary of the improvements.

Clinics in South Doing Good Job, SRC Concludes

By MIKE BARRIER
Of the Gazette Staff

Early last year, the federal Office of Economic Opportunity gave a $1.8 million grant to the Lee County Co-operative Clinic at Marianna. Governor Bumpers subsequently approved the grant, despite howls of protest from conservative politicians and members of the medical establishment.

The Clinic has continued to thrive, despite its detractors, and occupied a new building earlier this year. Although its OEO funding has run out, the Clinic expects to receive an $800,000 grant from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, starting next month.

The Arkansas controversy over the Clinic was not an isolated phenomenon; there are — or have been — 130 such comprehensive health centers receiving federal funds from OEO and HEW and they have operated in all but six states. Seventeen of those clinics have been established in the 11 Southern states (the one at Marianna is the only one in Arkansas), and some of them have undergone political trials even more severe than those of the Marianna clinic. One clinic in Alabama was put out of business completely.

The comprehensive health centers, in the words of a recent report, have "operated on the theory that, in order to improve the health of poor people, care must encompass a host of vital services, including, in addition to primary medical and clinical care, such services as improvement of environmental conditions, laboratory tests, X rays, dental care, mental health counseling, free medicines and eyeglase, child carre, free transportation to the centers [and] nutritional, social and educational services * * * the patient has access to the whole range of medical and health service specialists available under one roof * * *."

Rebuke Deserved, According to SRC

That description is from a recent report by the Southern Regional Council's Task Force on Health, which was established last year. Assuming that the report's description of comprehensive health care is correct, it is easy to see why many doctors would resent and oppose the comprehensive health centers; their very existence is a rebuke to the medical profession for the job it has been doing. According hensive health care center opened in Bolivar County in 1966, and four years later. the mortality rate for black babies had fallen to(35.7; the rate for whites had actually risen slightly in the same period, from 13.5 to 13.7.

Discrepancy Marked Throughout South

The descrepancy between black and white infant mortality rates is marked throughout the South, although Mississippi is, predictably, the worst of the lot; in 1971, the infant mortality rate for blacks was exactly twice that of whites. (In Arkansas in 1970, the rate for whites was 18.2, for blacks 32.2; for the state as a whole, the rate was 21.6, nearly two points above the national average.)

The figures for blacks may well be understated; the SRC report quotes one doctor, described as "wise in the ways of the rural South," as saying, "I suspect that the figures we see on infant death, fetal deaths aren't nearly as accurate as one might think. How many babies are born dead, that just aren't reported, that are buried out in the backyard, in the woods, in unmarked graves and forgotten?"

The infant mortality rate is, in any event, only the tip of the iceberg. The SRC report offers convincing evidence that not only are the poor sicker than other people, their illnesses often go undetected and untreated. For example, one worker for a comprehensive health care center, making routine house visits, came across a family in which (1) the pregnant mother had high blood pressure, edefma of the legs and anemia; (2 the father had diabetes, ar-

Assuming that the report's description of comprehensive health care is correct, it is easy to see why many doctors would resent and oppose the comprehensive health centers; their very existence is a rebuke to the medical profession for the job it has been doing. According to the SRC report, such a rebuke is well deserved.

Comprehensive care, the report says, "stands in contrast to the fragmented approach most often found in hospital outpatient services or in physician's offices, both of which, sadly, all too often seem less immediately concerned with a patient's physical condition, more concerned with his ability to pay. But, more than that, the comprehensive health centers are consumer-oriented, rather than provider-oriented. Through community advisory boards — intricate parts of a comprehensive health center organization — the community's interests and needs are made known.

"Nationally, moreover, half of the staffs of the various centers are residents of the poverty neighborhoods served by the centers. Community residents are hired and trained wherever possible for health careers in auxiliary roles, freeing physicians, dentists, nurses, medical social workers for immediate professional tasks * * *. In brief the comprehensive centers have evolved as health care instruments that do not rely on the traditional health care establishment."

Concludes Centers Doing Good Job

There would be something to be said for comprehensive health centers even if they only released poor patients from tre indignities of hospital emergency rooms. But the real test of their performance is how well the centers find and treat the sick who might otherwise go without treatment. The SRC's Task Force, after examining centers in South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi, in both rural and urban settings, concluded that they were doing their job well indeed.

In this connection, the SRC report provides some startling reminders of just how bad medical care really is in many parts of the South, particularly among blacks. In 1966, in Bolivar County. Miss., the total infant mortality rate — the number of deaths within the first year of life, per 1,000 live births — was 48.5. (For the United States as a whole, the rate in 1970 was 19.8) For black babies, the mortality rate in Bolivar County was much worse — 57.2. A comprehensive health care center opened in Bolivar County in 1966, and four years later. the mortality rate for black babies had fallen to(35.7; the rate for whites had actually risen slightly in the same period, from 13.5 to 13.7.

The infant mortality rate is, in any event, only the tip of the iceberg. The SRC report offers convincing evidence that not only are the poor sicker than other people, their illnesses often go undetected and untreated. For example, one worker for a comprehensive health care center, making routine house visits, came across a family in which (1) the pregnant mother had high blood pressure, edefma of the legs and anemia; (2 the father had diabetes, arthritis, hypertension and possibly tuberculosis; (3) two children had nutritional anemia; (4) two others had umbilical hernias; (5) two others needed eyeglasses.

If matters had taken their usual course — that is, if the health center had not been there to pull the members of the family in — none of the family members would have received medical attention until the emergency stage, and the mother and her unborn child most likely would have died.

Personal Cost Is Enormous

The personal cost of such untreated illnesses is enormous, of course, and so is the social cost. Not only must emergency treatment be provided — perhaps at great expense — for illnesses that could have been treated for much less if caught in time, but lives that could otherwise have been productive and useful are blighted. In the words of the SRC report, "simply by accident of birth," many children born into poor families "will grow into adulthood, following the same patterns as their parents, often ill, their resistance to infection lowered, their ability to perform any task in life lessened."

Despite the obvious benefits of comprehensive health care for the poor, it has had many enemies. Last year, for example, Governor William Waller of Mississippi vetoed the grants for the two such facilities in his state, in what the SRC says "was generally considered a capricious act of harassment." The Nixon administration may yet pull the health centers down as part of its general dismantling of poverty programs, and there is likewise a danger that the centers will be abandoned in a rush toward adoption if some kind if national health insurance plan.

Meanwhile, the SRC report says, "the needs of the people are not being met, but, rather, solutions are being avoided. The comprehensive health centers of the nation are meeting the needs of some if the voor. More centers are needed and the existing ones need to be expanded and strengthened for they are the only alternative to a system of health care that has failed and is failing the poor."

NEW SURVEY SHOWS

Southern Poverty Is Linked To Inadequate Medical Care

BY RANDALL H. HARBER
United Press International

Southerners, particularly the poor in rural areas, "continue to suffer and die from the lack of adequate health care in far greater numbers than other Americans," according to a study by the Southern Regional Council.

In a survey of 11 Southern states, the council found that the death rate in the general population and particularly among infants of both races was higher than the national average.

There were 47 counties which did not have a practicing physician. In other areas the physicians were poorly distributed and the number of physicians fell below the national average. The study showed that 206 counties in the South have no hospitals.

MEDICAID SHORTCOMING

Medicaid, designed to provide medical services to the poor, is geared to public assistance eligibility, said the study, "with the result being that in no Southern state are more than a third of the families below poverty levels eligible for Medicaid."

The council, an Atlanta-based non-profit organization set up to monitor the progress of race relations in the South, concluded that the poor standard of health care in the South is due mainly to poverty.

"We believe that poverty-and all that living without an adequate income implies - to be the single most influential factor affecting health status," said the study.

The study said the states which make up the Old Confederacy have larger percentages of families in poverty, larger percentages of people dwelling in housing without adequate plumbing and larger percentages of non - whites than any other section of the country.

The states covered by the study included Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

For the United States the physician - patient ratio is 128 patient-care physicians per 100,000 population. In the South, the rate is 101 patient-care physicians per 100,000 people.

On a national scale the Southern states rank as follows in the number of doctors to the state population: Alabama 48th, Arkansas 47th, Florida 18th, Georgia 36th, Louisiana 27th, Mississippi 50th North Carolina 38th, South Carolina 46th, Tennessee 29th, Texas 23th and Virginia 25th.

Here is a list of findings taken from the council's study of health care:

The council found that 42 per cent of Alabama's 3.4 million people live in rural areas and that 25 per cent of the people are in poverty. The state has 2,747 active physicians, 70 of them black. Those doctors represent a ratio of one doctor for every 1,860 people. There are 126 short-term general hospitals in the state but five counties have no hospitals.

FLORIDA

Only 20 percent of Florida's 6.7 million people live in rural areas and 16 per cent live in poverty. There are 8,457 practicing doctors in Florida, with 99 of them black. There is one doctor for every 1,272 residents. Florida has 188 short-term general hospitals but nine counties have no hospitals.

GEORGIA

Of Georgia's 4.5 million people 40 per cent live in rural areas and 20 per cent live in poverty. There are 4,425 practicing doctors in the state, 117 of them black. There is one doctor for every 1,609 people. Georgia has 164 short-term general hospitals but 44 counties do not have any hospital facilities.

MISSISSIPPI

Of Mississippi's 2.2 million people, 56 per cent live in rural areas and 35 per cent are in poverty. There are 1,652 practicing doctors in the state, 46 of them black. There are 1,860 people for every doctor. Mississippi has 116 short-term general hospitals but 10 counties have no hospitals.

NORTH CAROLINA

Of North Carolina's five million people 55 per cent live in rural areas and 20 per cent are in poverty. There are 4,762 practicing doctors in North Carolina, 141 of them black. Each doctor represents 1,566 people. The state has 144 short-term general hospitals but 16 counties have no hospital facilities.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Of South Carolina's 2.5 million people, 52 per cent live in rural areas and 24 per cent live in poverty. The state has 2,160 practicing physicians, 53 of them black. Each doctor represents 1,829 people. The state has 70 short-term general care hospitals but 6 counties have no hospitals.

TENNESSEE

In Tennessee, 41 per cent of the 3.9 million population lives in rural areas with 22 per cent in poverty. There are 4,125 practicing physicians in the state, 204 of them black. Each doctor represents 1,507 people. The state has 141 short-term general hospitals but 15 counties have no hospital facilities.

Public Groups Assail Revenue Sharing

By ERNEST HOLSENDOLPH
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 6—A coalition of national public interest organizations criticized the general revenue-sharing program this week on the grounds that it did not serve the interests of the poor. The coalition called for abolition of the program unless changes were made in it.

A subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee plans to draw up a bill next week to extend the $30.2-billion program beyond its scheduled expiration of Dec. 31, 1976.

The coalition, including the League of Women Voters Education Fund, National Urban Coalition, Center for Community Changes and Center for National Policy Review, concluded this week a two-and-a-half-year study of the program, which channels Federal tax-revenue back to states and localities.

The group said in a report: "The program has been used over the past five years to cover a [Federal] retreat from the assumption of national responsibility to deal with problems of poverty, racism, unemployment and urban decay."

According to the report, the program, which is dear to state, county and city officials who are lobbying intensely now for a five-year extension, fails on a number of counts. The report cited the following:

¶It is unfair to poor urban dwellers because it does not take into account the higher costs of services in poor urban areas.

¶It fails women and blacks and hispanic-Americans because it does not compel local government agencies to hire and promote them on the same basis as white males.

¶It's "no-strings" feature makes it unaccountable to the Federal authorities or to citizens who do not know where the money is spent.

Also, the report says, general revenue sharing is not geared to requiring localities to give services equitably to deprived neighborhoods and to people who have special needs.

The Southern Regional Council, in its own analysis of revenue sharing, contends that the program's shortcomings fall even harder on the South, "where roughly one-half of the nation's black and a large proportion of the nation's poor people reside."

Tax Relief Given

"The Federal revenue sharing program is doing virtually nothing to correct the economic dispaities between rich and poor Southerners," said the report by the regional council, which is based in Atlanta.

Further, the report said that the program, functioning mostly as a check-writing operation between Washington and the localities, may even be reducing the over-all accountability of local governments to all citizens.

Revenue sharing is used by many communities as a means of reducing local taxes or avoiding tax increases, the study said. "It has, in effect, enabled local governments to operate without the discussions and pressures that ordinarily accompany tax increases," it continued.

Underlining the alleged failure of the general revenue sharing program to protect civil rights, the reports tell of instances where the Office of Revenue Sharing has declined to cut off funds even where discrimination had been shown.

The Southern Regional Council report cited one instance where an auditor from the revenue sharing office visited Spartanburg, S.C., and later said: "We could make a case on discrimination against women and blacks and other minorities in every department but one."

But the Federal agency did not use its authority to require compliance with its civil rights statutes, the report said, even though a local chapter of the National Organization for Women filed a complaint.

In a study of alleged discrimination in the use of revenue sharing funds in Rankin County, Miss., the regional council concluded: "Many blacks [there] remain convinced that their [local] government discriminates against them. Many now also believe that the Federal Government is unwilling to stop such practices."

Given the problems of the expensive general revenue sharing program, said the report by the coalition of groups, Congress may better spend its time working on alternatives, "such as national health insurance, welfare reform—including Federal assumption of all welfare costs—or a greater Federal role in the financing of public education."

I advise and enjoin those who direct the paper in the tomorrows never to advocate any cause for personal profit or preferment. I would wish it always to be "the tocsin" and devote itself to the policies of equality and justice to the underprivileged. Revenue Sharing Record Flawed

Federal revenue sharing, now in its fourth year, has been flawed from the start because it encourages local governments to take a free ride on Washington. Federal tax collectors do the job of local officials in raising revenue for local budgets. Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Tex., calls it "spending without responsibility" though his was a minority view of Rep. L. H. Fountain's House subcommittee. The panel voted 7-6 Thursday to extend revenue sharing into 1980.

A review of the program by the Southern Regional Council has turned up another fault: that of racial and sexual discrimination in spending General Revenue Sharing (GRS) money.

One of the program's attributes has been its freedom from the usual red tape that hampers other federal programs. This loose oversight, however, leaves local officials with great discretion. That is how the program was designed, and it is not necessarily bad. But if local customs have meant discriminatory hiring, as is the case in the South, those practices have not been changed by revenue sharing.

The council's survey took place in 1974 and 1975 and included more than three dozen cities, Raleigh, Durham, Charlotte, Warrenton, Asheville and New Bern among them. The report, although not a professional investigation, does make some telling points about GRS concern for fair hiring.

The survey provides a breakdown on employes by race and sex in a number of Southern cities that receive GRS money. Black employes in Spartanburg, S.C., for instance, account for only 5 per cent of the city work force though the town is one-third black in population. Birmingham, Ala., uses blacks for 7 per cent of city jobs in a population 40 per cent black. The imbalance was found in many other states' cities, says the report.

The other half of the jobs story is that those women and blacks employed in GRS cities usually have menial jobs. Little if any effort has been made to use GRS to correct this picture. Local governments seemed unusually oblivious of GRS requirements for fair hiring.

Washington does little to help, either. The treasury check arrives with little accountability expected in return. Generally, it goes into police or fire protection—two areas, according to the report, that have poor records for fair employment. As of October 1975, federal overseers' on their own initiative, had not stopped a single GRS check to city or county governments, not even when local officials had been found to be unfair in hiring or spending.

Despite these criticisms, revenue sharing stands a good chance of renewal this year. It remains very popular with local officials who fear GRS losses would mean raising local taxes. They have lobbied Congress and the White House effectively. So, it is unreal to think the program will be ended. It can be improved, however, and that should be the aim of lawmakers interested in a fair GRS program.

Southern Regional Council

Identity Crisis for a 27-Year-Old

By Hal Gulliver

SOMEWHERE in the mid-Sixties, Lester Maddox, then sans political office, loosed one of his many arrows at charitable foundations, complaining they were underwriting the integration movement through the Atlanta-based Southern Regional Council. SRC, as Maddox portrayed it, was a sort of civil rights holding company from whose Hydra head sprang a panoply of demons. Using the foundation money, SRC had turned Atlanta "into a headquarters" of integration, he suggested.

Except for the unsympathetic attitude, SRC's board of directors might not object to Maddox's job description. The organization does receive and dispense foundation money for civil rights causes, information and research, for human relations organizations and voter registration.

Maddox, while governor of Georgia, may have wanted to close the SRC down if there had been an easy way. There wasn't. The SRC survived the turbulent racial conflicts of the 1950s and 1960s with, figuratively, head unbowed.

SRC Executive Director George S. Mitchell, who served from 1947 to 1957, once had to borrow money on his life insurance to keep the organization going. At its peak in the late 1960s, the annual budget was $1.3 million. SRC had become the darling of the major national foundations, the recipient of assorted grants and moneys, and the unofficial adviser to several government agencies.

But in the last two years, SRC has come under serious fire both from within and without.

Its staff members spent much of 1970 and 1971 in uncertainty about the future of the organization, its role, its purpose. One theory holds that it has been a victim of its own success, that SRC literally has worked itself out of a job.

Many of the tensions and pressures came to a head two months ago with the resignation of Paul Anthony, fifth executive director in the Council's 27-year history. SRC had no one ready to take his place.

In the early and mid-1960s Atlanta, already regional center for so many things, did as Maddox suggested, became "headquarters" of the civil rights movement. The most visible and respected black civil rights leader in America, the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., lived in Atlanta and it is the base of his Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Atlanta also became home base for SNCC—the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee—when it was student-staffed, nonviolent and coordinated; and headed by activists such as state Rep. Julian Bond and John Lewis.

Indeed, nearly every civil rights group had some base or contact in Atlanta. The city was also the regional operation base for the national news media. The New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Newsweek, Time and later The Washington Post and U.S. News & World Report had bureaus downtown. (They still do.) Other newsmen made Atlanta a regular stop on pulse-feeling tours of the South. Regulars and visitors alike relied heavily on the SRS for basic research and civil rights contacts. It seemed almost as if the SRC had been preparing for two decades for the 1960s, and when its time had come, it had more money and staff than ever.

Some insiders at SRC trace its present crisis to a confrontation two years ago when its staff split, incredible as it seems, on a purely racial basis, black versus white. Executive Director Anthony was on a long-planned tour of Europe. Black staff members at SRC organized a Black Caucus which later became the Black Committee. Their stated reason for protest was a shortage of blacks in decision-making roles. It was a serious protest, and seemed to threaten the very existence of SRC. Anthony was in Moscow when he received the urgent message to hurry home. He returned immediately.

"It's incredible," said one SRC staff member later. "Here's Paul, who spent 15 years of his life working in the forefront of the most liberal and decent causes for racial justice, and all of a sudden he has to cut short a trip to Europe to try to convince his black staff members that he's not a bigot."

One black participant in that confrontation was puzzled in retrospect by its origins: "You know, there were two or three people who felt they'd been passed over. It was more of an employment problem than a racial problem." Anthony obviously couldn't agree with the Black Committee that he was a bigot. Or that the committee should have the final veto power on any staff shift involving a black person. But he tried to work it out, making some shifts in personnel. The Black Committee after a time seemed to fade, though many of the same black staff members remained. One element in the racism charge was the fact that the Council's executive director always has been white. Yet a position of roughly equal influence, director of the Voter Education Project, originally an SRC arm, has been held only by blacks: first, Vernon Jordan, who will become executive director of the National Urban League in January; now John Lewis, one-time head of SNCC.

The black-white confrontation was not SRC's only problem in 1969. In considering tax reform legislation, the United States Congress seemed for a time on the verge of including a limitation on foundation grants that would have killed the Voter Education Project. Some congressmen clearly wanted to undercut black voter registration, which had more than doubled in the South in the 1960s, largely because of VEP-backed drives. By the end of the decade, there were more than 3,248,000 black registered voters in the 11 states of the Old Confederacy. SRC and its supporters won an amendment to save VEP, but there remained a problem: The new law, as amended, provided that VEP could receive no more than 25 per cent of its funds from any single source. The same rule would have applied to the rest of SRC if it had remained wedded to the voter project. Since the Ford Foundation had become the dominant source of SRC's budget, the Council and the voter project were legally divorced.

Although the separation was amicable, it did underscore questions of SRC's future. Voter registration had become one of the Council's principal functions. Abruptly those activities were being guided by a separate organization with its own staff, board, and budget. (SRC's 1970 budget of $1.3 million included $500,000 for VEP and $800,000 for the rest of SRC's activities. In 1971, SRC's budget is down to $700,000 VEP's is up to nearly $600,000.)

The new tax law made foundations nervous. They wanted to be sure that SRC projects fell within the scope of the law. As Anthony observed in his annual report on 1970 activities, "We found ourselves in the position of having to spend considerable time in 'fund raising' for funds already committed."

Foundations making substantial grants also began looking more critically at SRC's purposes. The Council always been strong on research and publication, most of it related to civil rights and race. Should SRC focus on something besides civil rights now that major civil rights legislation had been passed? Since school desegregation in the South had become pretty much the rule, rather than the exception? When an increasing number of elected black officials in the South were speaking for black citizens? SRC found itself, some thought, in the position of an aging white liberal, one who had lived long enough to see many of his causes accepted.

At the SRC annual meeting last November, the Council's board decided that SRC "should do a thorough review and assessment of itself, its program, its structure, its purposes, and its effectiveness." A special review committee was appointed, and began meeting last January. The next month, executive director Anthony told several friends that he planned to resign.

Two key results are expected: New projects, new leadership

In April, about 60 members of SRC's board held a crash meeting to consider the Council's future. The review committee and SRC staff had prepared plans for three different approaches, called Plans A, B, and C.

Plan A amounted to an affirmation of existing SRC programs with recommendations for improving them and some hint of a leaning toward more Nader-type investigative studies. The second option, Plan B, amounted to a serious re-gearing of the SRC toward "program" lines. For instance, instead of preparing an in-depth critical report on federal public housing policies, the SRC would undertake actual housing projects, go out and build model housing projects. The third option was similar but with suggestions of even more of an activist element. "It meant just getting out and raising hell," said one participant at the meeting.

The SRC's board considered these alternatives and then voted overwhelmingly to approve Plan A—a decision which did not please all Council critics.

The Ford Foundation by this time had become a major factor in SRC policies because it was contributing half or more of the Council's annual budget. Although they have recommended no new guidelines, the Foundation's consultants apparently believe the Council is not as relevant as it should be, and that new projects and new leadership are needed.

Also uncertain is the future of two of the most consistently visible evidences of the Council's work, the quarterly New South Magazine, and the monthly tabloid, South Today, a review of significant reprints and original articles. Reese Cleghorn, a highly talented journalist who had resigned as associate editor of The Atlanta Journal in 1969 to create and edit South Today for SRC, left last July to become editorial page editor of The Charlotte Observer. Outsiders speculated that Cleghorn may have seen the handwriting on the wall about foundation funds, but insiders insist that his departure was unrelated to the future of South Today. Staffer Robert Anderson has taken over the tabloid; New South continues to be edited by another former Journal staffer, Pat Watters, long a respected observer of the Southern racial scene.

The story on Anthony broke mid-July in four paragraphs in The New York Times. Anthony would resign within two weeks, the story said, "on top of reports in Atlanta that the integrated civil rights organization, a citadel of liberalism in the South, was on the verge of collapse." Anthony was quoted in the story as saying that his resignation "is no way related to some very serious problems of realignment we've faced and solved." Privately, he was hurt and angry at the Times story.

"They gutted me," he said to a friend on the day the story ran. Anthony was bitter because he said the Times reporter had led him to think the newspaper planned a comprehensive story about SRC, including the fact that Anthony would soon announce his resignation (though he will stay on until a successor is named).

Anthony's own staff of 30 had not been told, though some were fully aware of internal "realignment" debates. When the story broke, Anthony called members of the SRC staff together for a somber session in the maze of offices on the sixth floor of 5 Forsyth Street in downtown Atlanta. It was a tough, sad session. After it was over, Anthony retreated into his private office. His longtime secretary, Mrs. Jerusha Brothers, followed him. There is a small brown liquor cabinet in the SRC director's office. Use is reserved for very special occasions: sometimes, at the end of the day when an out-of-the-city visitor is there, or occasionally when a staff member is leaving, but never in the middle of the morning. "May I have a drink?" Mrs. Brothers asked. Anthony was surprised. The request was out of character for his secretary, an efficient, calm woman who is the mother of five children.

"May I fix you a drink?" persisted Mrs. Brothers, and that seemed to Anthony a good idea. He was not used to sipping a glass of gin and grapefruit juice in the middle of the morning. On the other hand, it is not every day a man ends a longtime service. And, after 15 years with SRC, Anthony was exhausted, drained.

Since its founding in 1944 SRC had become a highly respected organization—not in an immediately visible activist sense, not the marching in the streets or pursuit of dramatic confrontation which the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. chose as an instrument for creative social change, but in subtle, often highly effective ways. As SRC's executive director, Anthony had frequent contact with an array of influential people. Finding a job was not a problem. There would be other opportunities, other challenges. "Somebody said he'd heard I was going to go manage my antique shop," Anthony said wryly on the day the Times story ran. "I am one of the partners in a shop." He smiled ruefully: "It lost $5,000 last year. "Right now, I'm just tired. I've got to get away a bit, get some rest, maybe try to write a bit. I think being director of SRC is about a three-to-five year job. It takes a man and burns him out. Five years ought to be the limit. I've been here six years. Maybe that's a year too long," said Anthony, 43.

President John Kennedy once declared that the SRC was "serving not only the South but the whole country" in "working to make equal opportunity a reality in all parts of our national life." Emphasis might well be placed on the word South, because the SRC's strength has always been its Southern roots. The Council was formed and led by Southerners, white and black, who believed that injustice was wrong.

A second facet of its personality has always been its commitment to the democratic process, to making the system work. The people who organized SRC in 1944 were responsible, often distinguished, people. Perhaps many were regarded as wildly liberal by their friends. But, white and black, they tended to be professional men and women, ministers and teachers and, even an occasional journalist, like the late Ralph McGill.

"It's absolutely phenomenal how patient and understanding the black leadership was," said Anthony, reflecting on SRC's early days. "The demands of the blacks were always so damned moderate. They just wanted in, into the institutions. Those of us who were white, who were looked on as dangerous radicals and Communists, also believed in the institutions. We all had a basic belief that our institutions would work."

The Council inherited the mantle of a group called the Commission of Interracial Cooperation, formed after World War I. The Commission also received substantial foundation funds, but never succeeded in building up local human relations affiliates. It did spawn the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, which once had 40,000 members.

During World War II, many Southerners were aware that a terrible war was being fought on behalf of American ideals, ideals not always practiced at home. A group of black leaders from across the South met in Durham, N.C., in October, 1942, to discuss race relations. The conference produced what was called the Durham Statement. "The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations..." the statement began. At the time, it was considered a radical document. Today, it reads as a most moderate and reasonable statement, expressing opposition to the white primary and lynching, urging that Negroes be included on juries and on school boards, and be given equal educational and job training opportunities. "It is a wicked notion," concluded the Durham Statement, "that the struggle of the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the nation."

Familiar names among the black leaders attending the Durham conference include Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, longtime president of Morehouse College and now chairman of the Atlanta Board of Education; Dr. Horace Mann Bond, father of Rep. Julian Bond; Dr. Rufus E. Clement who, years after the Durham conference, became the first black member of the Atlanta school board; and C. A. Scott, publisher of the Atlanta Daily World.

Liberal white Southerners saw the Durham Statement as a significant and important document, deserving a response. Methodist Bishop Arthur J. Moore assembled a small group of Atlanta men to plan for a conference of white Southerners. As a result, 115 white Southerners from 10 states attended a meeting in Atlanta on April 8, 1943. McGill served as chairman. They adopted a draft response —"the Atlanta Statement"—to the Durham document. Most of these attending the conference signed it, and wire and mail brought the total number of signers to 292.

There are some interesting names there: McGill, of course, and Wright Bryan, then editor of The Atlanta Journal; editor Virginius Dabney of Richmond, Va., who would help organize the SRC; W. E. Brock of Chattanooga; The Rt. Rev. Theodore Bratton of Jackson, Miss.; Rabbi Stanley Brav of Vicksburg, Miss.; newspaper executive Mark Ethridge of Louisville, Ky.; Mrs. Rebecca Gershon and Philip Weltner from Atlanta; the most Rev. Gerald P. O'Hara from Savannah.

The white Southerners' statement called the Durham Statement "frank and courageous," and expressed agreement with most of its specifics. Solutions could be found, said the Atlanta Statement, through the cooperation of black and whites of "determined good will." The SRC was planned in meetings over the following months and was chartered Jan. 6, 1944.

Leslie W. Dunbar, now executive director of the Field Foundation in New York, preceded Anthony as executive director of SRC, serving almost five years. Dunbar recently observed: "A lot of people and organizations have been tested this last five or six years as to how well they could do some things. A lot of us have been tested in making a transition from the classic issues of civil rights to the new problems of poverty. Not new problems. They've been with us. But they're now the concern of many people previously involved in civil rights.

"Precisely at the same time that a lot of testing was going on, you have had an increasing interest expressed by younger black leaders around the South, some of them on SRC's board, asking questions: Where are we going? Why isn't SRC doing more?" Dunbar suggested there had always been something of an "ambiguous black attitude" involving SRC. "First, I think black leaders—and not just in SRC—valued their white liberal contacts. It gave them a chance to influence the white community, a foot in the door. But then, as things have changed, I think there's been understandably an increasing desire to control that foot in the white community."

A black former SRC staffer said he agreed with Dunbar's analysis: "We never would have had some of these internal problems a couple of years ago. Now, we've won so many battles, it creates new and different problems."

Will SRC survive? Will it change? The next few months will tell. It is funded through the end of this year. And at the time of this writing it appeared likely the organization will have substantial funding for 1972. But beyond that, the Council's fate is unclear. Ford reportedly is pressuring SRC to move beyond its present expertise, race relations, into new projects like poverty or Naderesque consumer studies. The Council has changed its emphasis before—from rather neutral research to crash studies of crisis situations and active policy recommendations—but never its basic focus on race.

"I believe the civil rights battle is over if you're talking about the law," said one SRC board member; "but the basic questions of getting the scales in balance are not over by a hell of a sight." Like many other board members, he is opposed to a basic change of direction for the Council. "I think they're going to make it," Dunbar said. "It's never been an organization that stood outside the South. That's its character and strength. I think there's going to be a need for the SRC in the South as long as there is a struggle for decency and civil rights, and as long as there is a willingness on the part of black and white people to work together."

In consideration of the sum of _____ Dollars, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said insured is hereby permitted, without prejudice to the Insurance under said Policy, to go to, return from, ~~travel and reside in~~ the Little Big Horn Battle Field under escort of the United States Troops for the purpose of removing bodies to Fort Lincoln. until the first day of July 1877

Secretary.

At the time Mr. Price was journeying to the Little Big Horn the Connecticut Mutual was celebrating its 11th year in the State of Georgia.

Lots of things have changed since then, e.g., we're no longer concerned about travel west of the Mississippi.

But some things haven't. Security—responsibility—integrity—service—those good old words still signify what the Connecticut Mutual is all about, symbolized nowadays by that familiar mark of excellence, the Blue Chip.

A GROUP OF SOUTHERNERS

representing both races, many occupations, all faiths and denominations got together in 1943 . . .

and decided . . .

IT'S UP TO US, as Southerners, to join together, face up to the South's problems honestly, and work to solve them . . .

That's how the SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL was born

SRC belongs to its members. It is non-profit, non-denominational, non-political. It is Southern in its make-up and its work.

SRC is not, however, an "isolationist" movement to separate the South's problems from the Nation's. It welcomes support and understanding from all sincere people, wherever they are. But voting membership is limited to persons living in the South.

SRC members include people from all walks of life — white and Negro, city and country, men and women, church people, businessmen, educators, labor men, and plain everyday citizens.

SRC BELIEVES that the South can be prosperous and healthy, freed of poverty, prejudice, and fear . . .

It believes in the ideals of democracy for which this Nation was founded . . .

It believes — in the name of democracy, Christianity, and common decency — that the Negro must have equal opportunity in the schoolroom, on the job, and at the polls . . .

SRC BELIEVES THAT DEMOCRACY IS SAFE ONLY WHEN EVERYBODY CONTRIBUTES TO IT AND EVERYBODY SHARES IN IT.

TO ACCOMPLISH ITS AIMS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL WORKS THROUGH - - -

★ Its local groups. SRC has State Divisions and affiliated committees in eleven Southern States, and smaller groups in communities over the South . . .

★ Its Regional Office. SRC's headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia, guides the work of the local groups, advises private and official agencies, issues timely statements and publications . . .

★ A monthly bulletin. NEW SOUTH keeps members and friends of SRC informed about Southern problems and progress . . .

★ Cooperating groups. SRC works with civic clubs, church groups, labor organizations, and other groups to bring about wholesome improvements . . .

★ Home Town Self-Surveys. SRC helps local groups organize to collect the facts about their communities—and to follow through with corrective action.

TO ACCOMPLISH ITS AIMS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL WORKS FOR - - -

★ Better understanding between the races. SRC helps lessen the violence that has plagued the South by providing a meeting ground where people of good will, white and colored, can come together, air their common problems, achieve honest solutions . . . When trouble brews, SRC members know whom to reach and what to do . . .

★ Equal justice. SRC watches the courts . . . points out injustices . . . works for fair police practices . . . has successfully urged the hiring of Negro policemen in towns and cities throughout the South . . .

★ Equal public services. SRC works to get a square break for ALL our people in —

HOSPITALS AND MEDICAL CARE

SCHOOLS

JOBS

FARMING OPPORTUNITIES

VETERANS SERVICES

HOUSING

VOTING

REPRESENTATION ON OFFICIAL BODIES

★ State government for ALL the people. SRC works for the day when our States will serve all citizens equally.

SOME ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL - - -

Supplied the basic facts in successful campaigns to secure Negro policemen in Atlanta, Memphis, Nashville, Conway (S.C.), and other cities.

During 1945-1947 helped smooth the path for the returning veteran by a widespread field program. Nine World War II veterans — eight of them Negroes — made personal visits to veterans servicing officials in over a third of the counties in the South . . . acquainted them with the needs of Negro veterans . . . taught veterans the full range of services they could get . . . spent $75,000 on this project alone.

Sponsored the 1948 Southwide Meeting on Human and Civil Rights at which four hundred community leaders, representing both races and every Southern State, devised ways to strengthen basic rights at the local level.

At strategic times during the past year, vigorously urged upon each Southern governor a positive program to assure the civil rights of the Southern people.

Persistently advocated the same course for newspapers, church bodies, and other influential groups in the region.

Got the facts into newspapers over the South about health, housing, education, voting, law-enforcement.

THROUGH STATE DIVISIONS AND AFFILIATES - - -

Aroused public opinion against the Ku Klux Klan and played an active part in getting local ordinances passed curbing the activities of such terroristic groups.

Persuaded numerous white churches throughout Georgia to be hosts to interracial meetings.

Served as technical consultant to the steering committee of the Jacksonville, Fla., Self-Survey, which has brought about more than seventy concrete improvements in the Negro community.

Played a leading part in bringing about the establishment of the State Training School for Negro Girls in Texas.

Was largely responsible for the creation of Negro community centers in Macon, Savannah, and other Georgia cities . . . Helped secure a modern, well-equipped Negro Boys' Club for Atlanta.

Aided the Florida Citizens Committee on Education in drawing up recommendations to the General Assembly which would provide equal education for ALL children.

Took the lead in getting Kentucky's Day Law amended to permit Negroes to receive medical and nursing education in institutions formerly open to white students only.

TO DO THESE THINGS

and more, the Southern Regional Council needs YOUR support. Here are three things you can do to help:

1 Join SRC and work actively with other members in your community

"THE QUEST FOR UNDERSTANDING"

AN EDUCATIONAL PROJECT for TEACHERS COLLEGES
and
SCHOOLS OF EDUCATION

CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION AND RACE RELATIONS
703 Standard Building
ATLANTA, GA.

"THE QUEST FOR UNDERSTANDING"

An Educational Project for Teachers Colleges and Schools of Education

Composed of 100 representative Southern educators, the Conference on Education and Race Relations* for three years has been considering the need of an educational approach to the South's peculiar problems of race relations.

Since preparation for intelligent citizenship is an essential function of education, and since the most serious problems of citizenship in the South are connected with the bi-racial situation, the Conference is convinced that our schools can render the South a vastly important service by preparing future citizens to understand these problems and to solve them in wisdom and justice.

With that conviction, the Conference is seeking to enlist all our teachers colleges and schools of education in a definite effort to prepare their teachers-in-training for intelligent, constructive leadership in this field.

Pending the development of more adequate plans and materials, the Conference is recommending again this winter the use of the 24-page "Quest for Understanding," as a basis for study and discussion and for such additional projects as may seem practicable. This simple text, setting forth the viewpoint of the Conference and embodying practical suggestions as to content material and methods, has already been used to the number of 13,000 copies in a hundred Southern colleges, and has been approved thoroughly by the results. One teachers college utilized it throughout the entire student body of 800 and many others have made it the basis of notable work. Not a single unfavorable reaction has been reported.

By way of stimulating interest in the plan, two awards are offered, one for the college doing the best work and one for the best paper submitted by an individual student. Detailed information and suggestions relative to the plan will be found on the next page.

The Conference hopes that every college president, professor, and student to whom this announcement comes will give the plan careful consideration and, if possible, cooperate in its wide and effective observance.

In connection with the study of "The Quest for Understanding" in teachers colleges and schools of education, the Conference on Education and Race Relations is offering the following awards for the school year 1933-34:

1. One Hundred Dollars worth of selected books on Southern Social Problems to the college making the best total use of the project, as evidenced by number of students taking part, number and quality of papers written, and by additional activities. The later may include supplementary class work in history, literature, sociology, and civics; public programs; demonstration school projects; investigation of state and local conditions affecting Negroes, particularly in education; and study of text book content relative to Negroes and racial problems.

Professors desiring to enter their schools for this award should report in detail how the project was carried out, the number of classes and students participating, and other facts of interest, and should forward a representative selection of student papers written in connection with the project.

2. An award of $50 to the student submitting the best paper on "The Quest for Understanding," based upon the text of that name, upon other sources, or upon original thought and experience. Students may treat the subject in any way they choose, but it is suggested that among others the following questions may well be considered:

"Is there need of an educational approach to the race question? Have public school teachers and curricula any responsibility in this connection: If so, by what means may it best be met?"

Length of paper should not exceed 2,500 words and each should carry on separate sheet the author's name, college, and home address. Each school participating may enter as many as five papers in competition for this award. These should be carefully selected and marked accordingly. In addition any individual student in a school not participating in the project may enter his own paper.

All papers and reports must be mailed not later than April 1, 1934. None bearing later post mark can be considered. Awards will be announced and forwarded as soon thereafter as possible.

Professors desiring to introduce the study should write at once for "The Quest" in numbers sufficient for the students to be enlisted. As many as 100 copies will be sent to any school without charge, should so many be needed. Additional copies may be had at the rate of $2 per hundred.

O black and unknown bards of long ago,
How came your lips to touch the sacred fire?
How, in your darkness, did you come to know
The power and beauty of the Minstrel's lyre?
Who first from midst his bonds lifted his eyes?
Who first from out the still watch, lone and long,
Feeling the ancient faith of prophets rise
Within his dark-kept soul, burst into song?

What merely living clod, what captive thing,
Could up toward God through all its darkness grope,
And find within its deadened heart to sing
These songs of sorrow, love and faith, and hope?

* * * * *

James Weldon Johnson

Countee Cullen

Perhaps, the most prolific and spontaneous of our present day negro artists---and I say artists, because the creation of word-music is an art---is Countee Cullen, physically the quite usual type of young African, but mentally, shall we say---infinitely superior to the mass of his race. But perhaps this is true only because he has had opportunities for higher education and is keyed, like a well-made piano, to such a high degree of sensitiveness that his nature responds naturally to influence with bursts of vibrating song.

And truly his verses are song. The very rythme of them beats out a time which quickens the pulse and the imagination. Some songs are gay, lilting; but the majority of them take a deeper pitch and a slower tempo, expressing the inherent shadow mixed with the spontaneity of his race, which make we of the cooler blood, laugh or disdain.

We all feel things, but the majority of us cannot analyze or recounter the true cause of our emotions---this is the mission of the poet. The poet is human in that he hates, loves, fears, pities, with the rest of us, but he is different in that his emotions express themselves principally in song. Which is why poetry is so deservedly popular and will never die. In reading lyric poetry, the average person finds a safe and soothing outlet for his personal reactions, by realizing that others experience the same reactions, and if at all imaginative, he finds enjoyment in the sheer beauty of the lines.

Countee Cullen has succeeded in his chosen art---that of expressing the emotions of not only his personal ego, but the whole heart and soul of his race. There is pathos, protest, heart-ache, humor, and a philosophy of tolerant resignation and hope which would shame the most enthusiastic christian.

Born in New York City, May, 1900, he grew up as The New Negro---seeking and demanding the right, not only for a fair industrial equality, but the privilege of asserting his own soul. He attained a B. A. at New York University, and at Harvard, an M. A. degree. For a while he served as the associate editor of "Opportunity". He has published, "Color", a book of poetry, from which the following selections are taken on types of his work, "Ballads of the Brown Girl", and "Copper Sun".

"Color", which was published in 1925 by Harper and Brothers, is probably the best of his works. He is essentially the modern poet, in that he adheres to no particular style, but uses free verse, blank verse, and the usual rythmic verse.

I gather from his poetry, that, like many Negro writers, he is sensitive to the current regard of his race. This will illustrate:

Yet Do I Marvel

------Inscrutable His ways are, and immune
To catechism by a mind too strewn
With petty cares to slightly understand
What awful brain compels His awful hand.
Yet do I marvel at this curious thing;
To make a poet black, and bid him sing!

There the poet himself flings satire at the predjudice of a world which lets race-contempt blind them to the essential equality of human hearts.

Or this:

Near White

Ambiguous of race they stand
By one disowned, scorned of another,
Not knowing where to stretch a hand,
And cry, "my sister", or "my brother".

Or This:

Tableau

--------From lowered blinds the dark folk stare,
And here the fair folk talk
Indignant that these two should dare
In unison to walk.

Oblivious to look and word
They pass, and see no wonder
That lightning brilliant as a sword
Should blaze the path of thunder.

Religion stalks many of his poems, with the half-skeptic, yet reverent words of the modern manner: In this is expressed a fatalism which I think parallels the verses of that old Persian poet who called himself the Tent Maker:

-----This is my hour
To wax and climb
Flaunt a red flower
In the Face of Time.

And only an hour
Time gives, then snap
Goes the flower,
And dried is the sap.

** ********** **

Ah, none knows, none,
Save (but too well)
The Cryptic One
Who will not tell.

And here he expresses the independence and again, the skepticism of all Thinkers, no matter of what period:

-----God's alabaster turrets gleam,
Too high for me to win---
Unless He turns His face and lets Me bring my own gods in.

And in this same vein, five-hundred years before, an oriental sang of his gods of Wine and Pleasure, and requested that when they had buried him under a grape vine, to turn down an empty glass! All humanity, from the pagan to the Christian wants to "bring my own gods in". And the poets who express these longings, seem to speak in the same language whither black or white!

Countee Cullen, human again, is much of the Idealist. He sings:

------ -Let me be lavish of my tears
And dream that false is true;
Tho wisdom cometh with the years
The barren days come, too.

And he is also heir to that spirit of the Dreamer, which can never be downed;:

You cannot keep me captive, World,
Entrammeled, chained, spit on, and spurned.
More free than all your flags unfurled,
I give my body to be burned.
I mount my cross because I will,
I drink the hemlock which you give
For wine which you withhold, and still Because I will not die, I live.

I live because an ember in Me smoulders to regain its fire,

Because what is and what has been
Not yet has conquered my desire.
I live to prove the groping clod
Is surely more than simple dust,
I live to see the breathe of God
Beautify the carnal crust.

Some of the publications which have printed his verse are: American Mercury, The Century, The Crisis, The Conning Tower: New York World, Harper's, The Nation, Poetry: A Magazine of Verse, Survey Graphic, Vanity Fair.

Paul Lawrence Dunbar

A bit more remote and nearer to the civil war period was the date of birth of he who has been accredited b thousands of appreciative readers as the first true negro poet, who felt with his race, and adequately expressed their emotions, as well as the common human emotions of all mankind. I cannot admire his achievements in the poetic art enuf. To me, even predjudiced as I naturally am, he ranks with such contemporaries of his as Carl Sandburg, Henley, and Masefield.

His birthplace is Dayton, Ohio, and the date, 1872. His father and mother were both ex-slaves and pure-blooded negroes. He was educated in the public schools, and was universally admired for his fine voice, his poems, and his amiability.

His parents both loved literature, and his mother had a particular fondness for poetry. In the introduction to the poet's Lyrics of Lowly Life, W. D. Howell says: "So far as I could remember, Paul Dunbar was the only man of pure African blood and of American Civilization to feel the ngro life aesthetically and express it lyrically."

James Weldon Johnson says of him: "In his actions he was as impulsive as a child, sometimes even erratic; indeed, his intimate friends almost looked upon him as a spoiled ~~child~~ boy. He was always delicate in health."

Undoubtedly, Dunbar was of a melancholy dispositi n, probably because of his hard struggle thru a youth and young manhood stalked b poverty, privation, and ill-health. At least one-third of his poems ex ress depression, pleas for a happier life, and amorbid regard of the future. Frankly, I do not like his negro dialect poetry. It is hard to read, exaggerated, and one senses a subtle mockery and a tinge of bitter satire running thru even the most humorous bit of character sketches. I find in him a startling parallel to Poe.

His philosophy is similar to most poets. He says:

Life

A crust of bread and a corner to sleep in,
A minute to smile and an hour to weep in,
A pint of joy to a peck of trouble,
And never a laugh but the moan comes double;
And that is life!

I admire his originality, as well as his refusal to be led:

Religion

I am no priest of crooks or creeds,
For human wants and human needs
Are more to me than proph t's deeds;
And human tears and human cares
Affect me more than hum n prayers.

Oh, cease your wail, lugubrious saint!
You fret high heaven with your plaint.
Is this the Christian's "joy" you paint?
Is thisthe Christian's boasted bliss?
Avails your faith no more than this?

Take up your arms, come out with me,
Let Heav'n alone; humanity
Needs more and Heaven less from thee.
With pity for mankind look 'round;
Help them to rise---and H eaven is found.

And the inevitable of all feeling humanity, to stop the steps of Time, and chain the Dreams that disappear e'er they are born:

Ships That Pass In The Night

------My tearful eyes my soul's deep hurt are glassing;
For I would hail and check that ship of ships.
I stretch my hands imploring, cry aloud,
My voice falls d ad a foot from mine own lips,
And but its ghost doth reach that vessel, passing, passing.

O Earth, O Sky, O Ocean, both surpassing,
O heart of mine, O soul that dreads the dark!
Is there no hope for me? Is there no way
That I amy sight and check that speeding bark
Which out of sight and sound is passing, passing?

And Cullen sings of Dunbar:

Born of the sorrowful of heart,
Mirth was a crown upon his head;
Pride kept his twisted lips apart
In jest, to hide a heart that bled.

William E. B. Dubois

Another, and undoubtedly the most widely known of our contemporary American Negro Writers is W. E. B. Dubois. He is famous as a lecturer, essayist, socialogist, and poet who expresses his emotions principally in prose!

He was born February 23, 1868, at Great Barrington, Mass, and received his B. A. at Fisk University, M. A. at Howard, and a Ph. D. at Harvard. He has served as editor of the "Cirsis", and has written and still does write articles for the leading magazines. His principla books are "Souls of Black Folk", Quest of the Silver Fleece", and "Dark Princes".

As a poet he is infarior to Countee Cullen, but surpasses the latter in practical defense and discussion of the problems of race predjudice and economic conditions.

But even as Cullen expresses the desires and longings of his fettered race in verse startling in its musical perfection, so does Du Bois awake the hitherto-indifferent reader to a tingling sensation of pity, injustice, and admiration. Altho Cullen is morose and often even bitter, Du Bois rarely allows his superb talent for expression to degenerate into mere denunciation or protest. He points out injustice, it is true, but gives sane reasons for it, and acknowledgees the vastness of the predjudice problem.

Is it poetry? Or is it prose? In it the cry of not only the negro race, but of all down-trodden mankind from the birth of Time. It is significant that this is the only poem of Du Bois' printed in the book of American Negro poetry, 1922. There is a wail, a long, weird cry of of forsakeness in it---a plea that shakes the soul---words which tear at the heart strings even as they flood the brain with admiration and awe---and fear.

I speak f a Litany of Atlanta, Done at Atlanta, in the Day of Death, 1906. It savors of the despairing words of David to Yahveh, in his immortal psalms.

----Doth not this justice of hell stink in Thy nostrils, O God? How long shall the mounting flood of innocent blood roar in Thine ears and pound in our hearts for vengeance? Pile the pale frenzy of blood-crazed brutes who do such deeds high on Thine altar, Jehovah Jireh, and burn it in hell forever and forever!

Forgive us, good Lord, we know not what we say!

---------Sit no longer blind, Lord God, deaf to our prayer and deaf to our dumb suffering; Surely Thou too art not white, O Lord, a pale, bloodless, heartless thing?

Ah! Christ of all the Pities!

----------But whisper--speak---call, great God, for Thy silence is white terror to our hearts! The way, God, show us the way and point us the path.

Whither? North is greed and South is blood: within, the coward, and without, the liar. Whither? To death?

Amen! Welcome dark sleep!

------Lord, we have done these pleading, wavering words.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord!

Our voices sink in silence and in night.

Hear us, good Lord!

In night, O God of a godless land!

Amen!

In silence, O Silent God.

Selah!

James W. Johnson says of him: "Z---As a poet he pours out the bitterness and rebellion in his heart in those two sonnet-tragedies, "If We Must Die", and "To The White Fiends", in a manner that strikes terror;----as a cosmic poet he creates the atmosphere and mood of poetic beauty in the absolute as he does in "Spring in New Hampshire", and "The Harlem Dancer".

To The White Fiends

------Thin you I am not fiend and savage too?
Think you I could not arm me with a gun
And shoot down ten of you for every one
Of my black brothers murdered, burnt by you?
Be not deeived, for every deed you do
I could match--out-match: am I not Africa's son,
Black of that black land where black deeds are done?

But the Almighty from the darkness drew
My soul and said: Even thoushalt be a light
Awhile to burn on the benighted earth,
Thy dusky face I set among the white
For thee to prove thyself of highest worth;
Before the world is swallowed up in night,
To show thy little lamp: go forth, go forth!

Spring in New Hampshire

Too green the springing April grass,
Too blue the silver speckled sky,
For me to linger here, alas,
While happy winds go laughing on,
Wasting the golden hours indoors,
Washing windows and scrubbing floors.

Too wonderful the April night,
Too faintly sweet the first May flowers,
The stars too gloriously bright,
For me to spend the evening hours,
When fields are fresh and streams are leaping,
Wearied, exhausted, dully sleeping.

Black Diamonds

James Weldon Johnson, born, Jacksonville, Florida, 1871. Atlanta University, Columbia University. U. S. counsel to Nicaragua and Venezuela.

Brothers

-------In me the muttered curse of dying men,
On me the stain of conquered women, and Consuming me the fearful fires of lust,
Lit long ago, by other hands than mine,
In me the down-crushed spirit, the hurled-back prayers
Of wretches now long dead,----

------And now his fiendish crime has been avenged;
Let us back to our wives and children.---Say,
What did he mean by those last muttered words,
"Brothers in spirit, brothers in deed are we"?

Fenton Johnson, Chicago, 1888, University of Chicago, and Northwestern University.

Tired

I am tired of work; I am tired
Of building up somebody else's civilization.
Let us take a r st, M'Lissy Jane.
I will go down to the Last Chance Saloon, drink a gallon
Or two of gin, shoot a game or two of dice

And sleep the rest of the night on one of Mike's barrels.
You will let the old shanty go to rot, the white people's clothes turn to dust, and the Calvary Baptist Church sink to the bottomless pit.

Throw the children into the river; civilization has given us too many. It is better to die than it is to grow up and find out that you are colored.
Pluck the stars out of the heavens.
The stars mark our destiny. The stars marked my destiny.
I am tired of civilization.

Georgia Douglas Johnson, Atlanta, Ga., 1886, Atlanta U.

UI Want To Die While You Love Me

I want to die while you love me,
"hile yet you hold me fair,
While laughter lies upon my lips
And lights are in my hair.
------I want to die while you love me
Oh, who would care to live
Till love has nothing more to ask
And nothing more to give!

Jessie Fauset, Snow Hill, N. J. Cornell U. and U. of Penn.

Dead Fires

If this is peace, this dead and leaden thing,
T en better for the hateful fret, the sting.
Better the wound forever seeking balm
Than this gray calm!

Is this man's surcease? Better far the ache,
The long-drawn dreary day, the night's white wake,

Ah, how poets sing and die!
Make one song and Heaven takes it;
Have one heart and Beauty breaks it;
Chatterton, Shelley, Keats, and I---
Oh, how poets sing and die!

Under a Cotton Moon a tiny negro boy named Joe, wanders. He has been on an errand in the city for his mammy, and is lost. As he walks through the lonesome pine trees, he becomes frightened and kneels down in the moonbeams to pray.

Joe. Oh Lawd he'p me find my way home. I iz so tored and sleepy, and I'ze don't have no where to lay my ole black nigger head 'cept on a rock. I wants my mammy Cloe to tuck me in my bed. De aint nobody here, 'cept dis cotton moon, and oh Lawd, I iz feared o' de dark. If de aint nobody, let dis man in de moon lead me home.

Mordaunt. Hey boy, what are you doing here this dark night?

Joe. (trembling with fear) Please Mas' do take me to my home. I iz lost in dese woods. I can't find my way, please Mas' take me to my home.

Mordaunt. Come along with me, I'll take you home so you won't have to sleep out in the woods alone.

(Lifts Joe on his horse. They ride on and on from northern Virginia, down to the extreme section of Virginia.)

Joe. Mas' it seems like dat we iz gwine a mighty fer and long way to my house.

Mordaunt. Yes son, but you see you traveled so far from your home, as you were lost. Do you recognize this way to be the way to your home?

Joe. I'ze don't know, Mas', but I thinks dis am de right road. I lives on a hill. I lives with my mammy Cloe. She used to be a slave, but her Mas' died so we live out in a l ttle house on a big hill.

Mordaunt. We have been riding all night and nearly all day, I think we ought to be near there now, don't you?

Joe. Yas sah, if we ever aiims to git near it.

Mordaunt. (Pointing to the west). You see that house, Darky? Do you think that is it?

Joe. (Seeing it in distance). Dat looks like it.

Mordaunt. (Riding up to large plantation house.) Jump off, here we are.

Joe. Mas', you have come all dis far, and dis am de wrong place. I don't live here.

Mordaunt. You might not live here, but this is where you are going to live now. You are going to be my slave. You are now in my hands. If you try to run away, I will punish you, perhaps beat you until the blood pop s out on your legs, or perhaps kill you. Do you hear? You are forbidden to leave. I think you would have a hard time finding your home anyway. Come on, I am going to show you your room. (pulling him by sleave, after tieing horse)

Joe- Mas',please let me go back to my mammy Cloe. Please do, Mas'. She will be so lonesome, and who will do her work for her?

Mordaunt. I don't care who does her work, but you cannot get away from here. (Takes him to servant house.)

Mordaunt. (Talking to Jack, a servant, who has become tired and lies down to rest.) Wake up Jack, you indolent procrastinator. (Gets a stick that is very strong and whips Jack while he is asleep.)

Jack. Stop dat.

Mordaunt. Don't tell me to stop. (He whips him still harder)

Jack. (Waking up) Oh-----er----er-----, 'cuze me. Didn't know dat wuz you Mas'.

Mordaunt. Why are you lying in here when you are susposed to be picking cotton?

Jack. Er------er--------I---- I---- -wuz so tired I had to rest.

Mordaunt. The next time I catch you to such a trick, I am going to hurt you worse than this. Now take care of this little darky or I'll hang you to a tree.

Jack. Yas sah, Mas' I'll see to dis little ape.

Mordaunt. Remember what I said little Darky.

Exit Mordaunt.

Joe. Please take me home.

Jack. Sorry feller, but I can't. Dat's how I got in dis ole place. He jest picked me up, and I aint seen my home folks since. I might git dis kinky headknocked off, if I he'p you.

Jack. Shut up. Go to sleep. I can't sleep. It's jus' well git up.

(Jack waits for Joe to go back to sleep and he slips out of the door.)

Jack. She will think Joe did dis now, if I put dat ole' box under his piller. I needs dat money. I'll jes git it back and put de box under Joe's piller. Den I'll have some 'cuze to fin' dat box and show it to Fenny. She'll think he got it, and dat will sho' nuff turn her 'g inst him.

(He slips in quietly at window in room which he knows Fenny is not in. He goes to the old box where Fenny put it the night before. He slips out quietly and goes back to his cabin. He takes the money out, hides it, puts the box in under Joe's pillow. He then slips in his bed and goes to sleep.)

Jack. Fenny you know, nobody aint stole it.

Fenny. Well, it's gone.

Jack. I 'member you puttin' it in dat ole' box.

Mordaunt. How do I know you didn't take it, I have no proof?

Joe. How do you know dat I did take it. Finding a box under my piller am no reason that I did take it. Somebody might have slipped it under my head.

Mordaunt. I am going to punsih you. You must not eat anything for two days and stay in your room during that time. After thos two days you must work and go to your cabin at nights and stay there. I am going to have you beaten. If you disobey these orders, I will give you a still severe punishment.

Mordaunt. You needn't be afraid of him being a thief, Josephine. He didn't steal your money. Your own lover did. He gave it to you and took it from you. He is to be punished tomorrow.

Fenny. My Jack stole my money?

Mordaunt. Yes. I discovered it tonight and have made the decision. You Darkies come on to bed.

The End.

THE SOUTH OF THE FUTURE
December 12, 1951

Eight years ago, the Southern Regional Council was born out of the conscience and high resolve of a democratic nation at war. Today, in another period of international tension, we are faced with a renewed challenge to provide leadership and direction in a troubled region. It is essential that we assess clearly and wisely the role that the Southern Regional Council is to perform in this critical time.

We do not believe in the exclusive validity of any single approach or any single organization. There is not only room, but a desperate need for a wide variety of programs concerned with broadening democracy through legal, economic, legislative, religious, and educational means. Moreover, such programs are needed on all levels - national, regional, state, and local. Every group, like every individual, should chart its course with due regard for the special contribution it is fitted to make.

The Role Appropriate to the Southern Regional Council is evident in its origin and make-up. The Council's main asset is and has always been the people of the South who understand and want the full practice of democracy, and who at the same time know intimately the old evils that burden the South, and their causes. From such people is the Council's membership drawn. They have wanted a regional organization, not out of any provincial desire to separate the South's problems from the nation's, but out of the conviction that such an organization has unique advantages. It can express the best and often neglected elements of Southern thought and conscience; it can serve as a convincing demonstration of Southerners working together as fellow citizens without regard to race; and it can tap local resources and initiative often inaccessible to agencies outside the region.

The Council seeks to be a practical organization, emphasizing working solutions rather than spectacular pronouncements. Indeed, that philosophy is basic to an organization which hopes to open closed minds and substitute reason for prejudice.

The Council, by its very nature, is not a "mass pressure" organization. The number of persons in the South who are able and willing to reject the taboos on interracial effort in their own communities is growing, but it has not yet reached mass proportions. Meanwhile, the Council's membership can function effectively as enlightened citizens acting through the civic life of their communities in behalf of our common principles. Their methods are the established ones of conference, fact-finding, and persuasion.

The Council takes no part in political activity. However, it can and does consult with public agencies and officials and makes its influence felt for truly representative government.

The Council's Functions may be briefly summed up as follows:

To serve as a meeting ground for citizens of all races, occupations, and religious persuasions.

To present the facts about the region, and their implications, through newspapers, radio, magazines, pamphlets, and other public media.

To counteract appeals to prejudice and violence by demagogues, professional bigots, and hate organizations.

To provide a program adaptable to local need in both the relatively backward and the relatively advanced areas of the South.

To translate appropriate research findings from universities and other centers to the practical situations with which the action program will be concerned.

To give special emphasis to the development of leadership among promising young Southerners of all races.

To convene, by interest group, key persons in the various fields of Southern life, so that steps to genuine integration may be representatively agreed upon.

To stimulate local initiative to work for local solutions in full democracy, so that legislation and judicial rulings may be translated into justice for the individual in his everyday life.

The basic machinery necessary to enable the Council to work effectively at these tasks is: (1) trained, competent, professional persons of both races working in each Southern state as agents of improvement in public life; and (2) staff in a central office of the Council to direct and service the field people.

The Declared Purpose of the Southern Regional Council is "to attain through research and action the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region." This objective has lost none of its timeliness since it was first adopted. Although the past eight years have brought notable progress in the South, the job remaining is a vast one, and the pressures of national and international events demand an even speedier advance. Many of our institutions continue to make unfair and unwarranted distinctions between citizens solely on the basis of race. Outmoded traditions, unjustified fears, and ancient prejudices continue to exact a heavy toll on the unity, productiveness, and integrity of our society.

It is the ultimate hope and aim of the Council that it may help in bringing solution to regional problems that transcend the question of race -- problems economic, social, ethical, which affect impartially people of all races. But, for the present, the unique liability under which the South labors arises out of an unreasoning racial disharmony. The first task of informed and conscientious Southerners is to strive to create here the atmosphere in which artificial distinctions and discriminations based upon race will no longer persist. Only when that goal has been attained will the energies of enlightened men be fully released for the great task of realizing all our potential resources, natural and human.

The South of the Future, toward which our efforts are directed, is a South freed of stultifying inheritances from the past. It is a South where the measure of a man will be his ability, not his race; where a common citizenship will work in democratic understanding for the common good; where all who labor will be rewarded in proportion to their skill and achievement; where all can feel confident of personal safety and equality before the law; where there will exist no double standard in housing, health, education, or other public services; where segregation will be recognized as a cruel and needless penalty on the human spirit, and will no longer be imposed; where, above all, every individual will enjoy a full share of dignity and self-respect, in recognition of his creation in the image of God.

Equal opportunity, truly defined, includes all this and more. We have no illusion that it can be realized in the South quickly or easily or perfectly. Nor do we imagine that the Southern Regional Council can play more than a modest but creditable part toward its achievement. Yet it is the ideal toward which we strive and, short of which, we have a duty to remain dissatisfied. For it is nothing less than the American ideal.

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
A Brief Account of its Origins and Aims
April 1956

The South of the future toward which our efforts are directed, is a South freed of stultifying inheritances from the past. It is a South where the measure of a man will be his ability, not his race; where a common citizenship will work in democratic understanding for the common good; where all who labor will be rewarded in proportion to their skill and achievement; where all can feel confident of personal safety and equality before the law; where there will exist no double standard in housing, health, education, or other public services; where segregation will be recognized as a cruel and needless penalty on the human spirit, and will no longer be imposed; where, above all, every individual will enjoy a full share of dignity and self-respect, in recognition of his creation in the image of God.

SRC AND THE COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION

The Southern Regional Council and its predecessor, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, have a history of 35 years of constructive activity.

In the troubled days following World War I, race conflict and the lawlessness of terror organizations reached such proportions that the need for new techniques of restoring harmony could not be ignored. To meet this need, interracial committees were formed in cities and towns throughout the South. It was found that by bringing together influential members of both races grievances could be aired, mutual problems discussed, and a meeting of minds effected. This method had such beneficial results that interracial committees became an established part of the life of the South in the early 'twenties. Their influence became Southwide through the formation of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, a central organization with headquarters in Atlanta.

The Commission was founded in 1919 by a group of the South's leading church men and women. Among them were Dr. M. Ashby Jones, prominent Baptist minister, Dr. John Hope, president of Atlanta University, Mr. John J. Eagan, businessman and philanthropist, Dr. Plato Durham, dean of the Emory University Theology School, Dr. Robert Moton, president of Tuskegee Institute, and Dr. Will W. Alexander, the Commission's director. Its work in behalf of sound race relations was acclaimed by the South's leading newspapers, religious leaders, and by many public officials.

The Commission helped organize, extend, and guide the work of State and local interracial committees. It assisted them in making their influence felt by newspapers, civil authorities, churches, school officials, police administrators, and health officers. It gave much attention to factual analysis of the problem of lynching and other forms of interracial violence. Its auxiliary, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, under the direction of Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, did much to educate public opinion in the causes and possible remedies for such violence.

From these early activities, the Commission built up a body of acquaintance and confidence that has been an increasing asset through the years. The traditional barrier between the races was broken down to allow an interchange of ideas and mutual trust. The notion of cooperative action by people of good will, both white and Negro, took root and has continued to grow. In its twenty-five years of operation, the Commission made the meeting of white and Negro citizens for the discussion of common problems an accepted practice almost everywhere in the South. It marshalled thousands of Southern church people in opposition to lynching and other injustices, brought new light to bear on race relations, issued two million copies of pamphlets and leaflets, and symbolized the faith of the Southern white people and Negro people in the processes of mutual agreement and cooperation.

TRANSITION TO SRC

In 1939 the leaders of the Commission began to explore the possibility of expanding the activities of the organization to permit a broader approach to the problems of the South. In October, 1940, the Commission instructed its executive committee to "take whatever steps are necessary to carry out the plans for the formation of a council on Southern regional development," which would include in its program "the work of the Commission and other activities connected with the economic, educational, and social development of the South."

Meanwhile the efforts of other progressive Southerners were leading them to a similar purpose. The first movement in that direction took place when a group of Southern Negro leaders met in Durham, North Carolina, on October 20, 1942, to set forth "just what the Negro wants and is expecting of the post-war South and nation," and to enlist the aid of interested white Southerners. The result of this historic conference was a comprehensive statement covering the following areas: Political and Civil Rights, Industry and Labor, Service Occupations, Education, Agriculture, Military Service, and Social Welfare and Health. Many social thinkers regarded the Durham statement as the most hopeful pronouncement on race relations that had come out of the South in the last 75 years.

In April, 1943, a group of Southern white leaders met in Atlanta to consider the statement of the Durham conference. These white leaders found the statement "so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum," and so demonstrative of good will, that they gladly pledged their cooperation. "The need," they concluded, "is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation, and mutual respect."

SRC ORGANIZED

Representatives of both the Durham and Atlanta conferences met in Richmond in June, 1943, to work out further details. The Durham statement was adopted as a general guide to action, and a continuing committee was appointed to devise practical means of approach. The organizing meeting of the Council was held in response to a "call" issued by some of the South's finest leadership, including:

C. H. Gillman, Georgia Director, C.I.O.
George L. Googe, Southern Director, A.F.L.
M. Ashby Jones, Baptist minister
Ryland Knight, Baptist minister
Rabbi David Marx, The Temple, Atlanta
Bishop Arthur J. Moore, The Methodist Church
Ralph McGill, editor, The Atlanta Constitution
Stuart R. Oglesby, Presbyterian minister
Most Rev. Gerald P. O'Hara, Bishop of Savannah-Atlanta
Dean S. Paden, President, King Hardware Company
J. McDowell Richards, President, Columbia Theological Seminary
Bishop John Moore Walker, The Protestant Episcopal Church
Goodrich C. White, President Emory University

Following the deliberations of this group and a subsequent conference with Southern Negro leaders, the SRC was chartered early in 1944. The incorporators were Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Ralph McGill, Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, and Dr. Howard W. Odum, professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina. At the charter meeting, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation met and formally merged its program and assets with those of the Council. A strong and democratic Council had been established "to attain through research and action the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region.

Since this auspicious beginning, the Council's membership has included distinguished Southerners, white and Negro, in all walks of life. Dr. Odum was the first president of the organization. He was succeeded by Paul D. Williams, of Richmond, Va., a prominent Catholic layman and co-founder of the Catholic Committee of the South. Mr. Williams served as president for six years -- from 1945 until 1951. He was succeeded by Mr. Marion A. Wright, widely known as a South Carolina attorney active in civic and educational affairs, now living in Linville Falls, N. C.

HOW SRC WORKS

The Southern Regional Council consists of a board of some 80 Southerners representing the major religious faiths, both races, and the 13 states of the region. These people are the Southern Regional Council. They make the policies and review all activities at an annual meeting. They elect an Executive Committee which meets at least every three months to give closer direction to the organization. And full reports of all activities are sent to the members quarterly. The Council is non-profit, non-political, and non-denominational.

Financial support for the Council has come from many different individuals and organizations. Some of the organizations are: the Julius Rosenwald Fund, General Education Board, The Fund for the Republic, Division of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Church, Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church, Phelps-Stokes Fund, Catholic Committee of the South, Board of Education of the Methodist Church, Ashby Jones Memorial Fund, Committee on Woman's Work of the Presbyterian Church of the U.S., the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Marshall Field Foundation, the Doris Duke Foundation, various trade unions and some business firms. Individuals support the Council through contributions, legacies, and payment of membership dues.

WHAT SRC DOES

The Council's present functions may be summarized as follows: (1) Clearing-house and coordinating work with numerous agencies working on Southern problems; (2) research and survey to determine the facts and the state of public opinion as a basis for sound social action; (3) educational activities through a monthly bulletin, the New South, and through pamphlets, press, radio, television, conferences, and personal contacts; (4) consultative services to private and official agencies; (5) promotion of specific programs of action through the Council staff and affiliated State organizations.

Following are some of the areas with which the SRC's educational program has been concerned:

* Employment of Negro policemen in Southern communities.

* Newspaper handling of racial news.

* Community self-surveys, in which local people of both races study their problems as a basis for achieving local solutions.

* Conferences of leading white and Negro Southerners with common concerns and a common desire to further democratic practices in their areas of interest -- religion, health, housing, education, etc.

* Voluntary decisions to open professional associations, private colleges, public libraries, and the like to all qualified persons without respect to race.

* The right to vote without racial discrimination or intimidation.

* Impartial enforcement of the law and administration of justice in the South.

* Orderly compliance at the community level with the recent decisions of the Supreme Court holding public school segregation unconstitutional.

CHURCH SUPPORT

Church people have always been the moving force in the Southern interracial movement. This is as true today as it was 35 years ago. All of the major religious groups represented in the South have taken their stand in favor of the principle embodied in the Supreme Court's segregation ruling. The court ruling was endorsed by the Southern Baptist Convention, many of the Southern conferences of The Methodist Church, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (Southern), the Province of Sewanee (Southeastern) of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Catholic Bishops of the South, the various Jewish religious and fraternal groups, and virtually all of the other denominations found in the South. It is only natural that many religious Southerners should seek to put the principles of their faith into everyday practice.

The Southern Regional Council and the affiliated state groups have enjoyed both financial and moral support from religious bodies representing the three major faiths.

Dr. George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Council, received the 1953 Annual Award of the Catholic Committee of the South "for his significant contribution to the welfare of the South."

AFFILIATED STATE ORGANIZATIONS

With the aid of a grant from the Fund for the Republic, the Southern Regional Council is assisting interracial organizations in 12 Southern states - Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. Each of these organizations has its own membership, officers, and staff. In each case, people of the state involved make their own decisions as to policy and program. Affiliation with the Southern Regional Council is voluntary, and the purpose of the short-term financial aid from SRC is to help the state groups become strong, self-sustaining human relations agencies.

TOWARD THE SOUTH OF THE FUTURE

The Southern Regional Council's main asset is and has always been those Southerners who believe deeply in democratic practices, and who know first hand the problems of the region. On such people rest the hopes of the South. They have wanted a regional organization, not out of any provincial desire to separate the South's problems from the nation's, but out of the conviction that such an organization has unique advantages. It can express the best and often neglected elements of Southern thought and conscience; it can serve as a convincing demonstration of Southerners working together as fellow citizens without regard to race; and it can tap local resources and initiative often inaccessible to national groups.

The Southern Regional Council and its affiliates seek to be practical organizations, aiming at working solutions rather than spectacular pronouncements. They hold the belief that every community must ultimately find its own answers within the framework of law and conscience. They offer no master blueprint, no sovereign remedy for the South's human problems. But they do offer a method - - that of representative citizens, white and Negro, coming together in equal dignity to find the best ways to move ahead.

Race Cooperation

An account of the successful effort in two-thirds of the counties of thirteen southern states to promote justice and good-will between black and white

By George Madden Martin

The purposes of this movement for racial cooperation, the extent of its influence and its application to specific problems are described in the following article by George Madden Martin, a Southern woman and author of the Emmy Lou stories which delighted the readers of McCLURE'S a score of years ago. Mrs. Martin has known the Negro in the "black belt" of Mississippi, in Louisiana and Florida, in the rice-country of Carolina and has lived "side by side with him in rural Kentucky." The black man, she holds, has two worst enemies: "the over-zealous advocate who claims too much for him, and the execrable creature wearing a white skin who says, 'I hate a nigger.'"—THE EDITOR.

"I know of nothing that appeals so directly to the intellects and sensibilities of thoughtful men as the treatment the Negro has received among us, North and South, in the present and in the past . . . I look back . . . and I see him, not as a squalid serf, picturesque in his rags, or as we behold him on the minstrel stage, the clown in the pageant making merry with cap and bell, but as an image of impending sorrow crouched beneath the roof-tree, God's shadow upon the dial of American progress, whose cabalistic figures the wisest have not been able to read."—

HENRY WATTERSON.

THE words quoted above, written by Henry Watterson, appeared in The Century Magazine, April, 1882, forty years ago. He was then, and always, to the hour of his death, the sane friend and trusted counsellor of the Negro race. And throughout the South are innumerable other good friends of the Negro, many of these doubtless unknown to him, whose silent steady influence is of unsuspected benefit to him in many a locality, many a section of the country, where race breeds friction.

It is because these white friends do exist in unsuspected numbers throughout the South, and because they believe that through discussion and cooperation between the races better inter-racial relations may obtain, this article setting forth their ideas, is written.

Economic prosperity is essential to general progress. Economic justice is a primary condition to general peace and contentment. It is upon truisms such as these alone the white friends of the Negro in the South feel they can rest their case. Any program of economic betterment that excludes or ignores the Negro, merely retards the economic betterment of the South as a whole. On the other hand, the principal of Tuskegee Institute, Dr. Robert Moton, says:

"It is not too much to say that if the Negro could in every case receive economic justice, a large part of what we call the race problem would be solved. In many cases he would be in a position to solve his own problems."

Human misfortune beats more mercilessly upon those who are already unfortunate. The color line holds in industry. In the cities, the country over, the black man is the first laborer to be discharged, the first to have his wages cut, the last to be re-hired. Negro women and girls engaged in domestic service in cities and towns, the country over, too often are without adequate provision for their physical well-being and comfort, and without proper moral safeguards during the hours of their rest and recreation. In our larger centers of population the Negro must live and must labor in conditions that are unsafe and unsanitary. And it is the generally accepted practice in the South that Negroes are paid a lower wage than is paid the white employee for the same kind and character of work. What more baffling and discouraging to the industrious, self-respecting Negro than his knowledge of all this! The facts are ugly, and they are against us.

THE NEGRO'S HANDICAP IN FARMING

In the rural districts in the South fully eighty per cent of the Negro population is engaged in the different phases of agriculture. There are about a thousand counties in the South, and there are about nine hundred thousand Negro farmers in this section. Negro tenant farmers suffer from the disadvantages of makeshift methods of accounting, and irregular terms of settlement with their landlords. Many of these Negro tenant farmers are ignorant and unable to keep their own accounts at all, while their landlords do not always take the time and trouble to keep systematic accounts themselves. The result is that the disadvantage of the doubt in such cases falls on the Negro farmer. Housing conditions for these Negro tenants on many farms are deplorably bad. Many planters still provide their tenants with nothing better than a one-room log cabin, or one-room box house, which is conducive to neither comfort, vital energy, nor morality. In some places in the South it is still impossible for Negroes to buy land at any price. The effect of this policy is bad. Without the responsibility that attaches to land ownership, the Negro farmer tends to become restless, indifferent, unreliable and unaspiring. It is short-sighted policy also that is based on the idea that the planter gains where he makes it necessary for his tenants to come to him for all of their food supplies. And the system of farming with such Negro labor as the planter may obtain from prisons and through the courts by payment of fines and fees for the offenders, the system of peonage, works injury to all around, to white and black.

It is consciousness of these economic disadvantages the country over, to go no further in the enumeration of the Negro's wrongs, that, as Mr. Watterson says, weighs upon the minds and sensibilities of his white friends. Says The University Race Commission, composed of representatives of all the leading state universities of the South:

"The South cannot realize its destiny if one-third of its population is undeveloped and inefficient."

Says Dr. George Stoves, of the Social Service Committee of the General Conference, M. E. Church, South:

"Treat the Negro half-right, and he is the best common laborer in the world. What would he be if we treat him wholly right?"

The attempt is constantly made by the unthinking and uninformed white, to fasten upon the Negro of to-day as perforce a racial trait, the characteristics of the old-time, easy-going Negro as popularly conceived, the childlike, shiftless, irresponsible, Negro of fiction and the stage. The attempt is as short-sighted as the supposition is untrue.

Paul Thompson

The paragraph which follows appeared not long ago in The Saturday Evening Post:

"The long period of serfage . . . brought out in him the best and the worst of his traits—patience in suffering, or with work in hard conditions, adroitness in catering to those above . . . fear of punishment from which there was no appeal, lazy enjoyment of any pleasure possible, waste without counting for the morrow, since one had no responsibility or obligation to do more than get through appointed tasks from which escape was impossible."

This is not a character sketch of the old-time Negro as revealed to us during and just after slavery, though it well could be. The paragraph occurs in an article upon Russia by Princess Cantacuzene, and describes the Russian peasant under and just after serfdom. A common condition will produce a like result regardless of the race or the color upon which it operates.

White Man Doesn't Know the Negro

A serious obstacle to a proper consideration of the Negro question lies in popular and mistaken notions of the Negro. There is no predominating Negro type. Alfred Holt Stone, one of the largest and most successful planters of the Mississippi Delta region, in an address at the University of Virginia, said on this question:

"There is no such concrete thing as the Southern Negro, just as there is no such definite and delimited individual as the Southern white man. The Negroes present a large variety of differences of complexion, native intelligence, education, inherited and acquired characteristics, temperament and disposition. In short they differ among themselves in all these respects which differentiate individuals and groups of any and every other race."

In other words, the white man in the United States will never see the Negro as he is, until he sees him as an individual, and sees his case as an individual case. The Negro tenant farmer cannot read, write or cipher. The Negro college student majors in economics. The Negro editor sits in the Pan-African Conference assembled in London, Brussels and Paris consecutively. The Negro child in the remote districts, ragged and barefooted, attends school three months out of the year. A Negro high school senior receives a first prize in a poetry contest held by the Empire Federation of Woman's Clubs. The Negro field-hand shuffles as he plays his mouth-organ. Henry Burleigh sets down the spirituals and songs of his race. Charles Gilpin plays "Emperor Jones" in an O'Neill play.

Dr. D. C. Barrow, Chancellor, University of Georgia, comments thus upon this lack of knowledge of the Negro on the part of the white man:

"It is not strange that a want of knowledge should exist on the part of white people as to the Negroes.

"With abolition of slavery the Negro was turned loose in a large measure to find his own way. The effort was necessarily a groping search. Sympathetic understanding between the two races was in a large measure destroyed by the experiences of reconstruction. It is not worth while, however, to thresh over this straw except in so far as to state these things as causes of the misunderstanding.

"The Negro, in making his independent effort to adjust himself to his new condition, did not always go as wisely as he would have gone if sympathy had been enlisted in his behalf. He did go, however, and he did grow.

"The changes which came about were more or less carefully hidden from his white associates. He thought this necessary.

"One effect of this was to have the Negro undergoing a change of which his white neighbors were not aware. He, on the contrary had the white man as an open book."

Dr. Edgar Gardner Murphy, author of "The Present South," and a Southern authority on racial conditions in general, says:

"The moment the Negro passes out of the servant class, lifts himself into the property owner class, becomes a business man or becomes a leader among his own people, by that very process of lifting himself up, he passes out of the knowledge of the white people, so that the strata of Negro life that offers the best of what the Negroes may become, is not known to the white people. There is among many white people the assumption that every Negro is an uneducated Negro."

The World War had its effect upon the Negro as it had upon all other peoples. It marks an epochal change in the consciousness of the race here in the United States. Says the Rev. Cary Montague, Editor of The Southern Churchman, of Richmond, Virginia, speaking through his own paper:

"It brought to him a great awakening. He awoke to find himself able to do, and do well, a great many things he had not known he could do, and no one else had known he could do. He stands to himself today in an equivocal place between the old and the new."

The Great War brought to him unforeseen opportunities. It thrust him into the draft and the army, bringing to him a consciousness as never before that he, too, was a citizen. The same editor through The Southern Churchman points out that he bore his full share in the struggle, that he put two hundred and twenty-five million dollars into Liberty bonds, gave his two million dollars for relief work, shared in the work of the Red Cross, went overseas, was cited for bravery, was awarded the croix de guerre, and that he made the discovery that he, too, was a thorough-going and feeling American.

The War also thrust him, a concededly valued factor as never before, into the industrial world. An unforeseen hand opened to him the door to economic equality and freedom. His unprecedented migration to the North at this time, and the awakening of the South to the dangers of labor shortage, revealed to him his economic value to the South as never before. Better jobs, better treatment, higher pay, the country over, taught him much that he has not forgotten.

Singularly enough the boll-weevil — of all agents — since the War, has done its unforeseen economic part for the Negro also in some sections of the South. It has reduced the value of cotton-producing land to a point where in some localities, it is being offered to, and purchased by, Negro farmers and laborers.

Now all these things, however vaguely known to the whites, are well known to the Negroes. They have an increasing number of newspapers and magazines that make a specialty of publishing such facts and spreading them among the race.

The reaction which everywhere followed the signing of the Armistice was seen first in the United States in the abruptly changed attitudes of the black and white races. Changed conditions called for too sudden a readjustment between the two. There was in some sections a movement to resurrect the Ku Klux in preparation for a rumored uprising of the Negroes. There was a general undertone of excitement and apprehension among the Negroes over rumored plans of whites to repress and oppress all Negroes, especially Negro soldiers. Unwise leaders and counsellors appeared in both races. Race riots became more and more frequent throughout the states.

White Friends Seek to Dispel Prejudice

When these grave conditions of bitterness and violence began to be apparent, there came together in Atlanta a group of men and women representing all sections of the nation; some of them had been for years laboring for better race relations; others had in different phases of war work in America and overseas been brought into touch with the Negro soldier. These men and women, recognizing that this undeniable progress in the teeth of great odds had stimulated the hope and ambition of the Negro race, and reminding themselves that the aspirations of the human heart cannot be suppressed without disaster, agreed that some way must be discovered to dispel this race suspicion and hatred, and if possible make what threatened to be a national calamity, contribute to permanent improvement in the relations of white and black Americans.

The following statement was given out to the people of Atlanta as an expression of the spirit animating the conference:

"We, a group of Christians, deeply interested in the welfare of our entire community, irrespective of race or class distinction, and frankly facing the many evidences of racial unrest, which in some places have already culminated in terrible tragedies, would call the people of our own beloved community to a calm consideration of our situation before extremists are allowed to create a condition where reason is impossible. In no spirit of alarmists, but with the clear vision of earnest men, conscious of the responsibility which a Christian democracy imposes upon self-reasoning and self-governing citizens, let us strive to meet our obligations in the spirit of Jesus Christ. . . .

"We do not believe that there is any one statement which we may make, or any one act which we may perform which will solve all the supremely difficult and delicate problems that face us, but we are confident that by conferences conducted by leaders of both races, coming together in the spirit of Jesus Christ, there will be an atmosphere of mutual confidence and wisdom out of which shall come plans and enterprises for the righting of wrongs, and the creation of fair and just opportunities for even the least of our brethren."

The Negro himself, born into race consciousness and race pride overnight, as it were, looked askant at the movement. He welcomed friends, but scanned carefully and even suspiciously the gifts they bore. Yet never had he greater need than at this time of friends; wise friends; sane friends; honest friends; real friends; friends to help him to such an understanding of true conditions as would lead him to shun alignments that would compromise him, to denounce cajoleries that would flatter him, and to refute false hopes that falser counsellors held out to him. Friends who cared for him and believed in him, who never have in the past, and never will in the present abandon him, who recognize their need of him as his of them, and who see in a common frankness and cooperation, the road to common trust and common welfare.

"I believe that through Inter-racial cooperation there will come a better understanding between the races; more helpfulness; more usefulness and in the end the great betterment of all citizens"
—Governor Edwin P. Morrow of Kentucky

After many conferences between these men and women gathered at Atlanta, it became apparent that as nearly as possible the facts should be secured and such work begun as these facts seemed to demand. Three things were clear at the start:

1. The white people of the South have a conviction that they understand the Negro best. Yet the white man of the black belt in Mississippi, or in Alabama, sees his racial problem as one thing, and the tidewater planter of South Carolina, and the farmer in Arkansas, sees his as something altogether different. Chicago in her turn considers that she alone grasps her own racial difficulties relating to the Negro. Omaha sees hers as peculiarly hers. And so with Ohio, or Maryland, or New York City, or Boston. So with the Pacific coast. Attempts on the part of any one section to settle the racial troubles of another, as a rule breed fresh bitterness and fresh misunderstandings.

2. On the other hand, common counsellings among wise leaders of both races in local troubles in whatever section, have led to better relations time upon time. After riots in Southern cities the representative whites have called in to conference representative Negroes.

3. And further, we American white people will discuss without self-consciousness, our duties born out of present conditions to every people under God's heaven except the one that, as things are now, we must stand or fall with.

The Need of Joint Discussions

With these three outstanding conclusions in mind, the men and women gathered in conference at Atlanta felt and declared that the time was come when the American people, white and black, must get together and discuss their differences.

The National War Work council of The Young Men's Christian association at this point appropriated a sum of money sufficient to make a beginning (later other appropriations were made) and the Inter-Racial commission was formed under the leadership of Southern men, with authority to do anything possible to find a way out of the tangled race situation which the war had left.

After much study by the commission of existing conditions, it was agreed that between the best white and the best Negro men and women of the South, there is little communication or understanding. That this gulf is due to race prejudices, the after effects of reconstruction, the agitation of designing politicians etc., etc. That as a result, white people in the South, in spite of frequent claims to the contrary, have been kept from a knowledge of the aspirations and capabilities of the best class of Negroes. And the best Negroes have grown farther and farther away from the best white people, and there is a tendency with the Negro people to a loss of faith, not only in the Southern whites, but in whites generally and their civilization.

It was apparent therefore, that the first task was to bridge the gulf between intelligent white and Negro men and women. This was attempted by the commission by building from the bottom. After making a survey of the counties of the South having an appreciable Negro population, an attempt was made to bring together in each of these counties, a small group of not over six to ten white and Negro leaders as a permanent committee of counsel and cooperation. These are known as Inter-Racial committees.

These county inter-racial committees in turn were asked to cooperate with the State Inter-Racial committee made up in each state of leading church men, business men, lawyers, and others interested, who would guide the work of the local committees. In most of the states the governor cooperated in creating the state commission.

Over all state committees and county committees is the Southern Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation, with headquarters in the Palmer Building, Atlanta.

On the general commission, including representatives from thirteen Southern states, are five Negroes out of a total membership of fifty-eight. The Negro members are: R. R. Moton, president of Tuskegee institute; Dr. John Hope, president of Morehouse college, Atlanta; Bishop R. E. Jones, of the Methodist Episcopal church North, New Orleans; Dr. Isaac Fisher, editor of the Fisk University News, Nashville, and Dr. John M. Gandy, president of the Petersburg Normal and Industrial Institute, Petersburg, Florida.

There are eight women on the commission of which Mrs. Luke Johnson of Atlanta is director of woman's work. Other women members are Mrs. J. D. Hammond of Islip, N. Y., director of the Southern Publicity bureau; Mrs. J. H. Cranford, Jasper, Alabama; Mrs. Archibald Davis, Atlanta; Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, Madison, Georgia; Mrs. T. W. Bickett, Raleigh, North Carolina; Mrs. W. D. Weatherford, Nashville, and Mrs. B. B. Mumford, Richmond, Virginia.

John J. Eagan, Atlanta manufacturer, heads the commission. Dr. Will W. Alexander, of Atlanta, and R. H. King, of Atlanta, member of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, are directors.

Heading the state organizations are ministers, attorneys, social workers, college presidents and a governor.

The list of chairmen of state committees follows:

ALABAMA—John D. Rather, attorney, Tuscumbia.

ARKANSAS—Dr. J. H. Reynolds, president of Hendrix college, Conway.

FLORIDA—Dr. J. G. Venable, pastor Riverside Presbyterian church, Jacksonville.

GEORGIA—Dr. M. Ashby Jones, pastor Ponce de Leon Baptist church, Atlanta.

KENTUCKY—Governor Edwin P. Morrow, Frankfort (honorary chairman). P. C. Dix, state secretary Y. M. C. A., Louisville (active chairman).

LOUISIANA—L. M. Favrot, department of education, Baton Rouge.

MISSISSIPPI—Dr. C. W. Crisler, Galloway Memorial Methodist church, Jackson.

NORTH CAROLINA—Dr. William L. Poteat, president of Wake Forest college, Wake Forest.

OKLAHOMA—Judge J. R. Keaton, attorney, Oklahoma City.

SOUTH CAROLINA—G. Croft Williams, Secretary of the state board of charities, Columbia.

TENNESSEE — Dr. W. D. Weatherford, president of Southern College of the Y. M. C. A., Nashville.

TEXAS—Dr. R. E. Vinson, University of Texas, Austin.

VIRGINIA—Dr. R. E. Blackwell, president of Randolph-Macon college, Ashland.

At this moment the commission is functioning in these thirteen states. Its work thus far has met with approval and encouragement from the press, the bench, the bar, the church, the faculties of schools and colleges, the medical profession and the business men. Eight hundred county inter-racial committees have already shown their value in their communities.

A few counties hesitated to cooperate at first, but in almost every case substantial citizens were found who were ready to lead.

"If the conditions indicated by these charges should continue both God and man would justly condemn Georgia more severely than God and man have condemned Belgium and Leopold for the Congo atrocities."—Former Governor Dorsey of Georgia

This commission on inter-racial cooperation now functioning at Atlanta, states its own case:

"All the members of the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation live in the South, and have been throughout their lives intimately related to Southern institutions and Southern communities. They are leaders in various phases of Southern life, legal, educational, industrial, agricultural, church and civic. The service of these men and women to the commission has been voluntary. They have been actuated solely by a desire to serve in relation to a national problem, recognizing that in the adjustment of race relations in America, the South must bear the major responsibility.

"The commission believes that race hatred and force will only complicate race relations in America more seriously, and that the only alternative to these is to be found in the counsel and cooperation of men of character, intelligence and good-will. To that end the commission has sought to bring together in every locality in the South, the strongest white and colored leaders of this type. Wherever this habit of conference between the leaders of the races has been practiced, racial peace has been easy to maintain, and many community improvements beneficial to both white and colored have been made.

Mrs. T. W. Bickett, member of the women's con inuation committee of the Inter-racial movement

"The commission is convinced that the local community is the place in which permanent improvement in race relations must be made, and that the problem of race relations in its larger aspects is but the sum total of numerous local situations, and that these can be satisfactorily adjusted only by conference and cooperation between the white and colored leaders. None of these within themselves are race problems, they are national problems which affect all races, but which are often found in a more aggravated form in communities which are composed of two different races.

"The Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation will do whatever it can to cooperate with the local inter-racial committees. However, it cannot be too strongly emphasized that the success of this effort to secure inter-racial good will and justice depends upon the sincere and intelligent effort on the part of local inter-racial committees.

"The activities are not new. Persons and agencies already in the communities may be set to work for the welfare of the whole community, and not merely for the white community."

Southern Leaders Called Together

Immediately following the permanent organization of the commission at Atlanta in 1919, three members of the commission, Rt. Rev. Theodore D. Bratton, Episcopal Bishop of Mississippi, Dr. Wm. L. Poteat, president Wake Forest College, N. C., and Dr. R. E. Blackwell, president, Randolph-Macon College, Virginia, sent invitations in the name of the commission to a hundred leaders of these state and county committees over the South, to attend a conference at Blue Ridge, N. C., August 18-21, 1920. The findings of this conference are embodied in a report entitled, "An Appeal to the Christian People of the South." This report opens as follows:

"We, a group of white Christian men and women of the South, absolutely loyal to the best traditions and convictions of the South, and especially to the principle of racial integrity, voluntarily assembled upon the invitation of the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation, and after prayerful and careful consideration of prevailing inter-racial relations and conditions, do deliberately declare it to be our profound conviction that the real responsibilities for the solution of inter-racial problems in the South rest directly upon the hearts and consciences of the Christian forces of our land.

"We are also persuaded that the best method by which to approach the consideration and solution of such problems is through local organizations composed of the recognized Christian leaders of both races, organizations similar to the Christian Council formed and functioning so effectively under the Inter-Racial Christian leadership of Atlanta, Georgia.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that grave injustices are often suffered by the members of the Negro race in matters of legal procedure, travelling facilities, educational facilities, and public press, domestic service, child welfare, and in other relations of life. Therefore we venture to make the following observations and suggestions."

Whereupon follow declared and definite stands upon the subjects of lynching, legal justice, travelling facilities, sanitation and housing, education, and an appeal to fellow Christians of both races to unite in a sincere and immediate effort to solve inter-racial problems according to the principles of the Gospel, and for the highest interest and benefit of all concerned.

As stated already, there are now eight hundred committees in eight hundred counties of the South. Of these forty per cent are functioning with fair efficiency. This means that in eight hundred of the thousand counties of the South, have been found a little handful of white men and colored men who desire to cooperate and work out together this and that concrete trouble; that in eight hundred counties there is a group willing to sit down and talk things over.

Many of these county committees have already shown their value in bettering their communities. Their activity has not sprung from any outside pressure. It has been planned in frank open counsel of white and colored leaders, the home folks. The work of these cooperative committees is not work for colored people, but work with colored people for community betterment. Since the committees are without authority they must rely upon the various organizations already functioning, and which are, or should be, concerned with race relations, such as city or county boards administering health, education, recreation, streets, sewers, and lights; private organizations such as churches, associated charities, child-caring agencies; civic agencies such as the press and public service corporations.

Work Commands Enlightened Consciences

All of the colored people do not have confidence in the movement, nor do all the white people subscribe to its aims. But it represents the most enlightened conscience, and the mutual good will of the South. It sprang out of the desire on the part of Christian white people to meet the demands of social justice. And it has been made possible by a small group of colored people who are not too much embittered by the past to give their white friends this opportunity to prove that they are sincere in their desire to find the basis of lasting racial peace, and to safeguard to the Negro a fair day of full opportunity.

The wisdom and necessity of cooperation between the two races have been frequently emphasized, not only by statesmen of national influence but by men of the South, both black and white.

William Howard Taft, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, declared in 1920 in a letter to Dr. John R. Mott of the National War Work council:

"The only hope of the Negroes of the South is through their own efforts and through the cooperation of the Southern whites with them. I earnestly urge you not to withhold further aid out of your war fund because of the imminence of the danger of race conflict due to the conditions produced by the war."

Governors of Southern states are giving material aid to the Inter-racial commission. Governor Edwin P. Morrow of Kentucky is not only an advocate of racial cooperation but is a member of the commission in his state.

Former Governor Charles H. Brough of Arkansas in a telegram urging the National War Work Council to make a part of its funds available for the inter-racial movement, said:

"Arkansas vitally interested in renewal inter-racial appropriation from War Work council for 1920 in order to take care of vital and important work being done by our splendid inter-racial commission. Quick and definite action is absolutely essential for the success of future progress which means the suppression of race disturbances in our state. The work of the commission, is sane and constructive."

Former Governor A. H. Roberts of Tennessee during his term of office said of the work of the commission:

"I am satisfied that the work done by the Inter-racial commission has greatly promoted a sense of justice and friendliness between the races."—T. W. Bickett, late Governor of North Carolina

"Will you permit me to express my appreciation of the fine work that has been done in Tennessee by the State and local inter-racial committees. I can bear testimony to the increasing good-will between the two races and to their cooperation in many things that make for the public welfare."

Mrs. Luke Johnson, director of women's work for the Inter-racial commission

The late Governor T. W. Bickett of North Carolina, who died recently, said of the movement:

"I have been deeply interested in the work done by the Inter-racial commission. I am satisfied that it has greatly promoted a sense of justice and friendliness between the races. In my opinion it would be a calamity for this work to be discontinued."

Former Governor Hugh M. Dorsey of Georgia in his pamphlet, "The Negro in Georgia," in which he considered charges that Negroes had been lynched, held in peonage and driven out of the state by organized lawlessness, said:

"In some counties the Negro is being driven out as though he were a wild beast. In others he is being held as a slave. To me it seems we stand indicted as a people before the world. If the conditions indicated by these charges should continue, both God and man would justly condemn Georgia more severely than God and man have

"The Inter-racial movement in the South was inspired by a desire to make a practical contribution to the solution of the race problem. The race problem cannot be solved by either race alone. The Inter-racial movement while recognizing rights, emphasizes duties on the part of each race. The only way to help the black man is to help him to help himself."

R. E. Jones, Negro, New Orleans; Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, says:

"The white people of America must actively, with a genuine, unselfish friendliness continue to help the Negroes industrially, intellectually and morally, not only for the sake of the Negro but for the whole nation. In order to obtain the best constructive results there must be real sympathetic cooperation between the leaders of the two races: there should be an earnest effort to understand the causes of bad feeling and open friction."

R. E. Blackwell, President of Randolph-Macon college, Ashland, Virginia:

"A movement that has the support of church women of all denominations and of social leaders as well will meet with no antagonism. Indeed what has surprised me is to find that the conscience of our people of all classes is so quick to respond to the appeal we make for cooperation with the Negro in his efforts for improvement."

Isaac Fisher, Negro, professor at Fisk University, Nashville:

"In the history of the South this was the first agency ever set up to give the Negroes and whites a chance to see into each other's hearts on a large scale."

Serving actively in the movement are such leaders in both races as Dr. John Hope, condemned Belgium and Leopold for the Congo atrocities."

Former President Wilson, during his second term declared in the course of a public address:

"I know myself, as a Southern man, how sincerely the heart of the South desires the good of the Negro and the advancement of his own race on all sound and sensible lines. Everything that can be done in that direction is of the highest value . . . Our object is to know the needs of the Negro and sympathetically help him in every way that is possible to his good and for our good."

Bishop Theodore Bratton of the Episcopal diocese of Mississippi says:

"The progress of proper racial relations must be faster than at present if the Christian forces are going to reach and overcome the un-Christian forces which are too busy and too blatant."

William J. Hutchins, President of Berea college, Berea, Kentucky, says:

"I heartily endorse the work and methods of the Commission on Inter-racial Cooperation with which I have had some familiarity."

Adams, president of Georgetown college, Georgetown, Ky.; Bishop George Clement, Negro, Louisville; Bishop Benjamin Kaily, Savannah, Ga.; Bishop Thomas C. Darst, Wilmington, N. Examples of Cooperation

The following colleges and universities in Kentucky are cooperating with the Inter-racial Commission of Kentucky:

Center College, Danville, (white)
Wesleyan College, Winchester, (white)
Berea College, Berea, (white)
Georgetown College, Georgetown, (white)
Eastern State Normal, Richmond, (white)
Simmons' University, Louisville, (colored)
Lincoln Institute, Lincoln Ridge, (colored)
Colored State Normal, Frankfort, (colored)

While none of the Southern colleges has officially endorsed the movement, many university men are on the inter-racial committees, and a number of these colleges actually are cooperating. Among these are:

Southern Baptist Theological seminary, Louisville, (white)
Fisk University, Nashville, (colored)
Southern College of the Young Men's Christian association, Nashville, (white)

As an example of how local inter-racial cooperation works, take the writer's own state of Kentucky. This state ranks high in illiteracy. Precarious and unhappy in many ways is the lot of the Negro child in the small town community. Nor is it fair to expect him to meet the competition in life without his quota of ordinary common schooling. The inter-racial committee for Breathitt county, long known as bloody Breathitt, a group of whites and blacks working together, secured three acres of land and erected an adequate school house for the Negroes of Jackson, the county seat, the building costing seven thousand dollars.

It is manifest that the Negro teachers should be better educated than those taught. It follows that in the absence of available high schools or normal schools for the colored people in the rural districts, the teacher, himself or herself, the product of the county grade schools, will be deficient in adequate standards. The inter-racial committee of Graves county, whites and blacks working together, assisted materially in creating sentiment making possible a high school for the colored people of Mayfield, Kentucky, the building costing twenty-five thousand dollars.

The committee in Fayette county, working together, aided in securing a bond issue in Lexington for a hundred thousand dollar high school for the colored people of that city. The building is about to be erected.

There is no more important work for local Inter-racial committees than preventive measures to be taken against the possibility of mob violence in their communities. In some sections the danger is always imminent, in others probable and in all possible. The average man does not think so, and yet experience shows that in places where the danger seems least, such things have occurred. Mob violence is not simply a question that involves the Negro race, but the entire structure of our society and civilization.

How a Mob Was Dispersed

A depraved, drug-crazed Negro killed the sheriff of Hopkins county, Kentucky, when this officer went to arrest him, unarmed and fearing no violence. A mob immediately formed in Madisonville, and not only were there threats of lynching the murderer on every hand, but also to burn the colored section of the town. The colored members of the Inter-racial committee got together and called a conference with the white members. The colored members of the committee agreed to offer a reward for the arrest and conviction of the murderer. They immediately had struck off hundreds of hand-bills, signed by representative Negroes of the region, regretting the killing of Sheriff Hunter, who was known to be especially friendly to the colored people, and distributed these among the angry threatening mob. The effect was immediate, for when these white men saw the attitude of the colored citizens, and were convinced they had no sympathy for the lawless element among their race, the mob quitely dispersed, and Hopkins county and the State of Kentucky were saved the disgrace of a lynching, and possibly the lives and homes of innocent colored people. The Negro was subsequently arrested, tried at Madisonville without any disturbance whatever, convicted, and electrocuted. The Negroes of the community paid their proffered reward, refusing assistance from their white friends, who, moved by their upholding of law and order, wished to help them.

At Corbin, Kentucky, a colored man was accused of seriously cutting a white man. In this case the man later was found to be innocent, and the real offender, a white man, apprehended. At the moment, however, mob spirit ran high, and all the colored people of the town were herded together, put aboard trains, and sent out of the county. The Inter-racial committee for this county later secured the indictment of some thirty members of the mob, and the ringleader was sent to the penitentiary.

The instinct for recreation and play is natural in all races alike, and alike for all its wholesome gratification makes for better health, better morals, better efficiency, and greater contentment. Segregation in cities forces the Negro to live and play in unwholesome and unsanitary conditions.

Prejudice fades before knowledge. Let any one interested observe, for example, the expending of public funds in communities where any proportion of Negroes live. They are the last to be given paved streets, the last to get hospitals or playgrounds, the last to be considered in all respects that make for better living conditions. The most needy, as a rule, theirs are the needs last to be considered or met.

Commercial clubs in a number of cities of the South have undertaken the improvement of relations between the races. In Nashville, the club committee meets with a committee of Negro citizens for frank discussions of a program to improve the condition of the Negro. A similar plan was recently adopted by the Memphis Chamber of Commerce.

In the Memphis territory, the Chamber of Commerce at the request of the local Inter-racial committee working according to program through already existing agencies, appointed a committee to inquire into better living conditions for the colored people in Memphis. As a result of the findings of this committee, the business men in Memphis agreed to give two dollars for every one dollar given by a Negro, for improving recreation conditions for colored people in that city.

The Inter-racial committee for Jefferson county, Kentucky, moving through the park commission, has the promise of two play grounds and a swimming pool for colored people in the congested Negro district of Louisville.

The country Negro is often timid and backward in finding his best market. Yet the Negro farmer's prosperity is the country merchant's prosperity. An Inter-racial committee in Tennessee moving through the farm bureau for better markets for the Negro farmer, reports the case of a young colored man appearing at a local farm bureau:

"Can a man like me on the outside have a look in here?"

He was told that any farmer who had anything to sell was welcome. This colored man has since brought in one hundred thousand dollars in shipments of chickens from his county, starting with a small flock. This the Tennessee Inter-racial committee calls self-development in a local community.

Any man, white or colored, who knowingly through the medium of the franchise, creates prejudice between whites and colored here in America, is an enemy to both races. Intelligent whites and blacks rather will try to anticipate all grounds for such issues.

A leader of his race—Dr. John M. Hope, President of Morehouse College, Atlanta

How Race Prejudice Retarded Progress

The Negro vote in Louisville two years ago, defeated a bond issue for the betterment of the Louisville University, an institution from which colored students are excluded. Bad feeling between the races was engendered. Recently the Inter-racial committee for this territory helped to put over a million dollar bond issue for the public schools. Going to the Board of Education it secured a statement that 18 per cent of the issue would be devoted to the colored schools. The colored people considered this division just and generous and almost to an individual lined up in favor of the issue. The good will this time engendered by this cooperation between the Board of Education and the colored people, went a long ways in restoring former relations. The University bond issue is to be put to the public again in the near future. The Inter-racial committee is now seeking for some possible common ground that will insure its passage.

Cooperation between local committeees and the press of each community, has led many editors throughout the South to adopt a policy of handling Negro news which will not agitate the sensational features of race relations. Incalculable damage can be done by flaring headlines. The abandonment of a sensational policy in news and headlines both in the white and Negro press is desirable. Almost every editor who has been approached on this subject by inter-racial committees has gladly cooperated.

A complete list of the newspapers cooperating is difficult to furnish, the majority of the editors in the South proving themselves ready to cooperate. Among the representative newspapers now cooperating through editorials and news columns are The Charlotte Observer, The Greensboro News, The Nashville Banner, The New Orleans Times-Picayune, The Dallas News, The Atlanta Georgian, The Memphis Commercial Appeal, The Louisville Post, The Herald, and The Courier Journal, The Lexington Leader, The Macon Telegraph, The Jackson News, The Record, a Catholic weekly of Louisville, and The Christian Observer, Louisville.

In the face of a racial outbreak, The Pensacola Journal featured a communication from a leading white citizen of such standing as would command a general and respectful hearing, the effect of this appeal preventing a lynching. Under the caption, "Let the Law Rule," this appeal said:

"The ship that weathers a bad storm is the one that passengers select for future travel. So the community that retains its poise in socially stormy weather, is the one which wise people select as their permanent home. Such a storm we have now upon us, and I am pleading for community poise and calmness, so that we may find the proper solution.

"A homicide took place on Friday. Let us be calm. I am informed the facts are:"

After details of the crime the story proceeds as follows:

"Sheriff....., of Santa Rosa county, when notified ..., placed his deputies on the trail and succeeded in arresting the Negro..... He wisely eluded the excited neighborhood and like a veteran of experience, brought his prisoner to the Pensacola jail for safe keeping.

".....Now I wish to plead with my fellow-citizens of Santa Rosa county to follow the example of this excellent sheriff. Friends, let us be calm. Let the law reign supreme. This is not a case of heinous, wilful, premeditated homicide. No atrocious motive is laid bare by the act of this darkey. He was at his own home. He was on his own rented farm. He was asserting his right not to loan his cutter. He was assaulted by one man and held by another.

"Remember, I am not blaming any one. I am pleading with you not to momentarily forget the dignity of your citizenship and resort to violence. We have courts of law dealing out justice. All the witnesses are living. ..... Let us not besmirch, soil, stain or defile the good record that Santa Rosa county has made in the last years of good citizenship. I am your fellow-citizen, etc., etc."

As stated, this appeal together with the editorials of the Pensacola press prevailed, and it appears that the Negro, who acted in self defense, will get a fair trial.

The Louisville newspapers recently featured the startling news of a school girl returning home here in the city, being dragged into an alley by a Negro, and her hair cut off. The local inter-racial committee investigated. Racial outbreaks have started on less provocation. Weakening under cross examination, the girl broke down and confessed that having had her hair bobbed against her parents' wishes, she was afraid to return home and tell the truth, and so made up the story. The facts proven, every newspaper in the city gave the correct version.

Knowledge Versus Preconceived Ideas

The second state Inter-racial Conference for Kentucky, Governor Edwin P. Morrow, honorary chairman of the state committee, was shortly held in Louisville at the Jefferson county courthouse. A portion of the report of the findings committee as adopted by the Conference follows:

"Resolved that we place on record our gratitude to Almighty God for his grace as shown in the improvement of the racial situation, and the advance of the Negro race in Kentucky.

"Resolved, that it is essential not only to inter-racial harmony but to the highest welfare and the best progress of each race, that there be equal justice and impartial enforcement of the law in the courts for both races. Only thus can common interest and the security of the commonwealth and our institutions be conserved.

"Resolved, that it is most earnestly recommended that students in the high schools, academies, colleges and normal schools, both white and colored, be given an opportunity to become familiar with the history, literature, songs, and aspirations each of the other race, with a view to banish prejudice from the minds of youth by substituting knowledge for preconceived ideas.

"Resolved, that the fiscal courts of Kentucky be urged to appoint Negro County Farm Agents, and to assist the Negro farmers in becoming up-to-date producers and citizens.

"Resolved, that appreciative attention be called to the fact that in Louisville colored taxpayers serve on both petit and grand juries apparently in just ratio to their respective numbers. What is safe in Louisville is certainly safe elsewhere in the state, and we express our earnest hope that the Negro will be given his share in this field of service.

"Whereas, mutual understanding is obviously the fairest basis for good will and agreement, and

"Whereas, the most direct avenue of approach to inter-racial understanding lies in community action, and

"Whereas, abstract discussions are, on the other hand, the cause of much racial misunderstanding, therefore be it

"Resolved, that we urge for adoption the principle that concrete cases and situations in local communities be made the basis of inter-racial adjustment."

The women of the South, white and colored, can do much to aid in this inter-racial readjustment. The Southern white woman in fact has spoken for herself.

In the beginning of the year 1920 the women of the Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, Mrs. H. P. Winsbury, of Missouri, and Mrs. Archibald Davis, of Georgia, Chairmen, became convinced that the "existing racial situations in the South were a challenge to Christian faith," and also an opportunity "to show to the whole world the power of Christianity to settle racial differences and to meet inter-racial crises everywhere."

They, therefore, created a commission for the purpose of "Studying the whole question of race relationships, the needs of Negro women and children and the methods of cooperation by which better conditions might be brought about."

This commission began its operations by seeking to know something of the attitude and thought of the leaders of Negro women of the South. An unusual opportunity for doing this was afforded them in the meeting of the biennial session of the National Colored Women's Clubs in Tuskegee, Alabama, July, 1920. In that body of 800 Negro women, they found speakers, writers, poets, artists, business women, teachers, secretaries, lawyers, bankers. As they listened to the addresses and debates and witnessed the executive ability of these educated Negro women they realized that in that body was massed a potential power of which they had not dreamed.

"In the history of the South this was the first agency ever set up to give the Negroes and whites a chance to see into each other's hearts on a large scale."—Isaac Fisher, professor at Fisk University, Nashville

Women of Two Races Go Into Conference

Before going to Tuskegee a group of these Negro women had been asked to remain after the close of their biennial session for a day's conference with the representatives of the white denominational commission.

When this conference, held by the women of the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, was reported to the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation, this organization offered to finance a meeting which should be composed of the official leaders of all the denominations and Christian agencies of women in the South.

This conference was held in Memphis, Tennessee, October 6-7, 1920, and was attended by leaders of women's organizations from sixteen Southern states, to wit: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Texas, Virginia, Missouri, Maryland, and West Virginia.

Negro women were invited to speak to the conference. They spoke of "What it Means to Be a Negro," "The Negro in His Home," and "The Difficulties of the Daily Life of the Negro Peoples."

The Negro women whose advice had been sought at Tuskegee had been requested to prepare a paper setting forth the things which they considered responsible for some of the unhappy conditions of the day. This they did in a statesmanlike paper of broad Christian spirit. With this and the addresses of the two days' conference as a basis, the committee on findings made a report which was unanimously adopted, as follows:

"We, a company of Southern white women, in conference assembled on the invitation of the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation, find ourselves with a deep sense of responsibility to the womanhood and childhood of the Negro race and also with a great desire for a Christian settlement of the problems that overshadow the homes of both races.

"We recognize and deplore the fact that there is friction between the races. But we believe that this can largely be removed by the exercise of justice, consideration and sympathetic cooperation.

"In order that the results of this conference may be perpetuated and enlarged, we recommend:

"a. That a continuation committee be appointed to devise ways and means for carrying out the work considered by this conference.

"b. That this committee be composed of one woman from each denomination and Christian agency here represented and that it be empowered to add to its membership as may seem necessary.

"c. That each local community form a Woman's Interracial Committee which may include representatives from all religious, civic and social service bodies working in the community, and that this continuation committee recommend plans by which this may be accomplished."

A continuation committee for immediate convention and beginning of the work consisted of the following women: Mrs. Luke Johnson, Griffin, Ga., chairman; Mrs. J. G. Jackson, Little Rock; Mrs. Archibald Davis, Atlanta; Mrs. T. W. Bickett, Raleigh, N. C.; Mrs. J. H. Cranford, Jasper, Ala.; Mrs. W. D. Weatherford, Nashville; Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick, Madison, Georgia.

The Negro Woman's Response

And what of the Negro woman's response to this evidence of the Southern white woman's interest in the racial problem? They, or one group of them, speak as follows:

"We, the members of the Southeastern Federation of Colored Women's Clubs assembled in Atlanta, Ga., June 1921, desire to state our position on some matters relating to the welfare of colored people and to enlist the sympathy and cooperation of Southern white women in the interest of better understandings and better conditions, as these affect the relations between white and colored people.

"First of all we wish to express our sincere gratification in the fact that race relations in the South have advanced to the place where the white women of the South are conscious of the part which colored women must play in any successful effort to adjust the unhappy conditions about us which have distressed the hearts of all lovers of right and justice and dangerously threatened the common welfare and the safety of the Nation.

"We are also keenly alive to the growing tendency to give a larger place to the influence of womanhood in the affairs of the Nation and to the fact that there is an increasing number of Southern white women whose vision includes the welfare of women of every race and condition; who desire to secure equal opportunities for development to all womanhood and are determined to face the truth without flinching and to give themselves, at whatever cost, to creating an enlightened sentiment among their own people, and establishing a new and better foundation for relations between white and black women in the South."

The value of this step towards racial cooperation and understanding is not to be measured, since understanding is the basis of any sort of agreement. There is a reaim which no laws can reach, "the realm of neighborly good will and interest, and it is in this realm the inter-racial movement would work, seeking to create so real a feeling of common interest that causes of bitterness and ill will are eliminated."

It is only in such a sphere of good will that constructive work can be done, just as the real spirit of cooperation can come only with cooperative activities. It is when peoples act together they come to see that they think alike, and act alike, and this demonstration is more valuable than protestations of friendship.

These conclusions as given are not only those of the writer individually. Gathered from many sources, and often in the actual phrase, they are the opinions of a number of thoughtful men, leaders in various phases of Southern life.

It is not the opinion of Southern people that conditions may be rapidly changed, or changed at all without patient effort and persistence. No one among them but knows that the future adjustment of the relations of the white man and the Negro in the United States will tax the wisdom, forbearance, and statesmanship of the best of both races. And no man among them but knows that adjustment now or for the future, cannot be made by the decision of the white man without regard to the rights and interests of the Negro.

The Problem of The South

Here is a problem to be solved by the South that has been solved nowhere else in history, as Henry Grady, editor and orator of the South, long since pointed out, "to carry in peace and with justice within the body politic, two separate races under conditions where assimilation cannot be, two races that in human probability will never be quit of each other."

It is not a task for limited sympathies and petty natures. It is not a task that can be done by the machinery of mere organization. It is a spiritual task, as leader after leader throughout the South reiterates, clerical and lay alike — "A task to be carried out in the spirit and according to the ethics of the Man of Galilee." "It is an old, old story, and touches every phase of Southern life. Prejudices are stubborn. It is a long, long road ahead."

Democracy, as that Southern authority on the racial question, the Rev. Cary Montague, of Richmond, quoted before, points out, is a building not made with hands. Faith in humanity has made it. The destiny and happiness of the human race are in it. Its foundations rest upon the character of the man at the bottom. The Negro is at the bottom of the Southern half of our American democracy. The superstructure cannot endure unless we recognize him as part of the whole.

As said at the start of this article, economic prosperity is essential to progress. Economic justice is a primary condition to general peace and contentment.

The Negro responds to justice, kindness and generosity. He makes surprising headway with his limited opportunities. This his friends everywhere admit. A larger measure of economic justice alone for him will add to the peace and prosperity of the South.

The purpose of this article is to bring the plan of the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation to the attention of the country and especially of the South at large. It appeals to the South to get behind the movement solidly, upholding the local committee in each community, that its every possibility for good be tried out. It repeats that the Commission as now functioning in thirteen states, represents the most enlightened conscience of the South, white and black, and holds that it is the most philosophic step yet taken to promote justice and good will between the races.

THE ROLE OF THE COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION IN WAR AND PEACE

WILLIAM E. COLE
University of Tennessee

I. APPRAISAL

AN APPRAISAL of the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation is not an easy task. There are no similar agencies with which comparisons of accomplishments might be made. Much of the work of the Commission has been done through other organizations. Many of its efforts have been in the field of education, specifically functioning in the attempt to change traditional racial attitudes, to improve interracial cooperation, and to increase understanding between races. These areas of knowledge and endeavor do not lend themselves readily to scientific measurement or objective appraisal. The entire culture of a people ties in so closely in shaping attitudes and in influencing action patterns that it is very difficult to segregate and to examine the influence of any single agency or institution from that of other institutions or the mass impact of the total culture.

Method of Appraisal. Irrespective of these limitations, it is worth while to appraise as carefully as possible the work of the Commission. This has been done through interviews and correspondence with some 300 persons (1942), most of whom have observed or participated in the work of the Commission, have served on state or local interracial committees, or have shown an interest one way or another in race problems or southern problems. In addition, there has been consultation with Commission personnel and a somewhat detailed scrutiny of the publications and official minutes of the Commission.

From these collective sources, there is evidence and testimony to the following accomplishments of the Commission:

1. THROUGH THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION, THE INTERRACIAL ORGANIZATION AND MEETING HAVE BECOME STANDARD TECHNIQUES DESIGNED FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF INTERRACIAL COOPERATION IN THE SOUTH

One of the difficulties of the racial situation in the past has been that there was almost no contact between white and colored leaders in the South. The annual meeting of the Commission, itself, the more frequent meetings of its Board of Directors, and the state and local interracial groups which have grown out of the efforts of the staff and the members of the Commission have built up points of contact between the leaders of the two races in the South which did not exist prior to the inception of the Commission. From these meetings have been discovered ways through which misunderstanding could be removed and by which cooperation could be secured.

Cooperation of Leaders. Through the interracial organization, responsible white and Negro leaders have been brought together in such a way as not only to become an example for other interracial groups but to provide a natural exchange of ideas. These meetings have had a normalizing effect upon interaction between white and Negro groups. Out of this interracial exchange has certainly come a furthering of the understanding and a broadening of the sympathies between the Negro and the white races, as well as the formulation of action programs designed to be of service to one or both of the races.

The Commission Born Out of Conflict and Suspicion. At the time that the Commission was conceived (April, 1919), the Nation, and more especially the South, faced widespread racial suspicion, distrust, and overt racial conflict. The founders of the Commission felt that there could be brought into being organizations in which problems between the two races could be fully discussed and action programs formulated. This was done and early took the form of "about 800" state and local interracial committees or "commissions." Not only was the racial crisis of the post-war period of the first World War passed with less friction and conflict than was anticipated, but over the years the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and state and local interracial organizations have constituted perhaps the greatest single technique for preserving interracial peace, for discussing interracial problems, for increasing racial understanding, and for instituting action programs on behalf of the southern Negro.

2. THE COMMISSION HAS IMPROVED RACIAL UNDERSTANDING AND HAS BEEN AN IMPORTANT SOURCE OF BI-RACIAL EDUCATION

To this end, the Commission has been instrumental in formulating, synthesizing, and distributing information on the status and conditions of Negro life in the South and upon problems such as tenancy, education, enforcement of justice, and the like, which affect directly the welfare of both whites and Negroes.

Race Relations Kept before the Public. Certainly in the South the Commission has done more than any other agency to keep the issue of race relations before the public mind. As the president of one of the southern State colleges phrases it, "The Commission has done much to capitalize sentiment in favor of a square deal for Negroes in the South." Another outstanding southerner remarks,

> The studies that have been published, the publications that have been issued and sent out, the conferences which have been held, the point of view and attitude which have been maintained, the steady but quiet pressure that has been exerted on law enforcement officers and upon newspapers—all these things have given the Commission a place not filled by any other agency.

Widening the Scope of Racial Understanding. Able pieces of research on race problems and conditions have been sponsored by the Commission. Some of the research has been the product of field studies which provided original information on race problems or other problems of the South.

For years the Commission has maintained contacts with the leading editors of the South through conferences, personal visitation, and a news service which has reached 2,000 secular and religious newspapers and periodicals. Its own news letter, The Southern Frontier, is widely read and widely quoted. Clippings of the Commission press releases are on file from approximately 1,000 newspapers and magazines which have an aggregate circulation of about twenty million.

On the basis of recent interviews with leading editors of the South, it is apparent that newspaper editors and publishers have become increasingly sympathetic and intelligent in matters involving Negroes. Both their news and their editorial policies have changed definitely for the better in the last twenty years. The majority of editors can now be depended upon for constructive and intelligent cooperation in the field of racial adjustment. This change has come about to a considerable degree because of the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation.

The Commission has distributed more than five million pages of literature for classroom use and for study groups. About eighty colleges now offer courses in race relations, while some 400 other colleges and around 1,000 high schools integrate race relations topics into courses in sociology, ethics, civics, history, literature, journalism, and other subjects.

Race Relations Included in State Education Programs. Most of the southern State departments of education have put into their suggested State programs of studies units for the study of race problems, some of these being rather elaborate. While these have not functioned as the Commission staff members would like to see them, they do indicate that a more or less official stamp of approval has been placed upon studies and curriculum content which a few years ago would have been taboo and which the state of public opinion then in existence would not have stood for.

Cooperation with the Church. In its work toward improved education and toward creating a more wholesome public opinion between the two races, the Commission has worked very closely with the church. In the first place, the church has been liberally recognized on the membership of the Commission and in the composition of state and local interracial groups. From the inception of the Commission, its staff members have presented their work at church conferences, conventions, synods, to schools of religion, and through publications of religious bodies. The interest of hundreds of church leaders in the racial problem has been enlisted. This, in turn, has led to much local church leadership in interracial matters, to more liberal church declarations on race problems, to local attacks upon race problems, and to the inclusion of race relations topics in church literature and the curricula of training school programs for church leaders. It was, in the main, church women who refuted the traditional idea that lynching was necessary for the protection of southern womanhood.

Through the leadership of the Commission, the Woman's Missionary Council of the M. E. Church, South, set up in 1920 a Commission on Race Relations and provided for the organization of a subsidiary committee on each of its 6,000 auxiliaries. About the same time, the Federal Council of Churches created an interracial Commission on the Church and Race Relations, which in turn has organized numerous interracial committees in the East, the North, and the Middle West. In the early twenties, Dr. Thomas Jesse Jones, Director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, carried the story of the Commission to South Africa, with the result that able leaders there inaugurated a similar movement with excellent results.

3. THE COMMISSION HAS CONSTITUTED A CONSULTATION CENTER IN RACIAL PROBLEMS FOR THE SOUTH AND FOR THE NATION

Certainly the great over-all southern source to which individuals and organizations might turn for information on racial problems and for aid in organizing interracial organizations and study groups has been the Commission. This consultation service has, of course, been ably supplemented by the great Negro universities and colleges of the South and the divisions of Negro education in the State departments of education. Likewise, the Urban League and the NAACP have been sources of aid, the latter especially of legal aid, to Negro groups where problems of discrimination, injustice, etc., have been involved. Perhaps none of the agencies mentioned has shown as wide a scope of services as has the Commission.

4. THROUGH PERFORMANCE AND SPONSORSHIP, THE COMMISSION HAS MADE A WORTHWHILE CONTRIBUTION TO RESEARCH ON RACE PROBLEMS IN THE SOUTH AND TO THE CREATION OF MORE COMPREHENSIVE LITERATURE ON THE SUBJECT

Mention might be made of the publications treating the status of the Negro in American society,[1] which have been very valuable in giving a general picture of the Negro in the Nation. The subject of lynching has been well covered by the Commission in its research publications[2] and in more general popular documents.[3] Certainly these publications constitute the best collection of materials on lynching which are available. They have been widely used by study groups, students of race problems, and editors.

Woofter's early comprehensive study of Negro Problems in Cities[4] was inspired and financed by the Commission.

The compilations and analysis of data on the comparative status of Negro and white educational facilities, finances, and opportunities have been regularly issued by the Commission's staff,[5] and have no doubt done much toward lessening the gap between educational differentials in the South.

Problems of Agriculture and Labor. The recent outstanding work on sharecroppers by Raper and Reid[6] was financed largely by the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and Atlanta University. At this point, mention should be made of earlier studies on farm tenancy sponsored by the Commission, summary of which was published in The Collapse of Cotton Tenancy, by Charles S. Johnson, Edwin R. Embree, and W. W. Alexander, University of North Carolina Press, 1935. Somewhat later, a study was made of the Negro in the iron, steel, meat-packing, and railroad car industries. This study, sponsored by the Commission, was made by Horace R. Cayton and George S. Mitchell, and their findings are reported in Black Workers and the New Unions, published by the University of North Carolina Press in 1939.

The above publications are only a few of the research documents prepared either by staff members of the Commission or by non-staff persons chosen especially to do the studies.

The Commission has never posed as a research organization, but has operated first of all as an educational, and secondarily as an action, agency, giving such attention to pieces of research as would contribute to these ends or to the mitigation of critical problems affecting southern Negroes and southern whites.

Mention should be made at this point of the effective assembling of information on state race problems by some of the state interracial committees. The committees of Georgia,[7] Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Virginia have done effective work in giving the people of their respective states sound information on interracial problems within these States.

5. THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION HAS CONTRIBUTED MUCH TO THE MITIGATION OF LYNCHING AND TO THE REDUCTION OF OTHER FORMS OF RACIAL VIOLENCE IN THE SOUTH

The president of one of the great southern universities for Negroes is strong in his conviction > that much of the advancement which has been made in race relations, including the drastic reduction in lynching, interracial violence, and ill feeling, has been due to the patient and persistent efforts which the Commission has made.

This expresses the opinion of many other persons questioned in connection with the study.

Conflict Prevented Through Contact. Numerous examples have been encountered where the work of staff members of the Commission or of State Councils of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching,[8] or local committees have been instrumental in preventing lynchings or other forms of violence. This has been accomplished largely through direct contact with law enforcement officers, or through getting influential citizens in the conflict area to get in touch with local law enforcement officials. Under such pressure, even when feeling runs high, local officials usually make an attempt to enforce the law. Of course, the speed with which a lynching may occur sometimes makes it impossible for the conflict situation to be known to the members of the State Council before it takes place.

Effective Leadership in Preventing Lynching. An important part of the Commission's program to reduce lynching has been the publication of statistics, cases, and other data on lynching.[9] These have produced some degree of embarrassment among public officials and have been instrumental in achieving improved enforcement of the law. One of the most encouraging aspects of the anti-lynching campaign has been the wholehearted cooperation of leading southern newspapers.

Lynching has been justified in the past on the ground that it was necessary for the protection of white women. The work of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching has helped to undermine and discredit this supposition. Through the Association, nearly 45,000 women and 1,318 peace officers pledged themselves to work for the eradication of lynching and to impress upon the South that lynching is unnecessary for the protection of southern women.

Since the period 1916–1920, when the Commission was organized (1919), lynchings decreased from 300 to 189 in 1920–1925; to 88 during the period 1925–1930; to 84 from 1930 to 1935; to 30 from 1935 to 1940; to 4 in 1941; and to 5 in 1942.[10]

Reduction of Lynching a Cooperative Achievement. No thesis is presented bearing the claim that the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation or the work of local and State interracial organizations has been entirely responsible for the great decrease in lynching. The New Deal, with its sympathetic attitude toward minorities, the growth of State highway patrols; better communication, such as radio; the far-reaching influence of the churches; the activities of Tuskegee Institute; the work of the NAACP and the Urban League, all have made their contribution to an effective reduction in lynching.[11] Above the efforts of any single agency operating in the South to reduce lynching, the work of the Commission seems to emerge as singularly significant.

Legal Aid and Court Action. From time to time the Commission on Interracial Cooperation has inspired court action or has cooperated in court action where there was violence, miscarriage of justice, or where the people were aroused over a racial situation.[12] An important, appropriate illustration was the recent appeal of the case of Ira Taylor of Hancock County, Georgia, financed by the Commission to test the "peonage laws" of Georgia. After going through the state courts, the case was carried to the United States Supreme Court by two Georgia lawyers, one of whom served without compensation, and on January 12, 1942, the law was declared unconstitutional. Another illustration, some years back, was the celebrated "Williams Case," involving peonage on a plantation in Jasper County, Georgia, where eleven of the important witnesses were murdered in order to cover up evidence. The Commission pushed this case and obtained convictions for the principals involved. Other less spectacular instances of court action might be cited.

6. THE COMMISSION HAS INFLUENCED LEGISLATION AND MOVEMENTS DESIGNED TO ALLEVIATE SOUTHERN PROBLEMS, ESPECIALLY THE PROBLEMS OF NEGROES, AND TO IMPROVE THE STANDARDS OF LIVING IN THE SOUTH

In its early studies of lynching, the Commission found that lynching was closely tied in with submarginal areas and with substandard conditions of people. This pointed the way to the possibilities which might be inherent in preventing lynching and in improving race relations by improving social, economic, and educational conditions of the people. As a result of these observations, the vision of the Commission's approach to race problems was greatly enlarged.

Leadership in Legislation. The President and Director of the Commission were active in obtaining a grant to study the effect of the AAA program upon the Negro. The results of this study, presented to the public in a number of releases and reports, were embodied in The Collapse of Cotton Tenancy, which was drawn upon extensively in developing the program of the Farm Security Administration. Leaders of the Commission played an important part in shaping the legislation which established this agency. The Commission, with State and local interracial committees, was an effective influence in the passage of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, the development of a non-discriminatory federal policy on the employment of Negroes in war industries, and the broadening of the principles governing the mobilization of Negroes in the armed forces. Numerous instances are reported where state and local interracial groups have been influential in getting public funds for improved edicational programs, in breaking down teacher-salary differentials, and in getting better facilities for education.

7. THE COMMISSION IS CONTRIBUTING TO THE MITIGATION OF RACIAL PROBLEMS ARISING OUT OF PRESENT WAR CONDITIONS

A definite step was taken in this direction in the late spring of 1942, when State interracial workers were assembled in Atlanta to discuss race problems arising out of the mobilization of manpower and industry in the war effort.

Definite Plans Developed. At this conference definite steps were taken toward getting at least one semipermanent Negro chaplain[13] and recreational director in each camp housing Negro military units of any size. Through these, the interracial committees would work with the military police and with civil authorities in handling local interracial problems. Steps were taken also toward organizing interracial committees in towns near camps in which Negro soldiers were quartered and in towns where defense industries were creating problems of population pressures, either of white upon Negro communities or of Negro upon white communities.

At the Atlanta conference, pamphlet material on racial good will and national unity was outlined. Plans were also made to exchange information on successful techniques in the handling of local biracial problems during the emergency and to [12] The Commission has had only limited funds for this work and has confined itself to cases involving changes in the fundamental law or those particularly significant because of their effect on public opinion. There is a very great need for some form of legal aid for the masses of both white and colored people who are, as a rule, too poor and too ignorant to avail themselves of protection under the law. Into this general field the limited finances of the Commission have never permitted it to go.

Two very important documents on the legal status of Negroes have been financed by the Commission: J. H. Chadburn, Lynching and the Law (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1933); and Charles S. Mangum, Jr., The Legal Status of the Negro (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1940).

[13] The plan called for keeping at least one chaplain in a camp on a semipermanent basis as a means of giving some continuity to the religious, recreational, and social program.

publicize the progress of Negroes in the armed forces and in defense industries. Programs have been worked out for the use of local groups which are faced with problems of transportation, administration of justice, employment, and the spread of rumors which cause tensions during the war and post-war periods.[14] In certain problem areas "listening posts" have been established to record the pulse of the community on racial attitudes, and in others interracial groups have been organized.[15] In some camps, away from centers of population, recreational "day rooms" have been provided for Negro soldiers. Some of these have been sponsored by State and local interracial bodies. Local organizations, especially in the Norfolk, Virginia, and Jacksonville, Florida, areas, have been able to arrange for special transportation facilities for Negro soldiers and defense workers.

Work Unfinished. While this work of the Commission, designed to soften the impact of war and post-war conditions upon race relations, is not in its finished stages, it bids fair to reach considerable proportions and to be accompanied by some success. With many agencies concerned about such problems and with the scene of the problems shifting rapidly, the extent of the success of the work is difficult to estimate at this stage. It is sufficient to say that it is wise to perfect machinery and organizations now to deal with whatever racial problems may arise out of the war and post-war conditions.

II. THE CASE FOR THE CONTINUATION OF A SOUTHERN INTERRACIAL ORGANIZATION[16]

It is clear that the arguments for the continuation of a privately operated interracial commission not only must present a background appraisal of the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation to date (Part I of this report), but also must consider the work which the Commission performs, or may perform, against an appraisal of the work of other agencies now concerned with race problems and with the condition and status of minority elements in the population.

Private Initiative and Governmental Endeavor. One of the most difficult problems which might be tackled first is the question of whether there is need for a private agency, such as the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, in a social picture so dominated by government as the present one.

It is, of course, true that almost from the beginning of the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt (1933) a great interest in the problem of minority groups has been shown by many leaders of the Federal government. Numerous commissions, agencies, and pieces of legislation have been created, and statements of policy have been issued which have had a bearing upon racial status, interracial relationships, improvement of economic conditions of minorities, and the utilization of minorities in the total war effort.

Toward achieving a greater security for American minorities and to the end of improving the relationship between races, mention might be made of the enactment into law of the Farm Security Administration; the passage of the Jones-Bankhead tenancy bill; the establishment of the Committee on Fair Employment Practices (established by Executive Order 8802 on June 25, 1941);[17] a more liberal policy on the part of the Army and Navy toward the acceptance and recruitment of Negroes; the employment of staff members with the Special Service Division of the War Department to work with Army staff officials in the area of race relations; and the setting up of a Division of Special Service to Minority Groups as part of the program of mobilizing human resources toward the prosecution of the total war effort.

Dependence Upon Government. There are those who believe that government can deal with all

[15] For instance, in the South Carolina counties bordering Georgia.

[16] For purposes of definition, the South, as used in this article, refers to the States of Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. Limited assistance is given to a few States outside this area.

[17] Two paragraphs of Executive Order 8802 indicate the present position of the Federal government toward the full participation of all races in the defense program, to wit:

"1. All departments and agencies of the Government of the United States concerned with vocational and training programs for defense production shall take special measures appropriate to assure that such programs are administered without discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin;

"2. All contracting agencies of the Government of the United States shall include in all defense contracts hereafter negotiated by them a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color, or national origin."

aspects of the racial problem and who visualize that the pressure which Negroes and interested white prople exert upon government will be ample to force Federal governmental action at all times. There is no guarantee, it seems, that this is true. On the other hand, however, there is no immediate visible guarantee that the present interest of the Federal government in minorities will greatly decrease; on the contrary, it is likely to increase. However, a more conservative and reactionary national administration like the one at the end of the first World War might not only wreck what has been done to date, but might also fail to provide effective substitutes. The recent national elections (1942) indicate a trend in this direction. In short, we must place our confidence partially in faith when we say that the great American racial issues and problems will be taken care of by the Federal government. The reaction of government to pressure makes it difficult to legislate in favor of minorities when they do not represent more than 10 percent of the population, and where, in composition, they are below the majority in political and economic strength.

Developing Danger Signals. At the end of the first year of this Nation in the second World War, there still creeps out in this country evidence of a rather strong element of isolationism. This was given concrete expression in the recent national elections. There are some who believe that this could easily develop into a form of racialism involving not only Negroes but other minorities, especially Jews. Should this develop, there would be a critical need, if national security and international safety are to be preserved, for effective private agencies to develop a counter-attack to minimize the effect of such a movement.

Visualized at its best, a pattern of relations between two or more races held together by governmental pressure, by Federal statute, and by police powers would be far less satisfactory to the races concerned than one in which mutual respect, regard, and equality of opportunity were, in part at least, the products of an enlightened opinion and cooperative will, aside from whatever laws might be necessary to maintain such rights or opportunities. Patterns of race relations which are not, in part, the result of the cooperative will of the folk and which are held together by governmental pressures are likely to develop powerful counter results at any time.

Methods of Government and the Commission Complementary. Methods likely to be used by government in improving the patterns of racial relationship in this country will, doubtless, include subsidies, legislation, or governmental pressure of one type or another. There is little assurance that the government may undertake the task of educating groups in racial understanding and in the peaceful arbitration of differences. The exceedingly important task of organizing interracial groups to consider problems which affect both races is likely to continue to remain the problem of private endeavor for many years to come. In spite of all that government might do, there appears to be a definite place for the voluntary agency doing the type of work which the Commission on Intraracial Cooperation has been doing in the past or may do in the future.

Post-War Tendency to Decentralize. Following World War II, there is likely to be the usual movement to decentralize many powers of the Federal government delegated to it from necessity during the period of the war, and to abolish some of these powers and return others to the States and local communities. The prospect of decentralization of Federal power holds poor possibilities for greatly improved race relations via the route of the Federal government. Then, too, whatever the role of the Federal government in race relations, we must remember that it is a long way from Washington to racial conflict situations in central Georgia, western Mississippi, western Louisiana, or eastern Texas.

Whatever the implications for democracy, efforts of the Federal government to aid minorities through its various service programs have been most effective where the Federal government has carried these services directly to the people. Where the aid has been channeled through local and State governmental bodies, it has not been difficult for these units and local communities to divert such aid away from Negroes and other minorities. Thus, there is indicated a need for agencies to work in the changing of local attitudes and practices. Then, too, many of the problems in race relations are those involving local police; local health conditions and resources; local educational and welfare systems; local farm labor and industrial practices; and local attitudes—things local, which the Federal government can not touch, or can touch only remotely.

Numerous individuals have suggested that the governors of the various states be prevailed upon to appoint State interracial commissions, which might function within the States. In view of the attitude which certain southern governors have recently shown toward racial issues, it seems clear that any State action which some of the States would undertake could not possibly be satisfactory and would likely suffer political infanticide, and that it is perhaps better that a private agency take the lead in the organization of such groups.

Still a Need for Private Initiative. The consensus seems to be that there does not exist in the Federal and State governments a program of racial welfare and interracial cooperation adequate to cope with the racial issues and problems of this country, and that the work which government performs in this field does not constitute an adequate substitute for what the Commission has been doing in the past or may do in the near future. In spite of all that the governmental units are likely to accomplish, there will still be a job for private agencies to do.

Dixie Interrace Group Formed For Good Will

White and Negro Leaders Attend Session at Atlanta University.

Organization of a Southern Regional Council to promote interracial co-operation and good will in the United States was announced here yesterday by Dr. Howard W. Odum, of the University of North Carolina, co-chairman, following a meeting of southern white and Negro leaders at Atlanta University.

Proponents said they hoped the organization will be a forerunner to a nation-wide movement, a formal statement of the group having called on President Roosevelt to set up a national council.

Dr. Charles S. Johnson, of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., is the other co-chairman. The two educators will serve as presiding officers until the organization is perfected.

New Declaration.

Purpose of the council, Dr. Odum explained, is to carry out what the conference adopted as "a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better order of our society."

Dr. Odum said the southern council is to be composed of representatives of both races and private and public groups.

A meeting of Negroes in Durham, N. C., in October and a conference of white leaders in Atlanta in April preceded the organization of the council.

In the organization statement, it was declared: "We propose to substitute the measures of the good society for the old biological struggle of physical survival . . . we must dedicate ourselves to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now."

31 Attend.

Sixteen white and 15 Negro committee members attended the initial meeting. Besides Dr. Odum and Dr. Johnson, they were:

It has been charged that SRC is the successor to the SCHW.

This falsehood is exposed by the well-documented record of SRC's development as an outgrowth of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and the Atlanta-Durham-Richmond conferences. The Southern Regional Council

Its Organization

On October 4, 1940, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, Inc., instructed its Executive Committee "to take whatever steps are necessary to carry out the plans for the development of a council on southern regional development," which would include in its program the work of the Commission and other activities connected with the economic, educational, and social development of the South.

On January 6, 1944, after many months of work, and following the developments and instructions growing out of the conference of Southern Negroes, held in Durham, N. C. October 20, 1942, the conference of Southern whites held in Atlanta, Georgia, April 8, 1943, and the conference of Negroes and whites held in Richmond, Va., June 16, 1943, the Southern Regional Council was incorporated. At the meeting of the incorporators of the Southern Regional Council (Dr. Howard W. Odum, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, Dr. Rufus E. Clement, Bishop A. J. Moore, and Mr. Ralph McGill), held in Atlanta, Georgia, February 11, 1944, charter members of the SRC were designated: all members of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and all active participants in one or more of the conferences leading to the formation of the Southern Regional Council.

On February 16, 1944, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation met in Atlanta at a special meeting and took the following action:

> It being made to appear to the meeting that all of the Commission's obligations and liabilities have been fully discharged, and further that the Southern Regional Council, having been duly incorporated to carry on the work with ideals and program similar to those of this corporation:
> It was, upon motion duly made and seconded—Resolved that the corporation transfer and convey to the Southern Regional Council, Inc., a corporation of Fulton County, Georgia, all of its property of every nature whatsoever and wherever situated, absolutely and in fee simple.

On the same date the charter members of the Southern Regional Council met in Atlanta, adopted by-laws, elected officers, and formulated the initial policy of the organization, stating as their purpose the

Its Program and Methods

The Southern Regional Council will operate in all of the states of the South in an effort to improve the region's economic, civic, social and racial conditions.

It proposes to promote greater unity among people and agencies in all efforts for regional and racial adjustment; to attain, through research and action, progress and equal opportunity for all people; to reduce race tensions, misunderstanding, distrust; to develop and integrate leadership in the South on new levels of national, regional and racial development. These are its long-time goals.

For its immediate objectives the SRC proposes to perfect its organization, to conserve and enlarge the scope of work now being done by the local and state interracial bodies; to take the preliminary steps necessary to bring about a realization of the long-time goals mentioned above, and to give immediate attention to war and postwar problems in the South.

The SRC plans to operate through several commissions in the fields of human relations, economic affairs, community welfare, public affairs, and cultural development.

The programs under these commissions will be sponsored with the aid of approximately 100 elected Fellows of the SRC, selected from the several states, and with the cooperation of local and regional religious, social, and economic groups.

One of the chief purposes of the SRC will be the development of new techniques and strategies for meeting constructively the problems of the region. To achieve this end the SRC will encourage the development of action groups at local, state and regional levels; recruit and develop leadership; develop necessary research through the universities and colleges of the region; seek to remold and articulate public opinion through the radio, press, speakers and publications; cooperate with and stimulate action in the region from Federal, state and local governments; conduct special experiments and programs in an effort to effect desirable changes in the South; render such specialized services as may be necessary in this connection; render such emergency services as may be necessary; hold technical conferences; promote fuller participation in democratic processes in the South; and utilize with greater effec-

Editorial

This is a most opportune time for launching the Southern Regional Council. In a sense, the eyes of the nation are upon the South today. The war has focused a spotlight upon democracy, revealing as never before her strength and her weakness. Here in the South democracy has been leading a double life. It has not yet squared itself with the problem of race and color, and that problem may well be the greatest one of the next century. What we do here in the South, then, has the most intimate kind of connection with the fortunes of democracy and the future of race relations, not only in this nation but in the entire world.

We have dedicated ourselves to the building of a better South, and we must not falter. History does not make itself. It is always made by people and their ideas. It can just as easily be made by people with good ideas as by people with bad ideas, if the people with the good ideas are willing to work hard enough. Somebody has to do more hard thinking and constructive work on this problem of race relations than has ever been done before, and it is up to the white and Negro leaders of the South to do it.

But how shall we define our problem in more specific terms? The very least we can do in order to square our habits with our democratic ideals is to try honestly and courageously to take the inequalities and inequities out of the biracial civilization of the South. If we devote our very best statesmanship and untiring energy for the next twenty years to the realization of this goal, we shall have served our generation well. We should not pretend to believe that this alone will solve the race problem, because we know that this problem is not so easily solved. But we can believe that it covers the next stage in the unfolding process which may lead to the ultimate solution of the race problem.

We in the Southern Regional Council are establishing a blue-print for the shape of things to come. We are building for the future—not one year, not five years, but for all the centuries that may lie ahead. Who knows but that the work we are undertaking here and now represents a turning point in the history of the South? If we, through this Council and its cooperating agencies, can bequeath our children a more democratic, a more abundant South, we shall have done our part toward the fulfillment of the great American dream. But, if we falter and fail, our children must bear a yoke of social handicaps greater than we have ever known.

South Carolina Incident

On February 29 the South Carolina House of Representatives passed a resolution which has attracted a great deal of attention. Introduced by Mr. John Long of Union, a lawyer and one-time private secretary to U. S. Senator Cole Blease, the resolution said, in part:

"We indignantly and vehemently denounce the intentions, utterances and actions of any person or persons and of all organizations seeking the amalgamation of the white and Negro races by a comingling of the races upon any basis of equality, as being destructive to the identity and characteristics and integrity of both races, and as being un-American and hostile to the existence and preservation of the American union of states . . .

"We reaffirm our belief in and our allegiance to established white supremacy as now prevailing in the South, and we solemnly pledge our lives and our sacred honor to maintaining it, whatever the cost, in war and in peace."

"That insofar as racial relations are concerned, we firmly and unequivocally demand that henceforth the damned agitators of the North leave the South alone."

This being the open season for political buncombe, one need not be greatly surprised by such a resolution, and one can take it with the proverbial grain of salt. The time was when such things were allowed to pass unchallenged, but times are changing. The South Carolina resolution was promptly challenged by two groups of South Carolinians, one a group of Negro citizens and the other a group of white citizens. In a letter to Representative Long, the Negro Citizens' Committee of South Carolina said: "Your resolution . . . is astonishing to the Negroes of South Carolina, especially in times like these. . . . Negroes throughout South Carolina disclaim any idea of amalgamation of whites and Negroes. . . . They are asking for full justice in the courts, . . . for the right to exercise their franchise in primaries where candidates are chosen to serve in public offices, and the denial of such rights is un-American and undemocratic. . . . The fight for such rights, whether instituted by an individual or an organization, if such fight is through the courts, state and federal, cannot be blasted as one of agitation and hostile to the existence and preservation of the American union of states."

Twenty influential white South Carolinians also issued a statement. They felt that it was time "to let our colored citizens know that the better element of white people in South Carolina do not think or feel as the House of Representatives," and they called for "a drastic revision in our attitude toward our colored citizens." Their statement went on to point out the following disadvantages which the Negro suffers: (1) denial of equal opportunity; (2) retarded economic status; (3) fixed status as a servant and menial; (4) inferior educational facilities; (5) frequent denial of justice in the courts; (6) discrimination in civic improvements; (7) lack of participation in his own government. Furthermore, the statement pointed out some constructive steps which need to be taken: (1) serious study of the race problem by white groups; (2) inclusion of Negroes on juries and other public bodies administering the laws; (3) better educational opportunities; (4) better mutual understanding between white and Negro workers; (5) fair wages and better working hours for domestic workers; (6) use of the ballot box by all qualified voters.

"Social equality," said these white citizens, "is not a part of the Negro problem in South Carolina," since "social life is of individual making." As for "white supremacy," they express the belief that "The only white supremacy which is worthy of the name is that which exists because of virtue, not of power."

This statement by white South Carolinians might well serve as a model for the citizens of other states who are weary of the agitation of the race issue by our own home-grown variety of demagogues. Lee Morris, in the St. Petersburg Independent, puts the matter this way: "Let's remember that white supremacy is as ugly a phrase as Negro supremacy, and for the same reason. We have a nation of human beings. Let them live together separately, as races, if you wish; let them marry separately, as races; but never let one race deny freedom and justice and opportunity and humanity again to the other."

SRC—Its Organization

following directive from the charter of the organization:

> . . . the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South, in the endeavor to promote a greater unity in the South in all efforts toward regional and racial development; to attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region; to reduce race tension, the basis of racial tension, racial misunderstanding, and racial distrust; to develop and integrate leadership in the South on new levels of regional development and fellowship; and to cooperate with local, state, and regional agencies on all levels in the attainment of the desired objectives.

An American Dilemma

Through a grant made by the Carnegie Corporation, Gunnar Myrdal, economic advisor to the Swedish government, and a member of the Swedish Senate, made a comprehensive study of the Negro problem and modern democracy in the United States. No mere review could encompass or interpret the wide range of this significant study designed to contribute to the general "advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding." (An American Dilemma, Gunnar Myrdal, New York. Harper and Brothers. 1944. 2 vols. $7.50.)

AN AMERICAN DILEMMA offers a basic challenge to the American people. Speaking of "America's Opportunity," Dr. Myrdal says:

● In the present phase of history this is what the world needs to believe. Mankind is sick of fear and disbelief, of pessimism and cynicism. It needs the youthful moralistic optimism of America. But empty declarations only deepen cynicism. Deeds are called for. If America in actual practice could show the world a progressive trend by which the Negro became finally integrated into modern democracy, all mankind would be given faith again—it would have reason to believe that peace, progress and order are feasible. And America would have a spiritual power many times stronger than all her financial and military reserves—the power of the trust and support of all good people on earth. America is free to choose whether the Negro shall remain her liability or become her opportunity. pp.1021-1022.

The two volumes merit extensive study. Here are a few comments, expositions and challenges pertinent to that section of the United States of which Dr. Myrdal has written:

● The pro-slavery theory of the antebellum South is basic to certain ideas, attitudes, and policies prevalent in all fields of human relations even at the present time . . . churchmen, writers, and statesmen of the South came out against the principle of equality as formulated in the Declaration of Independence. This principle came to be ridiculed as a set of empty generalities and meaningless abstractions. Indeed, it was "exuberantly false, and aborescently fallacious." p. 86-87

● Southern conservatism is a unique phenomenon in Western civilization in being carried to an established pattern of illegality. . . . In the South we have, however, the unmatched political spectacle that the liberals are the party of law and order, while the conservatives are the habitual transgressors. The party which works for change has the established law on its side, or rather, wants to enforce it, but has not the political power; the party which stands for the status quo has the power but not the law. . . . In the South a veritable reversal of the usual order of democracy has established itself. pp. 440-441

● Thus the opportunistic disrespect for law, order and public morals has a complicated causation and a deep-rooted history in the South. The tradition is today still part of the way of life and as such is often patriotically cherished as distinctively Southern. It is certainly one of the most sinister historical heritages of the region. It spells danger for a democratic society and involves serious maladjustments. p. 451

● There is an amazing avoidance of issues in Southern politics. The South votes for men—Democratic men—but rarely ever for issues, unless the issue is defined in black and white. We have to remember that in a measure this is a characteristic of all American politics. But in the South, it is driven to its extreme. p. 453

● . . . Keeping the Negroes disfrancised in the face of the clear-cut constitutional Amendments allows Southern conservatism nothing more than a pretense of respect for the law. On this most crucial point it is doomed to insincerity. p. 446

● It would generally be inexplicable why the South, with all its traditions of inequality and illegality, is so definitely on the way toward social democracy and law observance, and why it is not headed the other way. The conservative Southerner is not so certain as he sometimes sounds. He is a split personality. Part of his heart belongs to the American Creed. And if one argues that this is mere hypocrisy, he is entirely missing the point. The Southern conservative white man's faith in American democracy, which he is certainly not living up to, and the Constitution, which he is circumventing are living forces of decisive dynamic significance. p. 462

● When attempting to map the political opinions of white Southern liberalism, it must first be recalled that the region is exceptional in Western nonfascist civilization since the Enlightenment in that it lacks nearly ever trace of radical thought. In the South all progressive thinking going farther than mild liberalism has been practically nonexistent for a century. p. 469.

● As far as the cultural and social adjustment of the Negroes is concerned, the Southern police system is undoing much of what Northern philanthropy and Southern state governments are trying to accomplish through education and by other means. p. 450

● The South, particularly, needs a stress on the preventive aims and the peace-working functions of the police. p. 545

● In principle, the average white Southerner is no longer prepared to defend racial inequality of justice. p. 556

● Probably the most effective means of bringing the Southern courts more rapidly to acquire a fixed pattern of carefulness and equity would be the setting up of legal aid agencies everywhere in the South which, manned by high class professional lawyers, would be instructed not to work for any new legislation, but to assist poor whites and Negroes to enforce their rights under existing laws in civil and criminal cases. p. 556

● Court decisions are increasingly exposing the Southern statutes backing the system of institutional segregation as unconstitutional. This system is thus gradually losing its legal sanctions and increasingly depending upon extra-legal or illegal sanctions. p. 629

● "Social equality" is still a terribly important matter in the region. But it is not as important as it was a generation ago. p. 662

● The Negro hates the Negro role in American society, and the Negro leader, who acts out this role in public life, becomes the symbol of what the Negro hates. p. 774

● The Interracial Commission has not fulfilled the promises it once gave. . . . The respectability the Commission has built up for interracial work in the South is a form of capital, but as such it is of no use at all if it is not invested, and even risked, in new ventures. p. 849

● The post-war crisis in the South will not be minor. p. 849

● The South is far from having achieved the Commission's aims, and the liberal forces of the region are weak. p. 845

● It seems justifiable to predict a growing tension between the two regions, one which will not be restricted to the Negro issue. There is not going to be civil war, of course. The South has been, and is, changing rapidly, and Southern liberalism has been coming to be a force though it was practically nowhere in political power and today is fearfully timid on the Negro issue. p. 1015

● In planning for future race relations in the South the factor of personal intimacy and friendliness between individual whites and Negroes upon the old patriarchal principle should be left out entirely as lacking in practical importance. p. 649

● The great majority of Southern conservative white people do not see the handwriting on the wall. They do not study the impending changes; they live again in the pathetic illusion that the matter is settled. They do not care to have any constructive policies to meet the trends. They think no adjustments are called for. The chances that the future development will be planned and led intelligently—and that, consequently, it will take the form of cautious, fore-sighted reforms instead of unexpected, tumultuous, haphazard breaks, with mounting discords and anxieties in its wake—are indeed small. pp. 519-20

It Does Happen Here

● The U. S. Navy announces the appointment of 14 Negroes as Ensigns and Warrant Officers. Negro staff officers in the Navy are expected to be commissioned from civilian life.

● It was called a "Race Equality Book." It did not matter that there was no discussion of race equality in it. Someone said it was that. We refer to The Races of Mankind by Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish. It is illustrated by Joseph Reinhardt. This is a ten-cent pamphlet, No. 85 in a series issued by the Public Affairs Committee. The USO banned it. The United States Army refused it for the use of our soldiers, who are of all races of mankind. . . . Most of the book contains hard, scientifically valid fact. Some times there is philosophy and social fact. Here is what is said about race prejudice:

> Race prejudice is, after all, a determination to keep a people down, and it misuses the label "inferior" to justify unfairness and injustice. Race prejudice makes people ruthless; it invites violence. It is the opposite of "good character" as it is defined in the Christian religion—or in the Confucian religion, or in the Buddhist religion, or the Hindu religion, for that matter.

● The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee reports that during the last six months of 1943 there was satisfactory compliance with 359 orders to cease discrimination against employees on account of their race, religion or alien origin. During this period 208 cases were dropped because of insufficient evidence, 256 were dropped for lack of merit, 127 were withdrawn by the complainant, and 36 were dismissed for lack of committee jurisdiction. Race was the basis for most of the discrimination, involving 716 cases. Cases arising out of religious discrimination numbered 127 during the period.

● The 93rd Air Squadron is the second unit of Negro fliers to see action in the European-African war theatres. The officers are Negroes.

● In an effort to offset the recent efforts of Negro school teachers to secure equalization of pay in South Carolina, the Charleston News-Courier proposes that one way of handling the matter would be to "classify by state legislation all professors and teachers in the public schools as public officers and elect them in the white primaries."

● The Twenty-fourth Regiment of the United States Army became the first Negro combat unit to go into action in the South Pacific. The War Department reports that the Regiment "gave a good account of itself in jungle warfare."

Opinion

THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER wants expressions from its readers on how they feel about the approach it plans to make in connection with a social action program in the South. It invites correspondence on matters that are close to the hearts and minds of Southern and Northern people. Through this channel of opinion it may be possible to arrive at a common ground of thinking, from which we can move forward to a higher plane of action.

The following excerpts from a letter written by a retired minister indicate some of the challenges we face:

> It is one thing to believe and proclaim the absolute Right in race relations; it is quite another thing boldly to challenge racial conventions and defy bitter prejudice and to ride roughshod to our goal, regardless.
> I speak from long experience—something painful. In pulpit and press I have declared for a treatment of colored peoples based on recognition of the oneness of the race and the brotherhood of all men, urging the present glaring and dangerous injustice to the Negro, sometimes at the cost of persecution from the whites—and having to conclude that I'd have got farther toward the goal by slowing my pace—and crying, "O Lord, how long!"

tiveness the untapped resources of the region.

Full instructions for interracial bodies wishing to affiliate with the Southern Regional Council will be issued during April. Meanwhile, any agency or organization willing to subscribe to the principles of the Council may apply for affiliated membership with all the rights and privileges granted such membership by the Board of Directors of the Southern Regional Council.

The Southern Regional Council was not initiated to deter, retard, limit or defend the South. Its organization and promotion were contrived in sheer necessity. It welcomes the cooperation of all people, all agencies, everywhere, who are willing to make the sacrifices and take the initiative needed to make democracy a reality in the region.

The Southern Regional Council is opposed to the demagogic handling of the South's problems by Northerners or Southerners, be they white or black. It sees the problems of the South as a special phase of the problems of our democracy. It believes that a more intensive application of the principles of democracy within the region will yield a people better able to apply the principles of democracy extensively throughout the nation and the world. It believes that a quarter of a century's experience in race relations has provided the South with the opportunity to meet the problems of democracy and citizenship in a bigger, more social way than ever before. It dedicates its program to doing those things in the best way possible—here and now.

Books of the Month

Elsewhere in this issue we have presented excerpts from An American Dilemma. No one with a sincere interest in the problems of race and color can afford to be unfamiliar with these volumes, not so much for the facts they present as for the interpretation given these facts.

Characteristics of the American Negro (Otto Klineberg, Editor) is the last volume in the Carnegie Foundation series of studies on the American Negro. This volume contains analyses of some of the more argumentative aspects of race relations—intelligence, personality, race attitudes, intermarriage, and passing. (Harper and Brothers, $4.00.)

Strange Fruit is a novel by Lillian Smith, editor of South Today. We know of no work of fiction that has created such a stir in interracial circles since Carl VanVechten's Nigger Heaven. Many people do not like it; many more are buying it. Nevertheless, the reaction is interesting, for here is the first novel on the South which throws into bold relief, and in an interesting fashion, the five areas of Southern problems—race, religion, politics, sex and economics. Read it as Bacon advised three hundred years ago, "not to contradict and confute; not to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse; but to weigh and consider." (Reynal and Hitchcock, $2.75.)

13 Against The Odds by Julius Rosenwald Fund's President, Edwin R. Embree (Viking, $2.75), and Rising Above Color by Philip Henry Lotz (Association Press, $1.50), both deal with the careers of thirteen outstanding Negro personalities in the United States. If you like success stories of minority personalities you will find these two volumes interesting. Dr. Embree's character analyses are breezy, fresh, human, and up to date.

You might be interested in:

Ben Hecht's A Guide For The Bedeviled (Scribners, $2.50) because it is an exciting book on racial intolerance, particularly as it pertains to the problem of anti-Semitism.

Gerald W. Johnson's American Heroes And Hero Worship (Harper, $3.00) because one of the great ironies of Southern history is discussed in a chapter entitled "The Sons of Hagar."

Louis Fischer's Empire (Duell, Sloan and Pearce, $1.00) because he tells us why a large part of the world is tired of being "the white man's burden."

R. M. MacIver's Towards An Abiding Peace (MacMillan, $2.50) because it points out how the dreams of statesmen can be translated into the substance of earth.

ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of members of the SRC was postponed in the hope that we could arrange for two public evening sessions at which we could present speakers who could focus public attention on the problems of the South with special reference to the post-war period. When it became apparent that the desired speakers would not make any commitments until after the presidential election, it was necessary to go ahead and set a date for the annual meeting. By vote of the Executive Committee, the meeting will be held on Wednesday, December 6. There is still a possibility, now that the election is behind us, that a prominent liberal leader will consent to speak on the evening of December 5 or 6.

The meeting of SRC members will be held at Atlanta University at 10:30 A. M., December 6. The Board of Directors will meet immediately after the member meeting. This may be in the afternoon or evening of December 6, or even on the morning of December 7, depending on the time of adjournment of the member meeting.

The Executive Committee and the standing committees will be called for December 5. If you are a member of any of these committees, please look out for the announcement of committee schedules and make your plans to attend.

OUR NEW QUARTERS

The Commission on Interracial Cooperation reduced its staff during the last few years of its existence and gave up some of its rooms. When the Council took over the Commission quarters at 710 Standard Building, it was soon faced with the problem of space. It was impossible to get any additional room in Standard Building. In fact, the Southern Area Council of the Y. M. C. A., from whom we sub-rented, was pressing us to give up more space to their own expanding needs.

There was no choice but to look for new quarters. And what a job! Atlanta was full of government and private agencies looking for office space. When the situation seemed almost hopeless, Bishop Arthur J. Moore came to our rescue. The Wesley Memorial Building, owned by the North Georgia Jurisdiction of the Methodist Church, had a lot of space on its fourth floor which was being remodeled to house the Bishop's offices and other church activities. Through the kindness of the Bishop and the Building Committee, the Council was able to secure space in Wesley Memorial Building.

It was necessary to build partitions, to paint, put in floor covering, install light fixtures, etc., but after weeks of planning and construction we finally moved to our new quarters during the week of October 16.

We have twice our previous floor space for less rent, and we hope that our space problem is solved for several years.

Be sure to visit our new quarters when you are in Atlanta: Room 432 at 63 Auburn Avenue. Wesley Memorial Building is located at the corner of Auburn and Ivy. Enter on Auburn Avenue at the corner of the building farthest from Ivy and take the elevator to the fourth floor.

THE STAFF Have you tried lately to employ someone with very special qualifications? It isn't easy to find 'em, is it? Most of the bright young people of the sort we should like to have are either in the Service or in jobs which they are reluctant to leave.

On June 1 we obtained the services of Miss Margaret L. Fisher, formerly with the War Manpower Commission, to work in public relations. Miss Fisher resigned on November 1 to work with another agency. We are now on the trail of a publicity and editorial man, as well as two persons who can work actively in the field with state and local agencies and who can build up our financial support within the South. Here's hoping that we can present one or more new staff members at the annual meeting.

FINANCES It looks as if we shall just about break even on our 1944 budget. We are not particularly proud of this, because if we could have obtained the personnel we wanted, we should be glad to face a sizeable deficit.

Please bear in mind that a budget of about $38,000 is all right for an exploratory and planning year with a small staff, but if this Council is going to serve the South as it should, it must have a much broader financial base. We need at least $75,000 a year for the next three years.

MEMBERSHIP Although we have not had the facilities for putting on an intensive membership campaign, Council membership has grown to more than 400. More than one-third of these members have made contributions ranging from $1.00 to $25.00. The present dues of $1.00 a year are barely sufficient to pay the cost of carrying a member. Should these dues be raised? This question should receive your attention at the annual meeting.

COORDINATION CONFERENCE Your Executive Director will go to Washington on November 22 to attend a conference called by the American Council on Race Relations for the purpose of working out a division of labor and a better coordination of the work of the major agencies which are interested in race relations.

DEMOBILIZATION CONFERENCE The Executive Directors are glad to have had a part in the planning and execution of a conference on the theme of "Demobilization Challenges the Church" which was held in Atlanta on November 1 and 2. The personnel at the conference included representatives of numerous religious and social agencies in several Southeastern states. After addresses by Dr. Russell H. Stafford, of Old South Church, Boston, and Dr. W. A. Smart of Emory University the conference divided into four work shop groups to discuss problems of the post war period: (1) Full employment, (2) Children and Youth, (3) The Churches' Ministry to the Family, (4) Group Tensions. The Council is distributing the findings of the work shop groups. We shall be glad to send copies on request.

FUTURE CONFERENCES — We hope, the budget permitting, to sponsor the following conferences early in 1945: (1) a conference of the leaders of women's groups in the South in the interest of constructive social action, (2) a conference of the heads of state interracial agencies for the purpose of coordinating the program and strategy of the SRC and the state organizations, (3) a conference of Fellows of the SRC.

PROPOSED PAMPHLETS — We want to issue a series of solid and authoritative pamphlets on various Southern problems. The list includes such subjects as The Southern People, Politics and Good Government, The Poll Tax, The Police and Race Relations, The Equalization of Educational Opportunities, Full Employment, Domestic Service, Freight Rates, Small Loans, and Sermons for Southerners.

Some of these pamphlets will be produced by our own staff, others by the best authorities we can get. We have already negotiated with certain experts and we have tentative commitments for the writing of several pamphlets.

STATE INTERRACIAL GROUPS — Because of the merging of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation with the SRC and the inability of the SRC at present to continue financial assistance to the state interracial groups, we have faced the problems of working out anew a satisfactory working relationship with these organizations. We have attended meetings of the state groups in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia, and we feel that we have made some progress.

Since SRC differs from the Commission in structure and in its broad membership, the problem of working out some direct structural relationship with state groups is not easy. However, we have two definite plans which are being proposed to the state interracial organizations. In Plan I the state group would resolve itself into a state division of the SRC; that is, all SRC members living in that particular state would constitute the state division. In Plan II the state group would become an affiliate of SRC in a somewhat informal sense. One state organization has already expressed a readiness to adopt Plan I.

CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTEES — From time to time there arise cases which SRC might well handle for the protection of the civil rights of citizens in the region. The central staff cannot undertake to investigate personally all such cases. Therefore we should like to proceed to the establishment of Civil Rights Committees in all our thirteen states. Each committee would be composed of five Council members and a legal advisor who may or may not be a member of the Council, and the duty of the Committees would be to advise the Executive Directors as to what action the Council should take in cases involving civil rights.

I

HOW THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL BEGAN

The Southern Regional Council, which began its existence as a formally organized body in February, 1944, is the product of many factors, but primarily it is the outgrowth of two parent movements. One of these was the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. The other was the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond series of conferences.

1. The Commission on Interracial Cooperation

In 1919, during the dark days of racial conflict and Ku Kluxism which followed World War I, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation was born. It represented a new idea in race relations—the idea that white people and Negroes should come together and strive to reach a "meeting of minds" on their mutual problems. This idea spread until there were scores of interracial committees operating in the South and elsewhere.

No one contends that the Commission did a perfect job, but no one who has observed the work of the Commission over a period of years can say flatly that it failed. It never claimed that its program would "solve" the race problem. Indeed, its leaders always made it clear that they were trying to take "the next steps" toward greater racial understanding and tolerance. This work has been of inestimable value to the South and to the nation. In its 25 years of operation, the Commission has made interracial conferences respectable almost everywhere in the South, has marshalled thousands of the church women of the South in opposition to lynching and other injustices, has sponsored significant researches on race relations, has issued two million copies of pamphlets and leaflets, and has symbolized the faith of the Southern white people and Negro people in the processes of understanding and cooperation.

In 1939 the Commission leaders, feeling that the educational program which it started out to do had become thoroughly established, and recognizing the need for new blood and new ideas, began to explore the possibility of broadening the scope of the organization and improving its techniques. In October, 1940, the Commission instructed its executive committee to "take whatever steps are necessary to carry out the plans for the formation of a council on Southern regional development," which would include in its program "the work of the Commission and other activities connected with the economic, educational, and social development of the South." Accordingly, an evaluative study of the Commission was made and a plan for expansion was drawn up. In the meantime, the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond conferences matured to a similar purpose, and the outcome was that on the day of the charter meeting of the Southern Regional Council, the Commission met and formally merged its program with, and transferred its assets to, the Southern Regional Council.[1]

The main efforts of the Council in its first few months of existence have been directed toward conserving and stimulating the state and local interracial committees throughout the South, because the Council believes that they must continue to play an important role in race relations and in implementing the program of the Council. The Commission will keep its legal entity for a time, but its program, revitalized and expanded, will be carried on as one phase of the work of the Southern Regional Council.

2. The Durham-Atlanta-Richmond Conferences

The younger parent of the Southern Regional Council was the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond series of conferences. The first chapter in the story of these conferences began with the meeting of a group of Southern Negro leaders at Durham in October, 1942. This conference was an outstanding event in the history of the South. It was a product of the rising tide of racial friction, and it was also in a sense a product of both the successes and the failures of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. These Negro leaders expressed their purpose as follows:

1. See Appendix E.

> We are proposing to set forth in certain "Articles of Cooperation" just what the Negro wants and is expecting of the post-war South and nation. Instead of letting the demagogues guess what we want, we are proposing to make our wants and aspirations a matter of record, so clear that he who runs may read. We are hoping in this way to challenge the constructive cooperation of that element of the white South who express themselves as desirous of a New Deal for the Negroes of the South.

A Committee was appointed to draw up a "Charter" embodying the ideas agreed upon at the Conference, and on December 15, 1942, the Conference issued a document entitled "A Basis for Inter-Racial Cooperation and Development in the South . . . a statement by Southern Negroes."[2] This is a remarkable document. It deserves a place of honor in the annals of American democracy. It tells in plain and dignified language what the Negro wants—not what one or two Negroes want, not what white people say Negroes want, but what a large group of representative Negroes say for themselves. Never before had such a large and distinguished group of American Negro leaders come together and agreed upon something. The statement covers the following areas: Political and Civil Rights, Industry and Labor, Service Occupations, Education, Agriculture, Military Service, and Social Welfare and Health.

The second chapter in this movement was written on April 8, 1943, when a group of Southern white leaders met in Atlanta to consider the statement which had been issued by the Durham Conference. These white leaders said, among other things:

> Their statement is so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and at the same time shows such good will, that we gladly agree to cooperate. All men who believe in justice, who love peace and who believe in the meaning of this country are under the necessity of working together to draw off from the body of human society the poison of racial antagonism.
> It is futile to imagine or to assert that the problem will solve itself. The need is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation and mutual respect.[3]

A third chapter was written on June 16, 1943, when a collaboration committee, composed of representatives from the Durham and Atlanta conferences, met in Richmond to work out further details. This meeting urged "the general adaptation of the Durham statement" and directed that a continuing committee be charged with "the responsibility for working out methods and practical means of approach."[4]

A fourth chapter in this movement was written at Atlanta on August 4, 1943, when a continuing committee of white and Negro delegates again met, this time to draw up specific plans for implementing the Durham statement. The conferees agreed upon "a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better ordering of our society," and the resolution which they passed said:

> We urge the South to pool its efforts and set up a strong, unified, Southern Regional Council, constituted of representatives of both races and of private and public groups. Such a council, in subscribing to the new declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all other available agencies and individuals in private and in public life and especially with a similar national group when established.[5]

3. For the complete text of the Atlanta Statement, see Appendix B.
4. For the complete text of the Richmond Statement, see Appendix C.
5. For the complete text of the Atlanta Resolution, see Appendix D.

As in any movement, there were in these conferences conflicts of personalities and of ideas, there were mistakes and limitations; but, considering the unusual variety of persons and interests represented, there was a remarkable spirit of unanimity. The important thing was that Southern Negro leaders had spoken out courageously, that white leaders had accepted the challenge, and that the two groups had covenanted to take the offensive for constructive social action in the South.

3. Organization of the Council

Following the Atlanta Resolution of August, 1943, there was much necessary committee work on procedure, finance, incorporation, etc. On January 6, 1944, the Southern Regional Council was chartered as a corporation by the State of Georgia "for the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South, . . . to attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region; . . ." [6]

Afterwards the Incorporators met and designated charter members: all persons who had participated in one of the preliminary conferences and all members of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation residing in the Council's area. Of approximately 270 persons thus designated, over 90% accepted charter membership. About 100 were present at the charter meeting in Atlanta on February 16-17, 1944, and they participated wholeheartedly in the meeting. For two days they discussed, they worked over by-laws, they elected officers, Board of Directors, executive directors, and executive committee. When they had finished, they had constructed a thoroughly democratic structure and government for their Council.

II

THE STRUCTURE OF THE COUNCIL

The Southern Regional Council belongs to its members. It has a Board of Directors and an Executive Committee, but all actions of these groups are subject to review by the annual meeting of members. At the annual meetings, which will be held on the second Wednesday in October, every member in good standing is entitled to vote, either in person or by proxy. The membership can be increased indefinitely, if the members desire to do so. The conditions of membership are: (1) an affirmation of belief in the purposes of the Council, (2) residence in the Council area, and (3) payment of annual dues (at present one dollar). All new members must be confirmed by the members or by the Board of Directors.

The By-laws adopted at the charter meeting define the Council's area as the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Voting members must be residents of this area. Persons who live elsewhere and who wish to keep in touch with the work of the Council by receiving its literature regularly, may become Associates of the Council by paying a fee of one dollar a year.

The Board of Directors is at present composed of 64 persons of whom 58 are elected members and 6 are ex officio members. Every one of the thirteen states in the Council area is represented on the Board. The racial composition of the Board is 27 (42%) Negro members and 37 (58%) white members. The occupational distribution of Board members is as follows: education and related interests, 23; business, law, and medicine, 14; religion, 8; public office and civic work, 9; journalism, 4; labor, 4; miscellaneous, 2. In order to prevent the usual ills of ageing and ingrowing, the By-laws provide that no Board member may serve more than two consecutive terms of four years each.

The Council's By-laws provide for a National Advisory Committee, whose function will be the coordination of the work of the Southern Regional Council with the work of similar organizations in other parts of the nation. There will also be one hundred Honorary Fellows of the Council, drawn from the ranks of young Southerners who show promise of progressive leadership, whose function will be to assist the Council as observers, correspondents, and special investigators.

6. For the Charter of the Council, see Appendix F.

III

PROGRAM AND METHODS

The Southern Regional Council represents the combined efforts of liberal and progressive people of both races to give democracy a chance in the South. Its long-time goal is the improvement of social, civic, economic, and racial conditions in the South. The Council is not exclusively a "race relations" organization, nor does it pretend to believe that it can "solve" the race problem, but it does believe that any sound movement for social progress must be based on the realization that the South cannot go far without democratizing its social order and giving all of its human resources a chance to develop their potentialities.

The Council's functions may be summarized as follows: (1) clearinghouse and coordinating work with numerous agencies working on Southern problems; (2) research and survey to determine the facts and the state of public opinion as a basis for sound social action; (3) educational activities through a monthly paper, The Southern Frontier, and through pamphlets, press, radio, conferences, and personal contacts; (4) consultative services to private or official agencies; (5) constructive action at every possible point on the social, economic, political and racial problems of the South.

The immediate objectives of the Council are: (1) to develop its staff and facilities for effective work, (2) to conserve and revitalize the work of existing state and local interracial groups, (3) to promote a strategy conference of the major agencies working on social problems in the South, and (4) to initiate studies and conferences in the areas of police administration, post-war employment, and household service.

As for specific methods, the Council must rely upon the age-old techniques of propaganda, conference, petition, public appeal, personal influence, and the like. It is a voluntary organization, and it has no more power than the combined will, moral conviction, and integrity of its members. It does not believe in miracles, but it does believe that in spite of obstacles there is a range within which hard work and intelligent strategy can induce constructive social change.

IV

THE REGIONAL APPROACH

It is generally admitted, by Southerners and non-Southerners alike, that the South is "a state of mind," and the researches of distinguished scholars have shown beyond all doubt that there are social, economic, political, and cultural traits which set the South off as different from other American regions.

Every region has a certain amount of pride and self-consciousness, and in the South—a region which has long been the object of sympathy, contempt, ridicule, philanthropy, exploitation, and free advice—there is a particularly sensitive reaction to criticism and reform efforts which stem from the "outside." As a matter of fact, in such a situation "outside influences," however well intentioned, can and sometimes do retard progress by provoking defensive attitudes and providing alibis for inaction and demagoguery.

Critics of the SRC have tried to picture it as a "defensive" organization. It is dangerous, they say, because it is trying to solve, on a regional or sectional basis, problems that are really national. However, there is nothing inherently superior about an organization or reform movement merely because it is "national," and nothing inherently inferior or dangerous about it merely because it is "regional." Many problems are national or even international in their scope, but it does not follow that they will be worked out everywhere at the same time and by the same methods. The test of the value of any movement or strategy is in what it achieves, and the Southern Regional Council believes that the surest and sanest way to achieve social progress in the South is to mobilize the efforts of liberal and progressive people within the region. The statement that "the South must work out its own salvation" is sound common sense and sound psychiatry. Certainly the South cannot achieve its fullest development and share equally with other regions in national affairs until it has taken the lead in working out its own problems.

The Southern Regional Council has posted no "keep out" signs and it has declared its willingness to cooperate with likeminded organizations—state, regional, and national. It has come neither to defend nor defame the South, but to help build a better South in a better nation. It dedicates itself to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

APPENDIX A

THE DURHAM CONFERENCE STATEMENT

On October 20, 1942, a group of Negro Southerners met in Durham, North Carolina, to discuss their problems and the changes which, in their opinion, would benefit not only Negroes themselves but the South and the nation. A committee was instructed to prepare a statement embodying the thinking of the Conference. In December, 1942, the following document was given to the public. It was entitled: "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South: a Statement by Southern Negroes."

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status, and the welfare of the country as a whole.

With these problems in mind, we, a group of southern Negroes, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, and in the belief that we voice the sentiments of many of the Negroes of the Nation as well as the South, take this means of recording our considered views of the issues before us.

(1) Our Nation is engaged in a world-wide struggle, the success of which, both in arms and ideals, is paramount and demands our first loyalty.

(2) Our loyalty does not, in our view, preclude consideration now of problems and situations that handicap the working out of internal improvements in race relations essential to our full contribution to the war effort, and of the inevitable problems of post-war reconstruction, especially in the South where we reside.

(3) The South, with its twenty-five million people, one-third of whom are Negroes, presents a unique situation, not only because of the size of the Negro population but because of the legal and customary patterns of race relations which are invariably and universally associated with racial discriminations. We recognize the strength and age of these patterns.

We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races or classes or creeds; however, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework.

(4) We regard it as unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life.

(5) We have the courage and faith to believe, however, that it is possible to evolve in the South a way of life, consistent with the principles for which we as a Nation are fighting throughout the world, that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fears.

Political and Civil Rights

1. We regard the ballot as a safeguard of democracy. Any discrimination against citizens in the exercise of the voting privilege, on account of race or poverty, is detrimental to the freedom of these citizens and to the integrity of the State. We therefore record ourselves as urging now:

a. The abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting.
b. The abolition of the white primary.
c. The abolition of all forms of discriminatory practices, evasions of the law, and intimidations of citizens seeking to exercise their right of franchise.

2. Exclusion of Negroes from jury service because of race has been repeatedly declared unconstitutional. This practice we believe can and should be discontinued now.

3. (a) Civil rights include personal security against abuses of police power by white officers of the law. These abuses, which include wanton killings, and almost routine beatings of Negroes, whether they be guilty or innocent of an offense, should be stopped now, not only out of regard for the safety of Negroes, but of common respect for the dignity and fundamental purpose of the law.

(b) It is the opinion of this group that the employment of Negro police will enlist the full support of Negro citizens in control of lawless elements of their own group.

4. In the public carriers and terminals, where segregation of the races is currently made mandatory by law as well as by established custom, it is the duty of Negro and white citizens to insist that these provisions be equal in kind and quality and in character of maintenance.

5. Although there has been, over the years, a decline in lynchings, the practice is still current in some areas of the South, and substantially, even if indirectly, defended by resistance to Federal legislation designed to discourage the practice. We ask that the States discourage this fascistic expression by effective enforcement of present or of new laws against this crime by apprehending and punishing parties participating in this lawlessness.

If the States are unable, or unwilling to do this, we urge the support of all American citizens who believe in law and order in securing Federal legislation against lynching.

6. The interests and securities of Negroes are involved directly in many programs of social planning and administration; in the emergency rationing, wage and rent control programs. We urge the use of qualified Negroes on these boards, both as a means of intelligent representation and a realistic aid to the functioning of these bodies.

Industry and Labor

Continuing opposition to the employment of Negroes in certain industries appears to proceed from (1) the outdated notions of an economy of scarcity, inherited from an industrial age when participation in the productive enterprises was a highly competitive privilege; (2) the effects of enemy propaganda designed to immobilize a large number of potentially productive workers in the American war effort; (3) the age-old prejudices from an era when the economic system required a labor surplus which competed bitterly within its own ranks for the privilege of work; (4) the established custom of reserving technical processes to certain racial groups; and (5) craft monopolies which have restricted many technical skills to a few workers.

Our collective judgment regarding industrial opportunities for Negroes may be summarized as follows:

1. The only tenable basis of economic survival and development for Negroes is inclusion in unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled branches of work in the industries or occupations of the region to the extent that they are equally capable. Circumstances will vary so as to make impossible and impracticable any exact numerical balance, but the principles enunciated by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee are regarded by us as sound and economically essential.

2. There should be the same pay for the same work.

3. Negro workers should seek opportunities for collective bargaining and security through membership in labor organizations. Since there can be no security for white workers if Negroes are unorganized and vice versa, labor unions of white workers should seek the organization of Negro workers on a fair and equal basis.

4. We deplore the practice of those labor unions which bar Negroes from membership, or otherwise discriminate against them, since such unions are working against the best interest of the labor movement. We hold that only those labor unions which admit Negroes to membership and participation on a fair and democratic basis should be eligible for the benefits of the National Labor Relations Board, Railway Labor Act, State Labor Relations Acts and other protective labor legislation.

5. It is the duty of local, state and Federal agencies to insist upon and enforce provisions for the industrial training of Negroes equal in quality and kind with that of other citizens. We believe, further, that Negroes should have equal opportunity in training programs carried on by industries and by labor organizations.

6. We urge Negro representation on regional organizations concerned with the welfare of workers.

7. We regard the wage-and-job-freezing order of the War Manpower Commission as holding the seeds of a distinct disadvantage to Negroes and other marginal workers. Most of these workers are now employed in the lowest-income job brackets. The "freeze" order can remove the opportunity for economic advancement. There is as yet no assurance that under existing circumstances the War Manpower Commission can deal more equitably by the Negro in the future than it has in the past.

8. We are convinced that the South's economic and cultural development can be accelerated by increasing the purchasing power and skills of Negro workers.

Service Occupations

Any realistic estimate of the occupational situation of Negroes supports the view that Negroes will be employed in greatest proportions for a long time in service occupations. We see, however, possibilities of making of these fields scientifically guided areas in which training and organization will play a greater part in bringing about results mutually beneficial to employer and employee. We believe that greater service will be rendered and greater good will be engendered in the service fields if the following principles are observed:

1. More thorough training should be provided workers who plan to enter the service field, but the reward of the job and treatment on the job should be such as to make the workers feel that their training is justified.

Opportunity should be given the service worker to advance through the opening up of additional opportunities.

2. A wholesome environment, living accommodations, food, uniforms and rest rooms, all of an approved standard, should be provided service workers.

3. Opportunity should be given the service worker to live, after his stipulated hours of work, as an individual undisturbed in his private life by the whims and caprices of his employers.

4. In view of the strides made by labor in general, while the service worker's lot has remained about the same, service workers should be organized into unions with recognized affiliations.*

5. Service workers should be included in the provisions for old age insurance, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, the wage and hour act, and other benefits of Social Security legally provided to workers of other categories.

We believe that these provisions will help to insure more intelligent service and wholesome loyalty (which will improve both the quality of labor and personal relations) in service occupations.

Education

As equal opportunity for all citizens is the very foundation of the democratic faith, and of the Christian ethic which gave birth to the ideal of democratic living, it is imperative that every measure possible be taken to insure an equality of education to Negroes and, indeed, to all under-privileged peoples.

1. Basic to improvement in Negro education is better schools, which involves expenditures by States of considerably more funds for the Negro schools. This group believes that a minimum requirement now is (a) equalization of salaries of white and Negro teachers on the basis of equal preparation and experience; (b) an expanded school building program for Negro schools designed to overcome the present racial disparity in physical facilities; this program to begin as soon as building materials are available; (c) revision of the school program in terms of the social setting, vocational needs and marginal cultural characteristics of the Negro children; and (d) the same length of school term for all children in local communities. Our growing knowledge of the effect of environment upon the intelligence and social adjustment of children, in fact leads us to believe that to insure equality of educational opportunity it is not enough to provide for the under-privileged child, of whatever race, the same opportunities provided for those on superior levels of familial, social, and economic life. We feel it a function of Government to assure equalization far beyond the mere expenditure of equivalent funds for salaries and the like.

2. The education of Negroes in the South has reached the point at which there is increased demand for graduate and professional training. This group believes that this training should be made available equally for white and Negro eligible students in terms defined by the United States Supreme Court in the decision on the case of Gaines versus the University of Missouri.

3. Where it is established that States cannot sustain the added cost of equalization, Federal funds should be made available to overcome the differentials between white and Negro facilities and between southern and national standards.

4. It is the belief of this group that the special problems of Negro education make demands for intelligent and sympathetic representation of these problems on school boards by qualified persons of the Negro race.

5. The education of Negro youth can be measurably aided by the use of Negro enforcement officers of truancy and compulsory education laws.

*In the present hysteria of many housewives who are losing poorly paid servants to better paying war industries, it seems desirable to emphasize that this proposal bears no relation to the fantastic and probably Axis inspired rumors of so-called "Eleanor Clubs."

Agriculture

The South is the most rural section of the Nation, and Negroes, who constitute 33 per cent of its population, are responsible for an important share of the agricultural production on southern farms.

We recognize that the South is economically handicapped and that many of its disabilities are deeply rooted in agricultural maladjustments. To win the war, there is need for increased production of food, fibre and fats. In the present organization of agriculture, Negroes are a large part of the sharecropper and tenant group and a great majority of the rural Negro workers are in this class. Circumstances deny the Negro farmer sufficient opportunity to make his full contribution as a citizen. We suggest the following measures as means of increasing the production of the area, raising the status and spirits of Negro farmers, and of improving the region's contribution to the total war effort.

1. Establishment of sufficient safeguards in the system of tenancy to promote the development of land and home ownership and more security on the land, by:
   a. Written contracts
   b. Longer lease terms
   c. Higher farm wages for day laborers
   d. Balanced farm programs, including food and feed crops for present tenants and day laborers.

2. Adequate Federal assistance to Negro farmers should be provided on an equitable basis. The war effort can be materially aided if adequate provisions are made now for the interpretation of governmental policies to rural Negroes.

3. The equitable distribution of funds for teaching agriculture in the Negro land grant colleges to provide agricultural research and experimentation for Negro farmers.

4. The appointment of qualified Negroes to governmental planning and policy making bodies concerned with the common farmer, and the membership of Negro farmers in general farmers' organizations and economic cooperatives, to provide appropriate representation and to secure maximum benefits to our common wealth.

Military Service

We recognize and welcome the obligation of every citizen to share in the military defense of the nation and we seek, along with the privilege of offering our lives, the opportunity of other citizens of full participation in all branches of the military service, and of advancement in responsibility and rank according to ability.

Negro soldiers, in line of military duty and in training in the South, encounter particularly acute racial problems in transportation and in recreation and leave areas. They are frequently mistreated by the police. We regard these problems as unnecessary and destructive to morale.

Social Welfare and Health

1. We believe that some of the more acute problems of Negro health, family and personal disorganization are a reflection of deficiencies in economic opportunity, but that social and health services for Negroes will continue to be necessary in considerable amounts even with improvement of their economic status. As a means of reducing the mortality and public contagion resulting from inadequacies of medical attention and health knowledge, this group believes that minimum health measures for Negroes would include the following:
   a. Mandatory provisions that a proportion of the facilities in all public hospitals be available for Negro patients;
   b. That Negro doctors be either included on the staff for services to Negro patients, according to their special qualifications, or permitted as practitioners the same privilege and courtesy as other practitioners in the public hospitals;

c. That Negro public health nurses and social workers be more extensively used in both public and private organizations.

2. We advocate the extension of slum clearance and erection of low-cost housing as a general as well as special group advantage. The Federal government has set an excellent precedent here with results that offer much promise for the future.

* * * *

It is a wicked notion that the struggle of the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the Nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government.

The effect of the war has been to make the Negro, in a sense, the symbol and protagonist of every other minority in America and in the world at large. Local issues in the South, while admittedly holding many practical difficulties, must be met wisely and courageously if this Nation is to become a significant political entity in a new international world. The correction of these problems is not only a moral matter, but a practical necessity in winning the war and in winning the peace. Herein rests the chance to reveal our greatest weakness or our greatest strength.

APPENDIX B

THE ATLANTA CONFERENCE STATEMENT

On April 8, 1943, a group of white Southerners met in Atlanta, Georgia, to consider the statement which had been issued by the Durham Conference. The results of their deliberations were made public in the following document.

In October, 1942, a representative group of Southern Negro leaders met in Durham, N. C., and issued a statement in which they addressed themselves "to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations, within the democratic framework."

Their statement is so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and at the same time shows such good will, that we gladly agree to cooperate.

We do not attempt to make here anything like a complete reply to the questions raised nor to offer solutions for all the vexing problems. We hope, however, to point the pathway for future cooperative efforts and to give assurance of our sincere good will and desire to cooperate in any sound program aimed at the improvement of race relations.

These Negro leaders rightly placed emphasis in their statement on discrimination in the administration of our laws on purely racial grounds. We are sensitive to this charge and admit that it is essentially just. From the Potomac to the Rio Grande there are some ten million Negroes. While all citizens are governed by the same laws, it is recognized that Negroes have little voice in the making and enforcement of the laws under which they must live. They are largely dependent upon the will of the majority group for the safety of life and property, education and health, and their general economic condition. This is a violation of the spirit of democracy. No Southerner can logically dispute the fact that the Negro, as an American citizen, is entitled to his civil rights and economic opportunities.

The race problem in any Southern community is complicated by our economic limitations. The factors which have kept the South a tributary section have also kept it poor and lacking in sufficient industry to develop and to provide enough jobs and enough public funds for every public need. Yet the only justification offered for those laws which have for their purpose the separation of the races is that they are intended to minister to the welfare and integrity of both races. There has been widespread and inexcusable discrimination in the administration of these laws. The white Southerner has an obligation to interest himself in the legitimate aspirations of the Negro. This means correcting the discrimination between the races in the allocation of school funds; in the number and quality of schools, and in the salaries of teachers. In public travel where the law demands a separation of the races, primary justice and a simple sense of fair play demand the facilities for safety, comfort and health should be equal. The distribution of public utilities and public benefits, such as sewers, water, housing, street and sidewalk paving, playgrounds, public health and hospital facilities should come to the Negro upon the basis of population and need.

It is recognized that there is often practical discrimination by some peace officers and in some courts in the treatment of Negro prisoners and in the abrogation of their civil rights. There is no such discrimination incorporated in the laws of any of the Southern states. False arrests, brutal beatings and other evils must be stopped.

In the economic field, unquestionably procedures should be undertaken to establish fully the right to receive equal pay for equal work. To do otherwise works a wrong to our entire economic life and to our self respect. With so large a proportion of our wage-earning population belonging to the minority race, if we cannot plan for a well-trained, well-employed and prosperous Negro population, the economic future of the South is hopeless.

Most of the Negroes in the South are on farms and in rural communities. Failure to provide for them all the facilities for improving agricultural practices through schools, county agents, and supervision holds back all of the South. Fair wages, longer tenures of leases and increased opportunities for farm ownership are also necessary.

All men who believe in justice, who love peace and who believe in the meaning of this country are under the necessity of working together to draw off from the body of human society the poison of racial antagonism. This is one of the disruptive forces which unless checked will ultimately disturb and threaten the stability of the nation. Either to deny or to ignore the increased tension between the white and the colored races would be a gesture of insincerity.

That there are acute and intricate problems associated with two races living side by side in the South cannot be denied. But these problems can be solved and will ultimately disappear if they are brought out into an atmosphere of justice and good will. If we approach them with contempt in one group and with resentment in the other group, then we work on hopeless terms. The solution of these problems can be found only in men of both races who are known to be men of determined good will. The ultimate solution will be found in evolutionary methods and not in ill-founded revolutionary movements which promise immediate solutions.

We agree with the Durham Conference that it is "unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life." We agree also that "it is a wicked notion that the struggle by the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity, and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government."

It is futile to imagine or to assert that the problem will solve itself. The need is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation and a mutual respect.

APPENDIX C

THE RICHMOND CONFERENCE STATEMENT

On June 16, 1943, a Collaboration Committee, composed of delegates from the Durham Conference and the Atlanta Conference, met in Richmond, Virginia. The following statement was issued by the Richmond Conference.

This is a day of great differences, strong feelings, and epochal conflicts throughout the world. Yet the world's greatest need and hope is to find common ground for universal action and balanced harmony among all peoples. Manifestly, such a goal must be reached through cooperative approximation to the largest measure of agreement in line with the largest number of values and the largest number of people.

We face, therefore, the double crisis of standing firm for the conservation and preservation of human rights; yet to seek these ends by the way of peace and planning rather than by conflict and revolution.

In America, and particularly in the South, we face the problem of readjustments to meet the demands of present and post-war conditions with reference to the Negro and the future development of a great region of the Nation. This, exclusive of the war, is the great crisis of the South and Nation.

This is the problem of two great peoples caught up in the midst of transition between the powerful heritage of the past and the mighty pull of the future. For here is the white South, a great people often doing little things and good people often doing bad things. And here is the Negro South, caught as always between the upper and nether millstones of conflicting forces and also paying the price of extraordinary transition from level to level of cultural achievement, and needing plenty of understanding and cooperation. And here is the white South inexorably conditioned by cultural complexes, suffering terribly, too, and needing sympathy and help as few peoples have ever needed in the annals of man. And, even more important, the two, white South and black South, are part and parcel of the Nation, whose people need scarcely less than the two regional peoples the sense of time and wisdom.

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status and the welfare of the country as a whole.

This is a rare challenge to the leadership of the South: to the white leadership to find new ways of cooperation and to justify increased confidence of the Negro leadership in the white South; to the Negro leadership, to sense the difficulties involved and to meet increasing demands, without slowing down their essential efforts.

As evidence of the promise of this leadership, two recent Southern conferences on race relations, one at Durham, under the auspices of Negro leadership, and one in Atlanta under the auspices of white leadership, have blazed new trails. As a follow-up of these and with the above problems and backgrounds in mind, we, a group of Southern whites and Negroes, representing both the Durham and Atlanta groups, meeting as a collaboration committee at Richmond, Virginia, June 16, 1943, and following the general trend of the Atlanta group, urge the general adaptation of the Durham statement entitled "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South," which has had extraordinary nation-wide endorsement.

The framers of this covenant, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, have included adequate and searching analysis of the principal issues involved, duly interpreted in their proper perspective. The problems so featured include political and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, social welfare and health.

In the area of political and civil rights: the essential problems featured were those of franchise and the ballot, jury service, personal security, services in public carriers, the elimination of violence, within and without the law, the elimination of lynching, and the employment of an increasingly larger number of Negroes in the public service.

In the area of work opportunities: the increased training for all skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled labor, and opportunity for employment; the readaptation of labor union policies both for the best interests of Negroes and labor unions; the problems of dual standards of pay; support of, but guarding against discrimination in, local, state, and federal procedures; special problems of service workers and standards of living.

In the area of education: equalized opportunities in all aspects but especially including institutions of higher learning, professional training, and equal salaries.

In the area of agriculture: adequate opportunity for the Negro farmer, including a sound system of tenancy, adequate state and federal assistance, increased opportunity for farm ownership, fair farm wages, and the wider employment of Negro farm and home agents.

In the area of military service: along with the obligation to serve, the opportunity for full participation and advancement in the war activities and a continuing better adjustment of unsatisfactory situations.

In the area of social welfare and health: adequate provisions for safeguarding the public health, for training physicians and nurses, and for their employment. Also, the erection of low-cost housing and other facilities for improving community life.

We recognize now the importance of affirmative action, without which we shall fall far short of our hopes and possibilities. To this end, we direct that the continuing committee, as appointed by the two groups now consolidated in this larger collaboration committee, be charged with the responsibility for working out methods and practical means of approach. We urge especially that efforts be begun to prepare the post-war world for a wise and successful reception of our returning soldiers and to prepare both our soldiers and the people for attitudes and procedures adequate to carry the great load of post-war needs. In all these, we urge the public to a new sense of the meaning of these needs as they accord with our professed principles of Christianity and democracy.

APPENDIX D

THE ATLANTA RESOLUTION

On August 4, 1943, a Continuation Committee, appointed by the Richmond Conference, met in Atlanta to consider ways and means of implementing the recommendations of the preceding Conferences. The Committee resolved itself into the nucleus of the Southern Regional Council and elected Dr. Howard W. Odum and Dr. Charles S. Johnson as Co-Chairmen. The following resolution was adopted unanimously by the Committee.

We are gathered together here in solemn assembly, conscious of our heritage and opportunity. In the name and spirit of America and all her resources and institutions we covenant together in harmony and unanimity to make this day, or what this day should bring to pass, epochal in a new purpose, a new understanding, and a new fellowship.

In the name and spirit of America's science and education we seek to find and to tell the truth. In the name and spirit of America's democracy we seek the way of equal opportunity. In the name of America's patriotism, we strive for loyalty to the American dream, for leadership to guide, and for statesmanship adequate to carry the burden of the new America. In the name and spirit of America's Christianity, we search for the new faith of fellowship. In the name of humanity, we propose to substitute the measures of the good society for the old biological struggle for physical survival. In the name and spirit of all these and the living reality of a complex world, we dedicate ourselves to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

Four ways there are, and perhaps more, of approaching these laudable and attainable ends. First, we agree upon a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better ordering of our society. We recognize fully that in the present crisis this covenant is as important as the earlier compacts of the forefathers, and that the framework within which we covenant together must comprehend a concept and a charter which guarantees equality of opportunity for all peoples. This means more specifically as bearing upon the burden of our present counseling that the Negro in the United States and in every region is entitled to and should have every guarantee of equal opportunity that every other citizen of the United States has within the framework of the American democratic system of government.

Second, we dedicate ourselves unswervingly to the successful achievement of this task. Since in the order of all nature and creations and of the growth and development of the people and society there are always certain features peculiar to each society; since in the order of democracy there are certain elemental principles of self-government that are inherent in each folk and regional society; and since in both the physical and cultural heritage of the South there are certain cumulative and tragic handicaps that represent powerful factors in the situation, we appeal to the Nation, in covenant with the South, to exercise a wisdom and maturity through which methods, procedures, and rates of change may be worked out in the spirit of, and in conformity with, the principles of our American democracy.

Third, to the end that there will be actual realistic accomplishments rather than mere words and that there may be possible ways and means of actually insuring progress in all approaches to these goals of equal opportunity, we urge the South to pool its efforts and set up a strong, unified, Southern Regional Council, constituted of representatives of both races and of private and public groups. Such a council, in subscribing to the new declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all other available agencies and individuals in private and in public life and especially with a similar national group when established.

Fourth, since the crisis is not only southern but national, not only for whites but for Negroes and other races as well, and since the central purpose of the new council is cooperation and the building of active good will, we urge the formation of a National Committee on race and regional development, constituted of representatives of all races and of public and private groups. Such a committee, subscribing to the declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all available agencies and individuals in private and public life.

We recognize the sweep and power of the emotions in time of war and crisis and the rights and tendencies in the democratic way of life for thousands of individuals and groups to agitate, organize, and promote their own peculiar programs. This is and must be the essence of a democracy. But it is also the way of democracy to focus upon fundamentals and to give opportunity to responsible leadership through the orderly agencies of government and of private citizens. To this end no greater service can be rendered to the Nation than to covenant together in responsible organizations, to provide leadership and clearing house, and to avoid conflicts, waste and overlapping, on the one hand, and, on the other, to minimize the harmful influence of irresponsible forces in this great hour of need for good will and for effective ways of doing what is needed. We feel that in these councils may be approximated needs more nearly than in any other ways that now appear.

The Nation is committed now to what is generally called, both in private business and in public life, post-war planning to the end that we may be ready for the demobilization and reintegration of our millions of returning soldiers into the best possible American way of life. Recognizing that the problems of the folk and of race constitute a more difficult problem than that of physical planning, by the same token we urge all the more the obligation to apply to this great area of our democracy the best the sciences, social sciences, the humanities, and religion can do in the realistic working out of next steps.

To this end, the present membership of the Continuation Committees of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences is hereby constituted the nucleus of the new Council; and the officers are authorized (1) to take immediate steps for the legal incorporation of the Council; (2) to appoint immediately the necessary staff personnel to implement this program, and (3) to enlarge the present membership in order to make it fully representative of all the interests encompassed by this program.

It is also respectfully urged that the President of the United States appoint a National Committee such as is suggested above.

Catholic Committee of South Honors Guy B. Johnson

Dr. Guy B. Johnson, former executive director of the Southern Regional Council, was honored by the Catholic Committee of the South at its annual meeting September 24 at Charlotte, N. C. In recognition of his long devotion to Southern progress, Dr. Johnson was presented a scroll bearing the following citation:

"The Catholic Committee of the South honors itself in honoring Doctor Guy Benton Johnson, native of Texas, professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina, lover of the whole South and all of its citizens. It honors him not only for his great qualities of courage, fairness, zeal and humility which endear him to every person he meets, but because he stands as the epitome of all for which the Southern Regional Council is crusading, 'to attain, through research and action, the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South.' The Catholic Committee of the South congratulates the Southern Regional Council on its good fortune in having had Doctor Guy Benton Johnson as its Executive Director from its foundation until now."

The award is given each year to a man or woman whose work has greatly contributed to the advancement of the South. It was presented to Dr. Johnson at a public session in the Hotel Charlotte by the Most Reverend Joseph F. Rummel, archbishop of New Orleans and episcopal chairman of the Catholic Committee of the South.

Among the speakers at the Catholic Committee's annual conference were Dr. George S. Mitchell, present director of the Council, Dr. Ira DeA. Reid, former associate director, and Arthur Raper, long associated with the work of the Council.

SRC Receives Last of Legacy

A sum of $1,390 was received recently by the Southern Regional Council as final payment of a $10,000 legacy from the late Esther Morton Smith, who died five years ago. Miss Smith, a Pennsylvania Quaker who once visited every Southern governor in the interest of improved race relations, made the bequest to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, which was absorbed by the Council in 1944.

Dr. Will W. Alexander, formerly director of the Commission, knew Miss Smith as an active and generous supporter of the work of that organization.

"Esther Morton Smith was a Quaker of great devotion," writes Dr. Alexander. 'She devoted her wealth and fine talents to peace and better race relations. Soon after World War I, she and her cousin Sarah Hollowell came south to express to each Southern governor their 'concern' over lynching. Before going to the governors, they sought the advice of the CIC. This was the beginning of an interest in that organization which endured to the end of their lives."

Contributions to the Southern Regional Council are tax-exempt.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA, SEPTEMBER, 1947

To attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region.

THE Southern Regional Council was organized in February, 1944, to determine the facts about the many problems of the South and to mobilize the people of the South to solve those problems. It is a non-profit, non-denominational, non-political organization.

The Council is based firmly on the belief that the problems of the Southern Region may best be attacked by Southerners of both races who are willing to admit the South's shortcomings and join together in a cooperative effort to overcome them. There is no room for narrow sectionalism in such a program. The Council welcomes support and understanding from all sincere individuals and organizations, wherever they may be found.

The South as a whole lags far behind the rest of the nation in wealth, education, health, and political democracy. Yet the South has an abundance of land and people—enough to make it one of the most prosperous regions in the country. The Council is devoted to the task of closing up this gap between the actual and the potential South. If the roots of the social and economic evils that have burdened the South with poverty, ignorance, and prejudice can be exposed —and destroyed—not only will the South benefit, but the entire nation and the cause of democracy as well.

Of fundamental importance in achieving this goal is the enjoyment of full citizenship by all our people. The South cannot move far forward until all its people take part in the democratic process and share both the rights and responsibilities of productive members of society. Most Negroes and many impoverished white Southerners have not had this opportunity; the result has been an exploited and underdeveloped South. The Council has been a bi-racial organization from the start, and its staff is made up of people of both races. It has thus been able to draw on deep resources of interracial understanding in coping with the problems that are shared by white and Negro Southerners alike.

The Council is not exclusively a "race-relations" organization. It believes that it is a mistake to regard the problems of the South purely in terms of race. Friction between the races can best be combated by bringing the entire population of the South abreast of modern standards in health, education, employment, farming, and culture. To work toward the goal of a higher standard of well-being for all the South's citizens is to work for equal opportunity for members of all races.

How Did the Southern Regional Council Start?

IN THE troubled days following World War I, race conflict and the lawlessness of terror organizations reached such proportions that the need for new techniques of restoring harmony could not be ignored. To meet this need, interracial committees were formed in cities and towns throughout the South. It was found that by bringing together influential members of both races grievances could be aired, mutual problems discussed, and a meeting of minds effected. This method had such beneficial results that interracial committees became an established part of the life of the South in the early 'twenties. Their influence became Southwide through the formation of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, a central organization with headquarters in Atlanta.

The Commission helped organize, extend, and guide the work of State and local interracial committees. It assisted them in making their influence felt by newspapers, civil authorities, churches, school officials, police administrators, and health officers. It gave much attention to factual analysis of the problem of lynching and other forms of interracial violence. Its auxiliary, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, did much to educate public opinion in the causes and possible remedies for such violence.

From these early activities, the Commission built up a body of acquaintance and confidence that has been an increasing asset through the years. The traditional barrier between the races was broken down to allow an interchange of ideas and mutual trust. The notion of cooperative action by people of good will, both white and Negro, took root and has continued to grow. In its twenty-five years of operation, the Commission made the meeting of white and Negro citizens for the discussion of common problems an accepted practice almost everywhere in the South. It marshalled thousands of Southern churchwomen in opposition to lynching and other injustices, brought new light to bear on race relations, issued two million copies of pamphlets and leaflets, and symbolized the faith of the Southern white people and Negro people in the processes of mutual agreement and cooperation.

In 1939 the leaders of the Commission began to explore the possibility of expanding the activities of the organization to permit a broader attack on the problems of the South. In October, 1940, the Commission instructed its executive committee to "take whatever steps are necessary to carry out the plans for the formation of a council on Southern regional development," which would include in its program "the work of the Commission and other activities connected with the economic, educational, and social development of the South."

Meanwhile the efforts of other progressive Southerners were leading them to a similar purpose. The first movement in that direction took place when a group of Southern Negro leaders met in Durham, North Carolina, on October 20, 1942, to set forth "just what the Negro wants and is expecting of the post-war South and nation," and to enlist the aid of interested white Southerners. The result of this historic conference was a comprehensive statement covering the following areas: Political and Civil Rights, Industry and Labor, Service Occupations, Education, Agriculture, Military Service, and Social Welfare and Health.

Many social thinkers regarded the Durham statement as the most hopeful pronouncement on race relations that had come out of the South in the last 75 years.

In April, 1943, a group of Southern white leaders met in Atlanta to consider the statement of the Durham conference. These white leaders found the statement "so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum," and so demonstrative of good will, that they gladly pledged their cooperation. "The need," they concluded, "is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation, and mutual respect."

Representatives of both the Durham and Atlanta conferences met in Richmond in June, 1943, to work out further details. The Durham statement was adopted as a general guide to action, and a continuing committee was appointed to devise practical means of approach. As a result of these efforts, the Southern Regional Council was chartered as a corporation by the State of Georgia in January, 1944. At the charter meeting, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation met and formally merged its program and assets with those of the Council. A strong and democratic Council had been established "to attain through research and action the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region."

How Is the Southern Regional Council Organized?

THE Southern Regional Council belongs to its members. The members meet annually to elect officers and plan the program and policies of the Council for the coming year. At present there are over two thousand members. Any person may become a member if he believes in the purposes of the Council, if he resides in the Council area, and if his membership is confirmed by the members or Board of Directors. The Council area, as defined in the by-laws, includes the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Voting members must be residents of this area. Persons who live elsewhere may become associate (non-voting) members. Associates, as well as regular members, receive all publications and reports of the Council.

Financial support for the Council comes from many different individuals and organizations. Some of the organizations are: the Julius Rosenwald Fund, General Education Board, Division of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Church, Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church, Phelps-Stokes Fund, Catholic Committee of the South, Board of Education of the Methodist Church, Ashby Jones Memorial Fund, Committee on Woman's Work of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S., and the Protestant Episcopal Church Province of Sewanee. Individuals support the Council through contributions, legacies, and payment of membership dues.

The membership of the Council includes all sorts and conditions of men, all faiths, all races. Its officers, executive committee, and board of directors are drawn from church leaders of many denominations, businessmen, educators, labor leaders, outstanding men and women in the professions. It is hoped that as membership grows the Council will draw most of its support from active members who join and pay their dues because they believe in the South and in the work the Council has set itself to do.

Members of the Board of Directors are elected by the members of the Council for a term of four years. The Board at present consists of 77 members, representing both races and all of the thirteen states within the Council area. Officers are elected annually, and, with the exception of the administrative staff, serve without pay.

What Does the Southern Regional Council Do?

THE Council's present functions may be summarized as follows: (1) Clearing-house and coordinating work with numerous agencies working on Southern problems; (2) research and survey to determine the facts and the state of public opinion as a basis for sound social action; (3) educational activities through a monthly bulletin, the New South, and through pamphlets, press, radio, conferences, and personal contacts; (4) consultative services to private and official agencies; (5) promotion of specific programs of action through the Council staff and membership.

The Council unites in programs of study and action persons of widely differing backgrounds. It helps to bridge the gaps between rural and town people, Negroes and whites, men and women, residents of mill villages and of adjoining towns, and persons of different faiths and denominations.

Since its formation in 1944, the Council has maintained close touch with the State Interracial Committees, four of which—those in Kentucky, Mississippi, Florida, and South Carolina—have become full Divisions of the Council. Through them, the Council has been able to secure valuable information about all the thirteen States, and to implement a truly South-wide program. The Council offers state and local groups guidance in making social studies and undertaking sound community action. Surveys and informal studies not only yield useful data, but also help create the attitudes necessary for social change.

Also of great value in keeping intimate touch with local conditions throughout the South have been the Honorary Fellows of the Council. These Fellows, drawn from the ranks of young Southerners in all the Southern States who show promise of progressive leadership, perform important volunteer services as observers, correspondents, and special inquirers.

The New South, the Council's monthly publication, serves to bring the members and friends of the Council timely information about Southern problems and Southern progress. Leaders in Southern life have written articles for the New South on such subjects as suffrage, education, agriculture, health, law enforcement, and race relations. The quarterly numbers of the paper are usually devoted to detailed study of some phase of Southern development. In 1946 these special issues were: "Machines in the Cotton Fields," by Arthur Raper; "Wanted: A Healthy South," by Dorothy Dickins; "Wanted: The South's Future for the Nation," by Rupert B. Vance; and a full account of the annual meeting in November. In addition to the New South, the Council issues simple illustrated leaflets and pamphlets which present the facts gathered by careful study and research in Southern problems.

To mention a few of the other activities, the Council has helped individuals secure their legal rights; has made its files available to the press and public and private agencies; has aided Southern veterans, white and Negro, in readjusting to civilian life and obtaining the benefits to which they are entitled; and has made public the results of careful investigations of incidents involving mob violence. In short, the activities of the Council have been as many and varied as the available staff and resources would permit.

The immediate aims of the Council are designed to assure the civic rights of all the people of the South. A primary objective is law enforcement that will provide fair treatment to minority groups and will prevent the outbreak of violence. As one means to equitable law enforcement, the Council is urging the general use of Negro policemen in Southern communities. The need for extension of the vote on a broad democratic base is also receiving urgent attention. The Council is presently engaged in the task of presenting to the Southern people the facts about suffrage in the South, in order to counteract the misinformation that has been circulated about the Negro vote.

To accomplish these and similar objectives, the Council needs the help of every person who believes in the South and would like to help in the work for a better future. Southerners are known everywhere for their pride in their region. In the past, this pride has too often been wasted in resentment of "outside criticism" and in efforts to rationalize the Region's problems. Resentment and recrimination serve no useful purpose, for the problems do exist. The time has long since come when we must prove our loyalty to the South, not by words, but by constructive action. The extent of what may be accomplished is no greater and no less than the willingness of Southerners to work together in the building of a better South in a better nation.

In this belief, the Southern Regional Council devotes itself to doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

do YOU want?

A GROUP OF SOUTHERNERS

representing both races, many occupations, all faiths and denominations got together in 1943 . . .

and decided . . .

IT'S UP TO US, as Southerners, to join together, face up to the South's problems honestly, and work to solve them . . .

That's how the SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL was born

SRC belongs to its members. It is non-profit, non-denominational, non-political. It is Southern in its make-up and its work.

SRC is not, however, an "isolationist" movement to separate the South's problems from the Nation's. It welcomes support and understanding from all sincere people, wherever they are. But voting membership is limited to persons living in the South.

SRC members include people from all walks of life — white and Negro, city and country, men and women, church people, businessmen, educators, labor men, and plain everyday citizens.

SRC BELIEVES that the South can be prosperous and healthy, freed of poverty, prejudice, and fear . . .

It believes in the ideals of democracy for which this Nation was founded . . .

It believes — in the name of democracy, Christianity, and common decency — that the Negro must have equal opportunity in the schoolroom, on the job, and at the polls . . .

SRC BELIEVES THAT DEMOCRACY IS SAFE ONLY WHEN EVERYBODY CONTRIBUTES TO IT AND EVERYBODY SHARES IN IT.

TO ACCOMPLISH ITS AIMS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL WORKS THROUGH - - -

★ Its local groups. SRC has State Divisions and affiliated committees in eleven Southern States, and smaller groups in communities over the South . . .

★ Its Regional Office. SRC's headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia, guides the work of the local groups, advises private and official agencies, issues timely statements and publications . . .

★ A monthly bulletin. NEW SOUTH keeps members and friends of SRC informed about Southern problems and progress . . .

★ Special pamphlets. These give the facts, based on careful study of the region, in simple, illustrated form . . .

★ Public opinion. SRC helps create a better climate of opinion through newspapers, radio, speakers . . .

★ Cooperating groups. SRC works with civic clubs, church groups, labor organizations, and other groups to bring about wholesome improvements . . .

★ Home Town Self-Surveys. SRC helps local groups organize to collect the facts about their communities—and to follow through with corrective action.

TO ACCOMPLISH ITS AIMS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL WORKS FOR - - -

★ Better understanding between the races. SRC helps lessen the violence that has plagued the South by providing a meeting ground where people of good will, white and colored, can come together, air their common problems, achieve honest solutions . . . When trouble brews, SRC members know whom to reach and what to do . . .

★ Equal justice. SRC watches the courts . . . points out injustices . . . works for fair police practices . . . has successfully urged the hiring of Negro policemen in towns and cities throughout the South . . .

★ Equal public services. SRC works to get a square break for ALL our people in —

HOSPITALS AND MEDICAL CARE

SCHOOLS

JOBS

FARMING OPPORTUNITIES

VETERANS SERVICES

HOUSING

VOTING

REPRESENTATION ON OFFICIAL BODIES

★ State government for ALL the people. SRC works for the day when our States will serve all citizens equally.

SOME ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL - - -

Supplied the basic facts in successful campaigns to secure Negro policemen in Atlanta, Memphis, Nashville, Conway (S.C.), and other cities.

During 1945-1947 helped smooth the path for the returning veteran by a widespread field program. Nine World War II veterans — eight of them Negroes — made personal visits to veterans servicing officials in over a third of the counties in the South . . . acquainted them with the needs of Negro veterans . . . taught veterans the full range of services they could get . . . spent $75,000 on this project alone.

Sponsored the 1948 Southwide Meeting on Human and Civil Rights at which four hundred community leaders, representing both races and every Southern State, devised ways to strengthen basic rights at the local level.

At strategic times during the past year, vigorously urged upon each Southern governor a positive program to assure the civil rights of the Southern people.

Persistently advocated the same course for newspapers, church bodies, and other influential groups in the region.

Got the facts into newspapers over the South about health, housing, education, voting, law-enforcement.

THROUGH STATE DIVISIONS AND AFFILIATES - - -

Aroused public opinion against the Ku Klux Klan and played an active part in getting local ordinances passed curbing the activities of such terroristic groups.

Persuaded numerous white churches throughout Georgia to be hosts to interracial meetings.

Served as technical consultant to the steering committee of the Jacksonville, Fla., Self-Survey, which has brought about more than seventy concrete improvements in the Negro community.

Played a leading part in bringing about the establishment of the State Training School for Negro Girls in Texas.

Was largely responsible for the creation of Negro community centers in Macon, Savannah, and other Georgia cities . . . Helped secure a modern, well-equipped Negro Boys' Club for Atlanta.

Aided the Florida Citizens Committee on Education in drawing up recommendations to the General Assembly which would provide equal education for ALL children.

Took the lead in getting Kentucky's Day Law amended to permit Negroes to receive medical and nursing education in institutions formerly open to white students only.

TO DO THESE THINGS

and more, the Southern Regional Council needs YOUR support. Here are three things you can do to help:

1 Join SRC and work actively with other members in your community

2 Contribute to SRC's operating funds

3 Get your friends to work with you and SRC

THE SOUTH'S PROBLEMS ARE Our PROBLEMS — YOURS and MINE
TOGETHER WE CAN BUILD A MORE PROSPEROUS, DEMOCRATIC FUTURE

for their pride in their region. In the past, this pride has too often been wasted in resentment of "outside criticism" and in efforts to rationalize the region's problems. Resentment and recrimination serve no useful purpose, for the problems do exist. The time has long since come when we must prove our loyalty to the South, not by words, but by constructive action. The extent of what may be accomplished is no greater and no less than the willingness of Southerners to work together in the building of a better South in a better nation.

In this belief, the Southern Regional Council devotes itself to doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

What one woman can do to Prevent Lynching

1. She can study the available facts about lynchings and be prepared to use the information at any time.
2. She can present her information to missionary societies and clubs, applying her remarks to the purposes and programs of each group.
3. She can secure signatures of the members of the organizations to which she speaks to a pledge or resolution against lynching.
4. She can ask each organization to appoint one member to serve with her in this work to combat lynching.
5. She can go to the Court House, accompanied by one or more members of her committee, and can discuss with the sheriff, judge, and other officers, the problem of lynching and its prevention. She can ask for the signatures of the officials to a special pledge or resolution against lynching.
6. She can visit the local newspaper and inform the editor of the work undertaken by the women, and can ask for the cooperation of the local press.
7. She and the members of her committee can talk to the ministers of the community. She can plan with them some specific projects of education through the churches, Sunday schools, and young people's organizations.
8. She and her committee can open the way for speakers before the local men's civic, commercial, and service clubs.
9. She and her committee can work out in advance the steps to be taken in case a situation arises which might result in a lynching — that is, what officials or other persons are to be contacted and what agencies are to be notified. One person should call or telegraph the Governor; another, the State Director of Public Safety; and a large number should remind the local sheriff and other police officials that they are expected to act firmly and quickly.
10. She can investigate lynchings and probable lynchings which do occur in her county, with a view to doing everything possible to bring the guilty parties to justice and thus help to prevent the recurrence of such tragedies.

Some Facts About Lynching

HOW MANY SINCE 1889?

Fairly reliable lynching statistics have been available since 1889. The figures on the number of persons lynched are as follows, 1889-1946 inclusive:

Negroes	3060
Total	3859

LYNCHING HAS DECLINED

In the fifty-year period, 1889-1938, the number of Negroes lynched was 3033, or an average of 61 per year. The number of whites lynched was 797, or an average of 16 per year. In the past eight years, 1939-1946 inclusive, 27 Negroes and 2 whites have been lynched.

BUT IT IS STILL HERE

During the war lynching almost disappeared. In 1943 there were 3 lynchings; in 1944 only 2; in 1945 only 1. But in 1946 there were 6. All the victims were Negroes, and four of them were slain in the Walton County, Georgia, atrocity of July 25. Lynchers have changed their tactics. They operate quietly and, usually, in small groupe. It is becoming harder and harder to define "lynching."

ACCUSATIONS AGAINST VICTIMS

Contrary to popular notions, less than one-fourth of the persons lynched since 1889 were accused of assaults on women. The following figures on accusation will be of interest:

Rape and Attempted Rape	24%
Murder	37%
All others	39%

KEEP INFORMED

For further information, read such books as The Tragedy of Lynching, by Arthur Raper, and the pamplets distributed by The Southern Regional Council. Keep up with current efforts to strengthen state and federal laws to control lynching, and let your elected representatives know where you stand.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR PEACEFUL ALTERNATIVES

June 9, 1951

30 North Dearborn
Chicago 2, Illinois

Prof. Robert J. Havighurst
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

ANdover 3-5903

Dear Mrs. Tilly:

The enclosed seven-page draft, based on conferences between Prof. Havighurst, Mrs. Hilda Solomon and myself following collation of all drafts on file, is submitted for your criticism and comment. It is being mailed by the speediest possible means to all National Executive Board members, and only to them. On the basis of your and their reaction, further discussion, and endorsement, a new official policy statement under the title "The Committee for Peaceful Alternatives: What It Is and What It Does" will be issued within this month.

As an alternative to the present organization and content of the statement, Prof. Havighurst mentions that, at the Executive Board's discretion, the statement might end with the words "in their organizing problems" closing the first paragraph on page 6. He also suggests that, in that case, the last full paragraph on that same page might immediately follow the words "in their organizing problems," so as to indicate something of the structure of the Committee.

He also entertained the idea that the statement might omit mention of the attack by the Un-American Affairs Committee.

On these specific questions, Prof. Havighurst states that he has no preference himself, but asks that Executive Board members comment explicitly on them.

Please indicate your reaction by checking one of the choices below and by signing your name.

This will be one of the most important documents to issue from the Committee to date. Your thinking and co-operation on it are urgently needed. We know you will appreciate the value of a very prompt reply. May we hope to hear from you by Thursday, June 14?

Sincerely,

Paul B. Johnson
Executive Director

THE COMMITTEE FOR PEACEFUL ALTERNATIVES

WHAT IT IS

WHAT IT DOES

The Committee for Peaceful Alternatives begins its third year with a peace program worked out by conferences of peace groups throughout the country. Starting as a small group two years ago in opposition to the Atlantic Pact, the Committee has attracted liberal people--educators, housewives, businessmen, lawyers, and many clergymen--who believe in negotiation rather than war, world disarmament rather than an arms race, the United Nations rather than military alliances. Since the Midcentury Conference for Peace at Chicago in May of 1950, the small organizing group has grown to include active state and local committees in Connecticut, Baltimore, New York City, New Jersey, Cleveland, Long Island, San Francisco, Detroit, Philadelphia, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Chicago, and Los Angeles. Its members everywhere are united on three basic principles:

There can be no victor in an atomic war.

The peaceful co-existence of nations with different social and economic systems is not only possible but imperative.

No difference between nations can be so great that mutual annihilation is the only answer.

WHAT IT STANDS FOR

Impartially and sharply criticizing Russia and the United States when their policies create global tension and misunderstanding, the Committee concerns itself chiefly with the policy of our own American government, for the simple reason that it is the only government that we can realistically hope to influence.

We can and must create a foreign policy that the world can accept.

Mistrusted and feared by our Russian and Chinese rivals, present American policy is also mistrusted and feared by substantial groups in Britain, Canada,

France, Italy, Western Germany, Japan, India, and the Scandinavian peninsula. This basic failure of the Truman foreign policy threatens to destroy the world-wide moral community which we are dedicated to preserve. We must have a foreign policy which the world can understand and accept. There are just too many foreigners in this world for us to go it alone.

Any realistic American policy must be dictated by three imperative needs: our concern for America's security; the necessity of genuine world order; the deep wish of all peoples for peace.

No proposal which neglects any of these imperatives makes sense. Only a program based on the life-giving principles of our civilization--negotiation, compromise, law, and progressive change--can satisfy them all.

Neither of the Super Powers can conquer or dominate the world; this becomes increasingly clear. But the alternative for them is not frustration. Equally, neither Super Power can challenge the other's security zone--as both have done--without bringing humanity to the brink of war; but the alternatives are neither appeasement nor preventive war. There is a common meeting ground where security requirements harmonize with the will for peace. In the many distortions by the Soviet press, and in the tragically short-sighted thinking so common here, that meeting ground is obscured. Certainly the Soviet Union has done much which hinders the world from finding basic agreement, through its systematic, one-sided description of American society and governmental policy, through restrictions on travel and entry into the Soviet Union, and through its refusal to take part in organizations--especially UNESCO--devoted to international co-operation and cultural relations. And from the Soviet point of view, the United States has given cause for mistrust and fear. Russian visitors are denied admission to our country; and large sections of America's press are hostile and one-sided in presenting information about Russia. But the common meeting ground must be found and declared. We must rediscover diplomacy; and we must repair that breakdown of communication, from which today's crisis chiefly results. We who stand for freedom and democracy cannot permit a catastrophe which will devastate our civilization and bring dictatorial reaction and bigotry in its wake.

America cannot monopolize world leadership, and must not abdicate it.

We doubt that the Twentieth Century will be called either the American Century or the Communist Century. God forbid that it should be called the Dark and Bloody Century, in which humanity destroyed itself through three world wars. God grant that the Twentieth Century may be called "The Century In Which World Order Emerged," and the world's peoples learned to live together in peace, plenty, and justice.

To take one critical area--where the underprivileged nations are asserting their rights--all informed persons know that this turbulent revolution would confront us if neither Russia nor Marxian communism had ever existed. We feel with most experts that the Asiatic revolution cannot be stopped. Wisdom requires that we support those national revolutions, and help them find a democratic direction. It is unworthy of our traditional generosity and national creativeness that we give Asia no alternatives save Communism or the Bao Dais, Rhees, and Chiangs. Asia's millions ask of us only understanding, generous aid, and a legitimate place in the world councils which shape their destiny. We deny that American ingenuity and good will are unequal to that challenge. Asia's anti-colonial ideals stem directly from our American heritage. Their claims, and our economy's long-term health, are in full harmony. Workable, expert plans to develop underdeveloped areas--in the words of a recent history-making UN report--now exist; American co-operation can help turn plans into achievements.

To end the present tragic war and to point the path to peace, the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives makes these recommendations today:

--the war in Korea must be stopped, and Korea's future regulated by international agreement in concert with the Korean people;

--a full-scale program of economic aid to underdeveloped countries must be launched through the United Nations;

--mutual reduction of weapons of all types, through a general disarmament conference under the United Nations, must end the present arms race;

--the United States must inaugurate and pursue direct top-level negotiations of all outstanding differences with Russia and the new government of China, until agreement is reached;

--the United States must recognize the new government of China, and must not bar it from the United Nations;

--free communications and travel, and exchanges of students, teachers, artists, businessmen, and scientists must be established between East and West.

"Can I do anything for peace?" is not the question. The only realistic question is, "What shall I do for peace?" Our answer is summed up in these

LESSONS OF A YEAR

Every week's news is a basis for peace activity.

The American decision to re-arm Germany, the President's statement that American commanders might choose when to use the atomic bomb, the dismissal of General MacArthur, and the many government actions jeopardizing basic civil rights, all have furnished the occasion for conferences, telegrams to officials, delegations to representatives, and other vigorous activity from the national to the neighborhood levels. Again, when Senator Johnson proposed a Korean cease-fire, Peaceful Alternatives groups spontaneously rose to that dramatic opportunity.

Publications themselves are news; around Stringfellow Barr's Let's join the human race and around John Somervill's incisive analysis of War and peace in the great debate, for example, excellent discussions have been held.

Great oaks . . . .

It was only a handful of Chicago mothers and housewives who determined that Mother's Day, 1951, would be a major event in their neighborhood. But that handful got peace statements in local papers; they met that week with their congressmen; they asked every local clergyman to build his sermon around peace--and got nearly 100% co-operation; they have inspired formation of peace groups in several temples and churches. It was only a score of professors and students who began polling faculty opinion on recognition of communist China, but they helped manifest the peace sentiment of nearly 200 distinguished educational leaders over the country. And just a dozen leaders initiated the Midcentury Conference for Peace--but over 700 delegates from 31 states took part in that splendid meeting. These events reveal the greatest lesson of all:

The will to peace is there.

Many Americans see that the MacArthur policy means World War III--now. They rightly fear that the Truman policy means World War III--later. And before them the evidence mounts that the whole "cold war" policy is self-defeating. Collaboration with Franco and Chiang, strong-arm methods at Lake Success, curtailment of civil liberties here, havoc in Britain's--and America's!--economics, and above all the insane gamble on German re-armament, belie in advance every moral defense and justification for that policy.

There are other alternatives. Our Committee has consistently championed them. The highest responsibility of Americans today--of all of us, of every one of our nation's moral and intellectual leaders--is to point these alternatives out. We urge you to accept that challenge. We propose to help you to give America leadership for peace. We propose, in short, to equal and surpass our record to date. We will give every willing person the fullest organizational assistance, literature, and personal help; we will give organizations--state, regional, and local--vitally needed clearing-house service, timely informational aids, the resources of our executive leaders; and we will take an active, constant, personal part in their organizing problems .

Peace advocates will be criticized.

The Committee for Peaceful Alternatives itself has sustained--and weathered--attacks, including wholly false allegations by the Un-American Affairs Committee, which we have already refuted. There are no Communists among our leadership, nor do they have any influence over our words or deeds; but we refuse to bar from membership or from our conferences anyone who gives evidence of a sincere desire to work for peace. Only one course is consistent with our self-respect and with genuine loyalty to America: to affirm the value of free discussion, and to insist that democracy can stand on its own two feet and meet all comers; to prove the vitality of traditional American liberalism; and thus, to raise high "a standard to which the righteous can repair." That advocacy of peace is no foreign prerogative, but an American right, is the bedrock of principle on which the success of this Committee stands.

Peace groups must have both local initiative and national leadership.

The Committee works and grows primarily through local neighborhood groups, co-ordinated in state and city councils. As new groups form every month, they affiliate with the National Committee, upon acceptance of their application by the National Board. The considerable and unavoidable expenses of national leadership are met through publications and through contributions by affiliated individuals and by local groups.

On the basis of thinking throughout the organization, the National Executive Board decides specific application of accepted general policy. The Committee has been divided in the past and expects to be divided in the future on specific issues. We represent various approaches to the moral, religious, and political questions of the use of military force, as well as different interpretations of the origins of the Korean conflict. But we are all united on the all-important principle that peace can be won and maintained with justice through persistent recourse to peaceful alternatives, like those proposed in the Committee's program. We were and are unanimous in opposing militarism everywhere--in Germany or in our American homeland--and in working to revitalize the democratic American values which can make us an example and inspiration to the world.

Georgia Priest Calls Segregation Aid To Reds; Speech Draws Praise

SAVANNAH, GA., - Racial segregation is an aid to the "communistic conflagration that is sweeping the earth" and the South's position in the matter is an "ostrich-like attitude," Msgr. T. James McNamara, rector of the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist, here, declared in an address before members of the local Kiwanis Club.

The Monsignor spoke in favor of President Harry S. Truman's civil rights program. He asserted that his purpose was to face facts and "my hope is that in facing them we may be inspired to give greater substance to the American dream of equality before the law. Mark you, I did not say 'social equality,' because in my estimation that is a red-herring used by those inimical to our country's best interest to divert attention from the substance of things."

When the Monsignor had concluded his talk, Charles J. Musante, club president, urged his fellow Kiwanians "to go home and think over the thoughtful and effective speech."

Monsignor McNamara said the United States would act more consonantly with its traditions if legislation such as the Stratton bill, to permit entry of DP's into the country, was enacted. "As I see it" the Monsignor said, "a person who has suffered exile in behalf of democracy, would have less an 'ism' to contribute to the welter of confusion which besets our national life today than the so-called native-American who hides his face and his identity and who is, as yet, to reach the maturity of the founding fathers of our glorious nation."

After citing the background of President Truman's civil rights program, the Monsignor said that reaction in Dixie was a "hue and cry that developed into a crescendo." He charged that the dominant note of the crescendo was the term segregation with all its "ugly connotations." reeking with contradictions. He said the South's legal pattern of segregation dramatizes a flair for making laws and then disregarding their content. He asked that if the South has segregation as its laws proclaim, how can it be explained that out of the 13,000,000 Negroes in the country, not more than 7,000,000 "are biologically Negro in the full sense of the term." He continued: "Do you wonder that the Negro irks under the burden of the legislative pattern of segregation when he finds the dignity of motherhood exploited to serve the passions of those who cry segregation?"

The rector of the Savannah Cathedral told his audience: "We can no longer profess one thing and act otherwise. If we believe the principles of the Declaration and the Bill of Rights to be truths, solidly established on which a governmental structure can be successfully reared, then it is highly imperative that our personal and public relationships reflect these principles."

The speaker recalled that in October, 1943, the Diocesan Council of Catholic Women advocated to the post-war planning committee of Savannah that Negroes be allowed to move "from the lanes and alleys of the city" to housing projects, and added that had such a plan been adopted it would have improved the city's position in police and health problems. He recalled that the council also proposed Negroes be appointed as policemen. This has been done in a limited way, he declared, and said the full benefit of the plan will not be realized until the authority of Negro policemen is extended beyond the restrictions of a particular segment of the city's population.

Monsignor McNamara expressed the belief that the Negro does not resent segregation, but objects to its legal pattern which "stigmatizes him and labels him a second-class citizen." The Negro wants more than anything the assurance of the unmolested vote, the Monsignor said, "knowing that then and then alone he can earnestly pursue happiness in the sense of our country's declaration of principle, which declares the pursuit of happiness to be the citizen's God-given right, irrespective of race, color, creed or national origin."

The South of the Future

A Statement of Policy and Aims of the Southern Regional Council December 12, 1951

EIGHT years ago, the Southern Regional Council was born out of the conscience and high resolve of a democratic nation at war. Today, in another period of international tension, we are faced with a renewed challenge to provide leadership and direction in a troubled region. It is essential that we assess clearly and wisely the role that the Southern Regional Council is to perform in this critical time.

We do not believe in the exclusive validity of any single approach or any single organization. There is not only room, but a desperate need for a wide variety of programs concerned with broadening democracy through legal, economic, legislative, religious, and educational means. Moreover, such programs are needed on all levels — national, regional, state, and local. Every group, like every individual, should chart its course with due regard for the special contribution it is fitted to make.

THE ROLE APPROPRIATE to the Southern Regional Council is evident in its origin and make-up. The Council's main asset is and has always been the people of the South who understand and want the full practice of democracy, and who at the same time know intimately the old evils that burden the South, and their causes. From such people is the Council's membership drawn. They have wanted a regional organization, not out of any provincial desire to separate the South's problems from the nation's, but out of the conviction that such an organization has unique advantages. It can express the best and often neglected elements of Southern thought and conscience; it can serve as a convincing demonstration of Southerners working together as fellow citizens without regard to race; and it can tap local resources and initiative often inaccessible to agencies outside the region.

The Council seeks to be a practical organization, emphasizing working solutions rather than spectacular pronouncements. Indeed, that philosophy is basic to an organization which hopes to open closed minds and substitute reason for prejudice.

The Council, by its very nature, is not a "mass pressure" organization. The number of persons in the South who are able and willing to reject the taboos on interracial effort in their own communities is growing, but it has not yet reached mass proportions. Meanwhile, the Council's membership can function effectively as enlightened citizens acting through the civic life of their communities in behalf of our common principles. Their methods are the established ones of conference, fact-finding, and persuasion.

The Council takes no part in political activity. However, it can and does consult with public agencies and officials and makes its influence felt for truly representative government.

THE COUNCIL'S FUNCTIONS may be briefly summed up as follows:

To serve as a meeting ground for citizens of all races, occupations, and religious persuasions.

To present the facts about the region, and their implications, through newspapers, radio, magazines, pamphlets, and other public media.

To counteract appeals to prejudice and violence by demagogues, professional bigots, and hate organizations.

To provide a program adaptable to local need in both the relatively backward and the relatively advanced areas of the South.

To translate appropriate research findings from universities and other centers to the practical situations with which the action program will be concerned.

To give special emphasis to the development of leadership among promising young Southerners of all races.

To convene, by interest group, key persons in the various fields of Southern life, so that steps to genuine integration may be representatively agreed upon.

To stimulate local initiative to work for local solutions in full democracy, so that legislation and judicial rulings may be translated into justice for the individual in his everyday life.

The basic machinery necessary to enable the Council to work effectively at these tasks is: (1) trained, competent, professional persons of both races working in each Southern state as agents of improvement in public life; and (2) staff in a central office of the Council to direct and service the field people.

THE DECLARED PURPOSE of the Southern Regional Council is "to attain through research and action the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region." This objective has lost none of its timeliness since it was first adopted. Although the past eight years have brought notable progress in the South, the job remaining is a vast one, and the pressures of national and international events demand an even speedier advance. Many of our institutions continue to make unfair and unwarranted distinctions between citizens solely on the basis of race. Outmoded traditions, unjustified fears, and ancient prejudices continue to exact a heavy toll on the unity, productiveness, and integrity of our society.

It is the ultimate hope and aim of the Council that it may help in bringing solution to regional problems that transcend the question of race — problems economic, social, ethical, which affect impartially people of all races. But, for the present, the unique liability under which the South labors arises out of an unreasoning racial disharmony. The first task of informed and conscientious Southerners is to strive to create here the atmosphere in which artificial distinctions and discriminations based upon race will no longer persist. Only when that goal has been attained will the energies of enlightened men be fully released for the great task of realizing all our potential resources, natural and human.

THE SOUTH OF THE FUTURE, toward which our efforts are directed, is a South freed of stultifying inheritances from the past. It is a South where the measure of a man will be his ability, not his race; where a common citizenship will work in democratic understanding for the common good; where all who labor will be rewarded in proportion to their skill and achievement; where all can feel confident of personal safety and equality before the law; where there will exist no double standard in housing, health, education, or other public services; where segregation will be recognized as a cruel and needless penalty on the human spirit, and will no longer be imposed; where, above all, every individual will enjoy a full share of dignity and self-respect, in recognition of his creation in the image of God.

Equal opportunity, truly defined, includes all this and more. We have no illusion that it can be realized in the South quickly or easily or perfectly. Nor do we imagine that the Southern Regional Council can play more than a modest but creditable part toward its achievement. Yet it is the ideal toward which we strive and, short of which, we have a duty to remain dissatisfied. For it is nothing less than the American ideal.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

63 Auburn Avenue, N. E. • Atlanta 3, Georgia

Southern Regional Council

An organization of Southerners of both races working together in the interest of all the South's people. It is not a political, denominational, or profit-making organization.

HOW DID IT START?

In 1943 a group of leading Southerners got together and decided that a strong regional organization was needed to help work out the South's problems. The result was the Southern Regional Council.

HOW DOES IT WORK?

Through a regional office in Atlanta, through state divisions and affiliated committees in eleven Southern States, and through individual members in all parts of the region.

WHAT DOES IT DO?

★ Through careful study, gets the facts about our region's health, housing, education, law enforcement, and race relations. Makes the facts widely available through a monthly bulletin, pamphlets, newspapers, radio, and speakers.

★ Advises private and official agencies, through both the regional office and state committees.

★ Works at the community level with civic clubs, church groups, labor organizations and others to get wholesome improvements.

WHAT HAS IT DONE?

★ Launched campaigns that have secured the employment of more than two hundred Negro policemen in Southern cities.

★ Carried out a widespread field program to get attention to the needs of Negro veterans in the South.

★ Has worked steadily to secure equal educational opportunity for the two races.

★ At strategic times during the past year, vigorously urged upon each Southern governor a positive program to assure the civil rights of the Southern people. Advocated the same course for newspapers, church bodies, and other influential groups.

★ Fostered self-surveys in a number of Southern towns which have resulted in many concrete community improvements.

★ Advised state legislatures on the desirability of measures that would make more opportunities available to Negro citizens.

★ Has assisted church women in a Southwide program for better law enforcement and equal justice in the courts.

★ Has successfully encouraged improved practices in the handling of racial news in Southern newspapers.

WHO SUPPORTS IT?

Up to now, the Southern Regional Council has had support from foundations, church groups of various faiths and denominations, and individual contributions. With the termination of some foundation support, the Council now seeks financial aid from new sources.

WHAT ARE ITS NEEDS?

In the coming months the Council hopes to increase its work at the community level, to give more strength and guidance to state and local committees. To carry out this objective and to expand the existing program in the fields of health, education, agriculture, and economic development, the budget committee estimates the Council's annual need at $88,000.

There is a deep and growing conviction among Southerners that they should support the South's own effort to care for its people's needs. The Southern Regional Council, as a body of Southern leaders, works responsibly at this job. The Council and the South ask for your help.

Foreman Brands Budenz 'Liar'

1-4-53

NEW YORK, Jan. 3 — (AP) — Dr. Clark Foreman Saturday called a "lie" testimony by Louis Budenz that the former once was a Communist Party member.

Foreman, once president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, replied to Budenz' testimony before a special house committee on tax-free institutions last Dec. 23.

In a statement issued here Saturday, Foreman said he asked permission Dec. 30 to appear before the committee because the testimony "is an absolute lie without any foundation in fact."

The statement added that he has not yet received a reply to the request.

"I have received no reply to my telegram and want to protest the use of congressional immunity for a self-confessed liar to slander innocent men without providing an opportunity for correction of the false accusations," Foreman's statement said.

Ira Reid

Ex-Atlanta U. Prof. Denies Red Party Tie

New York Times News Service
Special to The Atlanta Constitution

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30 — Two professors, Walter Gellhorn of Columbia University and Dr. Ira de A. Reid of Haverford (Pa.) College, denied under penalty of perjury today that they ever had been Communists.

They made the denials at their own request in response to testimony by Louis Budenz, former Communist leader, identifying them and 26 other leading intellectuals as Communists while he was active in the party prior to 1945.

The special House committee investigating tax-exempt foundations, which had Budenz as a witness on Dec. 23, called a special hearing for professors Gellhorn and Reid.

Budenz formerly served as a member of the National Committee of the Communist Party and was managing editor of the Daily Worker.

Reid, a professor of sociology formerly with Atlanta University, declared:

"I am not a Communist and I never have been a Communist, and therefore I regard that as a deliberate untruth as advanced by Mr. Budenz."

He also denied, under questioning, that he had "ever been under Communist discipline." He acknowledged that he had been a member of the executive board of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, cited by the House committee on un-American activities. He emphasized, however, that he had "pulled out" when the conference no longer served the purpose of a "forthright, democratic, good organization" and joined the rival Southern Regional Council.

Dr. Ira Reid Denies Link With Commies

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Dr. Ira De A. Reid, professor of sociology at Haverford (Pennsylvania) College, is on record today as having denied under oath thec harge of Louis Budenz, onetime managing editor of the Communist Daily Worker, that he was a Communist.

He appeared, on his own initiative, before a hastily-called open meeting of the House Select Committee which investigated educational funds and swore that he has never been a committee.

The committee, which went out of existence when it submitted its report on New Year's Day, had concluded its scheduled public hearings but added the impromptu session at the urgent request of Dr. Reid and Dr. Walter Gellhorn, professor of administrative law at Columbia University, who also denied he was a Communist.

Both Dr. Gellhorn and Dr. Reid testified that they had never met Budenz, who teaches at Fordham University and renounced Communism years ago and has since appeared frequently at congressional hearings to make his accusations.

Dr. Reid, former chairman of Atlanta University's Sociology Department, not only denied ever being a Communist, but said he was never a Communist sympathizer. He told the committee he had quit various organizations when he detected a trend toward domination by Communists—organizations later listed as Communist fronts.

He said because he is colored, he has always been interested in such subjects as racial discrimination, and this, coupled with an intense interest in academic freedom, may have led him to join some organizations listed as subversive later by the Attorney General.

ATTACK ON CLEMENT IS DIRTY POLITICS

* * * A member of the /City Executive Committee/board has charged that Dr. Clement is a Communist sympathizer because he once beloned to the now defunct Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

This newspaper is proud of thefact that it contributed largely to the demise ofthat organization. We were twice threatened with lawsuits because of our exposure ofit; therefore, we believe we have some authority to apeak.

The Southern Conference for Human Welfare was organized by honest, loyal Americans, with a viewpoint to organizing all constructive forces in the South to improve the South's economic and social status. It later was infiltrated by Communists, but for a good many years it was composed of an led by personsof unquestioned loyalty, during which time its membership was about 99.95 per cent loyal. It offers the typical example of a few rotten Communists spoiling a good barrel of apples.

Even so, it was not until a good many years had passed, and after most of the membership had withdrawn, including Dr. Clement, that personsof suspected communistic tendencies took over what remained of theorganization. They did not long endure, largely because this newspaper exposed them and kept upon them thefull light of publicity. Therefore, we feel free to say that this smear attack on Dr. Clement was false a d unworthy, and those conducting it reflect no credit on themselves, our city, state and region. * * *

Methodist Resolution Condemns Publication

By LAURA BARRE
Constitution Staff Writer

The North Georgia Methodist Conference passed a resolution Thursday condemning One Methodist Voice, a periodic publication edited by the Rev. Blake Craft, Clayton, and expressing confidence in the "Christian integrity and patriotic loyalty" of the ministers attacked in the publication.

The resolution followed a statement by the Rev. Mr. Craft that in order for him to receive an appointment, "to which I am justly entitled," Bishop Arthur J. Moore had required that he cease editing the controversial publication.

He charged that his right as a Methodist preacher to speak and to use his pen according to his conscience were on trial.

"POLITELY REFUSED"

Bishop Moore replied that he had suggested the Rev. Mr. Craft as a pastor for several churches and all the churches had "politely but firmly" refused to accept him. Finally, the bishop said, one church agreed to take him on condition that he cease publication of One Methodist Voice.

"I have been publishing the paper for three years," the Rev. Mr. Craft said, "exposing teachings of socialism, a world federalism and a treasonable pacifism within the Methodist church. I have pointed out how some of the leading officials have Communist front affiliations.

"Not one man has made any demand on me to ask me to retract anything I have said. I take that to mean they think what I say is true."

In their resolution, the ministers said "we have sought sincerely to practice Christian charity toward members of our fellowship. For more than two years, however, this spirit of charity has placed North Georgia Methodism in the position of seeming to approve, or, at least, to condone, the spirit and statements contained in One Methodist Voice. We now believe the time has passed when silence is Christian.

"We therefore declare that One Methodist Voice does not speak for, nor represent the spirit nor the mind of North Georgia Methodists.

"COMPLETE CONFIDENCE"

"We declare our complete confidence in the integrity of our brethren who have been attacked by One Methodist Voice, such as Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Bishop Bromley Oxman, Dr. E. Stanley Jones, Dr. Lester Rumble, Dr. Nat G. Long, Dr. E. G. Mackay and Mrs. M. E. Tilley.

"We declare our opposition to the use of the name "Methodist" by such independent organizations and publications as the Methodist Federation for Social Action (unofficial) and One Methodist Voice (unofficial)."

Sid Williams, a layman from Austell, moved to table the resolution condemning the publication, but his motion failed for want of a second.

FAVORED RESOLUTION

M. G. Dunaway, a layman from Rockmart, said the laymen favored the resolution as strongly as did the ministers.

The Rev. W. J. Culpepper, Warrenton, moved that the conference re-affirm its love for the Rev. Mr. Craft and request him to re-consider his relationship to the conference and to his brethren. The motion was passed.

"I will stop publishing my paper," Craft replied, "when the bishop appoints a committee to work with me to study what is going on in the church."

The bishop made no reply.

Rev. Blake Craft Gets A Deserved Rebuke

The North Georgia Methodist Conference is to be congratulated for turning thumbs down on that package of prejudice published by the Rev. Blake Craft under the title "One Methodist Voice."

Mr. Craft's protest that his freedom of press is being violated has no foundation in fact. No one is trying to keep him from circulating his views. The Methodist denomination is within its rights in denying him the right to proclaim those views from the press or from the pulpit in the name of Methodism. The church must do something to prevent careless, selfish use of the fine word "Methodist" by those individuals or organizations with special axes to grind.

It is significant that when the Rev. Mr. Craft proffered his services on his own terms, Bishop Arthur J. Moore, head of the conference, reported that the churches to which the pastor had been offered "politely but firmly" had declined him.

North Georgia Conference Rebukes Publisher of 'One Methodist Voice'

ATLANTA, June 25 (AP)—The North Georgia Methodist Conference today overwhelmingly condemned a newspaper, "One Methodist Voice," published by the Rev. Blake Craft of Clayton.

Craft was given a year's sabbatical leave by the conference yesterday.

Bishop Arthur J. Moore of Atlanta said it had been impossible to find any Methodist church in Georgia which would accept Craft as its pastor.

The otherwise calm, orderly meeting was thrown into momentary confusion today when Craft asked for the floor.

He said that since he had been granted a leave some of his friends didn't understand the move and he wanted to explain.

Thereupon he read a copy of a telegram he had sent Moore in which he accused the bishop of refusing to give him an appointment.

Moore then rose to answer Craft's charges. He explained that the Methodist Conference cabinet, composed of bishops and district superintendents, had tried to work out an appointment for Craft.

He said the minister wrote to him early in June asking for a new assignment when appointments were announced at the current conference.

The bishop added that he had contacted chairmen of the board of stewards in several churches in Georgia asking that they receive Craft as minister but in each case was turned down.

Then the cabinet met with Craft and, in a "friendly discussion" asked him to name some churches which would receive him. Craft named one, but this church also refused to accept him. Moore continued, unless he would stop publishing "One Methodist Voice."

Craft told the cabinet he must follow his conscience and the members agreed but, said Moore, they didn't see how he could construe that to mean he should continue to criticize his brother ministers.

Moore said the cabinet had tried to work with Craft "but he has refused to co-operate."

When Moore finished, the convention gave him a standing ovation.

The Rev. J. C. Callaway of Athens, secretary of the cabinet, called on each member of the cabinet to stand and confirm the bishop's sentiment. They did.

The conference then adopted a resolution introduced by Dr. Dow Kirkpatrick, Athens pastor. It condemned "One Methodist Voice" and said:

"It does not speak for nor represent the spirit nor the mind of north Georgia Methodists" and declared "complete confidence in the Christian integrity and patriotic loyalty of our brethren who have been attacked by "One Methodist Voice."

The resolution said the paper had attacked such men as Bishop Moore; Bishop Bromley Oxnam of Washington; Dr. E. Stanley Jones, Methodist missionary; Dr. Lester Rumble, Augusta minister; Dr. Nat G. Long, Atlanta pastor; Dr. E. G. MacKay, district superintendent of the Decatur-Oxford district, and Mrs. M. E. Tilley, prominent Methodist worker of Atlanta.

The conference yesterday voted to raise retirement pay of ministers from $30 per service year to $35.

Rev. Blake Craft of Clayton Denies Slander, Says Press Freedom Censored

By SARAH MYRICK

A stern resolution condemning One Methodist Voice, a periodic publication edited by the Rev. Blake Craft of Clayton was passed overwhelmingly at the North Georgia Conference Thursday morning.

The resolution came after an attack by the Rev. Mr. Craft that he had been denied his freedom of the press and the right of a Methodist minister to express freely his opinion on matters relating to his church.

The Rev. Mr. Craft Wednesday was granted a requested sabbatical leave. On the conference floor Thursday morning, he contended the bishop had not given him an appointment.

In reply, Bishop Moore explained to the conference that he could not get a church to accept the Rev. Mr. Craft unless he would cease to "slander his brethren."

THE RESOLUTION declared "that One Methodist Voice does not speak for nor represent the spirit nor the mind of North Georgia Methodists."

It declared "complete confidence" in the Christian integrity and patriotic loyalty of our brethren who have been attacked by One Methodist Voice."

Bishop Moore called the publication a "disturbing influence." He said, "We do not want our church to be the center of the disturbance."

"We told Brother Craft that we might persuade a church to accept him if he would desist from slandering his brethren.

"BROTHER CRAFT," he said, "replied that he must follow his conscience. I said, 'Brother Craft, that is right, follow your conscience. But I did not see how that can be construed to mean continuing to criticize your brethren.'

"He believes he is being persecuted. I stand in your presence and his to say that is not true. We have tried to co-operate with him and to give him an appointment, but he has refused to co-operate."

As the bishop concluded the conferen gave him a rising ovation.

Dr. George S. Mitchell Honored By Catholic Committee of the South

Dr. George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, was honored by the Catholic Committee of the South for "signal contribution to the welfare and progress of the South" on April 24 at a three-day meeting in Richmond, Va. The CCS award, which is given every two years, was presented by the Most Reverend John J. Russell, Bishop of Charleston, S. C. It followed a tribute by Paul D. Williams, a founder of the Catholic Committee of the South and for six years president of the Southern Regional Council.

TEXT OF SCROLL

Dr. Mitchell was given a scroll bearing the following citation:

The Catholic Committee of the South presents its 1953 award to Dr. George Sinclair Mitchell, native Virginian, economist, teacher, administrator, dedicated servant of his Southland, his nation, and his fellow man.

From the beginning of his rich career, he has manifested a deep and selfless devotion to the ideal of a society in which all men and women may find opportunity and justice, dignity and the warm hand of brotherhood.

As a brilliant student and Rhodes scholar, he laid up the store of knowledge which he has applied so fruitfully to the problems of our day.

As Assistant Director of the Farm Security Administration, he put into action programs expressing his deep concern for the needs and aspirations of plain people, and through his skill opened to them the ways to independence and security.

As Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council, he has inspired all of us by the practical example of what the courageous leadership of one man can achieve in lifting the hopes and spirits of the Southern people.

Because of his wisdom and unselfish labor the South has moved closer to the bright future which we all cherish. In testimony of his many accomplishments, we extend to him health and benediction — ad multos annos.

TRIBUTE TO DR. MITCHELL BY PAUL D. WILLIAMS

It has been said that one man of courage is a majority. Dr. George Sinclair Mitchell comes by the virtue of courage gracefully, through a kindly inheritance. His mother was a brave, gracious, blithe spirit. His father, the late Dr. Samuel Chiles Mitchell, was built along heroic lines. He became, even during his lifetime, an institution in the city of Richmond, Virginia.

Formerly the President of the University of Delaware and President of the College of Charleston, the elder Dr. Mitchell chose to spend his last fruitful years as Professor of History at the University of Richmond. Dr. Mitchell's students still breathe his name in hushed reverence whenever they meet, because of his challenge, his original thinking, his ability to make them stir themselves to higher strivings than they thought possible. Freedom was in the blood of Dr. Samuel Chiles Mitchell and freedom was in his very breathing. He had no tolerance for what some people call a respectable mediocrity. He strove to have every man under his tutelage raise himself up to his highest possible level of achievement as a precious person — as, indeed, a man of God.

Dr. George Mitchell is a native of Richmond. He graduated from the University of Richmond with honors, being elected in his senior year to Phi Beta Kappa. From thence he went to Johns Hopkins University, where he received his Ph.D. in economics. Then he was awarded a Rhodes Scholarship, spending three years at Oxford University in England. On his return to America, Dr. Mitchell taught at Columbia University until drafted into government service.

It was in his capacity as Assistant Director of the Farm Security Administration that Dr. Mitchell evidenced a keen concern for the plain people on the land and strove to remove from them the shackles of poverty and bring them to the independence that becomes a man who wants most of all to be free.

DEVOTION TO DUTY

Six years ago, Dr. Mitchell became executive director of the S. R. C. In this office, Dr. Mitchell's greatest asset has been his devotion to duty. General Robert E. Lee once said, "To me the most sublime word in the English dictionary is the word — duty."

The three things that shine forth in Dr. Mitchell's life, at least in my estimation, are his courage, his deep concern for the plain people of the South, and his devotion to duty.

Emerson has said, "Gold and silver are not gifts, they are only excuses for gifts. The only true gift is to give a portion of yourself." In all of his undertakings, Dr. Mitchell has humbly given a liberal portion of himself. That is why the Catholic Committee of the South, representing the Bishops, priests and laity of the Catholic Faith, signals out Dr. Mitchell for special recognition in this year of 1953. Since he has given so generously of himself for the advancement of the South, it is only fitting that we in the Catholic Committee of the South should in return give a portion of ourselves to him in the scroll that soon shall be presented by Bishop Russell of Charleston.

Let it be remembered that the Catholic Committee of the South award has been extended only after the most careful consideration. Among the past recipients have been such personages as the late Dr. George Washington Carver, Dr. Howard W. Odum, Mr. David E. Lilienthal, Mother Katherine Drexel, Archbishop Gerald P. O'Hara, and Dr. Guy B. Johnson.

Words are only words. They cannot possibly bespeak the deep, hidden meaning of the human spirit. What the scroll states is admittedly only feeble. What is left unsaid represents the imperishable meaning of friendship, admiration, and appreciation that all of us in the Catholic Committee of the South feel for a truly superlative gentleman, Dr. George Mitchell — an appreciation expressed perhaps most appropriately in the words of Keats, "Heard melodies are sweet, those unheard are sweeter."

In the homely but manly virtues of courage, deep regard for plain people, devotion to duty are to be found Dr. Mitchell's real stature, and in these virtues he arrives at his high estate of success.

For, after all, what is success? Wealth, fame — these are fleeting. They come and they go like the winds. But true success lies much deeper in the innermost spirit of man. Ruskin has the answer, and in his definition Dr. Mitchell is exemplified:

> "Mighty of mind, mighty of heart, magnanimous — to be this is to be great in life. To be this increasingly is to advance in life. For he only is advancing in life whose blood is growing warmer, whose mind quicker, and whose spirit is entering into living peace — that peace which surpasses all understanding."

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia
(WAlnut 7963)

N

FOR RELEASE SUNDAY, APRIL 11, 1954

(The following statement was issued today by the Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council. A list of the Executive Committee members, as well as the members of the full Board of Directors, is attached.)

We are pleased to announce that the Fund for the Republic has approved a grant of $240,000 to assist the Southern Regional Council's educational program in twelve Southern States for an 18-month period. The Fund for the Republic, which was established by the Ford Foundation in December 1952, is concerned with preserving and extending those individual rights which are the essence of our American heritage. The Southern Regional Council, since its founding in 1944, has expressed that concern as it exists among thoughtful people of both races in the South. As the successor to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, the Council goes back, in experience and good will, to 1919. Its aim is the attainment of equal opportunity for all the people of the South.

Throughout these years the Council, like the Commission before it, has sought to unite the best of Southern thought and leadership, without racial distinctions. It has employed the familiar methods of fact-finding, conference, and persuasion, and has fostered the development of state divisions and affiliates through which its members might work in their respective states and communities. The central office in Atlanta coordinates and services the state groups and individual members throughout the region.

The grant from the Fund for the Republic, together with contributions from other sources, will make possible stronger and more independent state bodies. It is contemplated that each state organization affiliated with the Council shall have its own membership, governing board, and officers. The greater part of the newly available funds will be used to enable the state groups to employ professional staff persons, white and Negro. Thus each Southern state will have a full-time human relations service, available to both public officials and private citizens, maintained and directed by local leadership. The states to be included are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia

The grant of funds is in reality a challenge to the strengthened state bodies to win the local support necessary to become self-sustaining human relations agencies.

The Southern Regional Council proper will now consist of a widely representative board drawn from both races and every state in the region. The Atlanta office will continue to perform fact-finding, information, and coordinating functions.

We believe that this approach is well suited to the human relations needs of the South. It puts major reliance where it belongs--on local responsibility and initiative -- and it gives opportunity for the constructive forces in every Southern state to work effectively.

This pattern has characterized the activities of the Southern Regional Council from the beginning, and with heartening results. It has helped secure the right of Negro citizens to vote without hindrance. It has provided a network of Southern people with the will and the know-how to curb racial tension and violence. It has helped make possible the employment of Negro policemen and other municipal workers in scores of Southern cities. It has spread the example of the self-survey, through which a number of communities have achieved cooperation and progress across the lines of race. It has mobilized church women in a Southwide effort for impartial law enforcement and equal justice in the courts. It has stimulated local groups to study and seek correction of school inequalities. It has made widely known every Southern precedent for the dropping of racial barriers -- in professional associations, higher education, transportation, public libraries, and the like.

The impending Supreme Court decision on public school segregation -- whatever it may be -- will call for all that is best and most responsible in Southern life. Fortunately, there is abundant and growing evidence today of Southern willingness to find positive, democratic solutions to the problems of the region. It is our hope and belief that the Southern Regional Council, through its expanded state services, will make an important contribution to this effort.

The Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council expresses its gratitude to the Fund for the Republic for putting this new strength into the growth of human opportunity in the South.

Dr. Will W. Alexander

Dear Dr. Will:

I inform you of a matter which concerns twenty-five hard years of your lifetime.

Recently we reorganized the space occupied by the Council--knocking out partitions, putting in better lighting, and spreading gay paint around. That brought us to review each cubic foot of file material in the Council's custody. We thought perhaps it would be proper to hand over to the Library of A. U. the files of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, with certain stipulations.

The matter was proposed to the Executive Committee, with President Clement present, and I supply you with the resulting exchange of letters.

Within the next few days the files of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation will, therefore, be carried over to the Library at A. U. and placed in the perpetual care of the library under the conditions stated.

Needless to say, you have our assistance -- as, of course, you will have A. U.'s -- in having access to the files at any time. And while you have never asked for a service of this kind, we do want you to understand that we will gladly dig up for you at any time anything that you feel sure is there and that you will describe to us.

Admiringly,

George S. Mitchell
Executive Director

THE FUND FOR THE REPUBLIC INC.

60 East 42nd Street, New York 17, New York September 26, 1955

Mr. Marion A. Wright, President
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Avenue, NE., Room 432
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Wright:

I am pleased to advise you that the Board of Directors of the Fund for the Republic has approved a grant of $150,000 to the Southern Regional Council, Inc. for the fiscal year October 1, 1955, to September 30, 1956, to support the expansion of the educational work of the Council in twelve southern states, and to strengthen the Central Office in Atlanta.

In our grant letter for the eighteen-month period April 1, 1954, to September 30, 1955, we stated that the grant had been made with the understanding that the Fund,

> "...will consider future grants, on a showing of program accomplishment and ability to raise funds from other sources, of not to exceed $150,000 for the period October 1, 1955 through September 30, 1956; and of not to exceed $110,000 for the period October 1, 1956, through September 30, 1957. This grant carries with it the stipulation that there will be no commitment or intention on the part of the Fund to support the program of the SRC after September 30, 1957."

The present grant is made on the same terms as our first grant. However, we would like to take this opportunity to congratulate you and through you George Mitchell and his staff for the excellent progress made during the first year and a half of operation under the Council's expanded program. We appreciate the many difficulties that have confronted the Council in the past months, particularly in its successful endeavors to reorganize and staff the various state affiliates.

When the time comes for another appraisal of the operations of the Council by this Fund, we will, of course, want to look very closely at the actual accomplishments of the state organizations. We hope that during the next twelve months all the state chapters will build a record of achievement of which this Fund and the Council can be proud.

We look forward to receiving from Mr. Mitchell the same type of excellent quarterly reports he has furnished us during the first eighteen months of our support, and such additional informal progress reports as he may wish to give us.

You are at liberty to publicize this grant should you desire to do so. We would appreciate, however, the opportunity of reviewing a draft of any news release before it is made available to the public.

We have on hand a copy of your tax-exempt ruling under IRC #101 (6) and your statement of February 5, 1954, that the Southern Regional Council has not departed from the terms of the ruling.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia
(WAlnut 7963)

RELEASE MONDAY AM'S OCTOBER 17, 1955

The Fund for the Republic has approved a grant of $150,000 to the Southern Regional Council, Inc., for the fiscal year October 1, 1955, to September 30, 1956. The grant is "to support the expansion of the educational work of the Council in twelve Southern states and to strengthen the Council's central office in Atlanta."

The Southern Regional Council was founded in 1944 to further the attainment of equal opportunity for all people in the South. As the direct successor to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, the Council has a heritage of experience and good will extending back to 1919. The Fund for the Republic, an independent organization established in 1952 by the Ford Foundation, has as its purpose support of "The American principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence and the United States Constitution."

The Council, through the development of affiliated state organizations, seeks to unite the best Southern thought and leadership without racial distinctions. A previous grant of $240,000 from the Fund for the Republic enabled the Council to establish stronger and more independent affiliates in twelve Southern states. The states are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

Each of the twelve state organizations now has professional staff persons, who provide a full-time human relations service available to both public officials and private citizens. The twelve organizations are maintained and directed by local leadership. The program places the major reliance on local responsibility and initiative and gives opportunity for the constructive forces in each Southern state to work effectively.

The regional organization, consisting of a widely representative board drawn from both races in the South, continues to perform fact-finding and informational functions and serves as a coordinating agency for the state organizations. Its headquarters are in Atlanta.

The Council believes there is abundant and growing evidence today of Southern willingness to find positive, democratic solutions to the problems of the region. The Council hopes that, through its expanded program it can make an important contribution to such progress.

Any charges that the Southern Regional Council has Communist connections or is influenced by Communist ideas are poppycock. The Southern Regional Council is made up of reasonable, tolerant, and forward-looking citizens who wish to see the states in the South do a sober, responsible job of accomodating themselves to the changes in the world around us. As to investigations, they are perfectly welcome. We have nothing to hide. All that will result will be red faces for those who set on the investigators.

The Southern Regional Council is made up of some mighty people, who are members of its Board of Directors. Some of them are white and some are Negro. All of them are distinguished for their active and thoughtful careers within the South. What a tragedy for a state attorney general, sworn to uphold the law, to attack one of the few efforts which proceeds within the South to deal truthfully and in mutual respect with the problems which the region confronts! Watch the birdie. Who is proposing conduct subversive of the Constitution and courts of our land?

IN ANSWER TO ATTORNEY EUGENE COOK'S SPEECH OF OCTOBER 19.1965 .
FOR THE GEORGIA PEACE OFFICERS ASSOCIATION.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

GEORGIA COMMITTEE ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION
63 AUBURN AVENUE

For the Attorney General to label the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation a "front" organization is not only ridiculous, but it is a libel on those Georgia leaders he labels as "dupes" and on Georgia officials as well.

True, the Georgia Committee is composed of "some of Georgia's most distinguished clergymen and most prominent civic and social leaders." And it is these same leaders who make up the board of directors and the executive committee of the group. It is these same leaders who plan and direct the policy and program of the Georgia Committee and are sincerely trying to help solve a difficult Southern problem.

The Georgia Committee has a history dating back to 1919. If, as the Attorney General claims, an investigation is being made of the Georgia Committee, why should it come at this time? The answer is obvious when one stops to consider the fact that there are some irresponsible people today who claim the Supreme Court of the United States is under the influence of Communists. Who could better claim the label of subversive -- those who seek to uphold the supreme law of the land or those who seek to circumvent it? The Attorney General is seeking to delay the solution and impugning the motives of those who seek to help work out a solution.

On a monument to the British soldiers who died on King's Mountain, S. C., is this inscription, "They came 3000 miles to keep the past on the throne." There are still those who fight to keep the past on the throne.

The Georgia Committee will welcome any investigation by responsible people. It has nothing to hide.

THE UGLY TRUTH ABOUT THE NAACP
An Address by ATTORNEY GENERAL EUGENE COOK
Before The 55th ANNUAL CONVENTION
Of The
PEACE OFFICERS ASSOCIATION OF GEORGIA
HELD IN ATLANTA
* * * * *

PRESIDENT REDDING, DISTINGUISHED GUESTS AND MY FELLOW MEMBERS OF THE PEACE OFFICERS ASSOCIATION OF GEORGIA:

It is always a source of genuine personal satisfaction for me to have the opportunity of appearing before this group. Of all the organizations to which I have the privilege of belonging, none has accorded me a greater degree of support and cooperation than the Peace Officers Association of Georgia.

This rapport, I feel, is due principally to the fact that we share common professional objectives and personal convictions. As servants of our fellow citizens, we are made acutely aware of the grave responsibility inherent in protecting the rights and liberties of the people through vigorous and impartial enforcement of the law. As individuals charged with this solemn duty, we are able to see more clearly than others the threat to those rights and liberties posed by those who would substitute government by men for government by law.

It is because of your demonstrated discernment in this regard that I have chosen this occasion as the proper forum for revealing, for the first time, the authenticated details of the most ominous of these threats to arise during our lifetime. I refer to the subversive designs behind the current crusade of the misnamed National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and its fellow-traveling fronts to force upon the South the Communist-inspired doctrine of racial integration and amalgamation.

It shall be my purpose in this speech to totally disrobe the NAACP and to present this sinister and subtle organization in all its nakedness.

The ugly truth about the NAACP and its origin, aims and manipulators is so shocking as to stagger the imagination, but it is borne out by incontrovertible facts which can be established as matters of official record. These facts have been uncovered, checked, assembled and correlated through many weeks of intensive investigation and cooperative effort by my Staff and the Staffs of Congressman James C. Davis of Georgia and Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi.

I am prepared to prove everything I shall say. And I wish to state for the benefit of those who undoubtedly will attempt to smear me and discredit my findings and conclusions that I would welcome the opportunity to present the evidence I have in hand for determination before a trial jury in a court of law.

At the outset I wish to make it clear that the issue involved is one not of race but rather of subversion. None of the organizations which have exploited the race issue in this country has ever had the welfare of the negro people at heart. They have seized upon this issue as a convenient front for their more nefarious activities and as one with which they could dupe naive do-gooders, fuzzy-minded intellectuals, misguided clergymen and radical journalists to be their pawns.

The record shows that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was neither founded nor is presently directed by colored people. It was originated in New York City 46 years ago as the brain child of a Southern scallawag journalist and Russian-trained revolutionary named William E. Walling. Its principal personalities during its early years were descendants of the rabble-rousing abolitionists who fomented the strife which precipitated the War Between the States, a conflict which could have been avoided but for the activities of those abolitionists.

Of its five founders only one was a negro -- a Communist-sympathizing lawyer named W. E. B. DuBois whose record of participation in Communist, Communist-front and subversive organizations and activities taken from the files of the Committee on Un-American Activities of the United States House of Representatives requires eight pages of single-spaced, typewritten copy to outline. Among his more recent activities of this nature was the donation of his services in the preparation of legal briefs defending since-executed Communist spies Julius and Ethyl Rosenberg and the imprisoned leaders of the Communist Party of the United States. In 1953 he was awarded the International Peace Prize by the "Communist front" World Peace Council in recognition of his participation in the sponsorship of the series of Communist-dominated World Peace Conferences held since 1949 in an attempt to undermine the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

DuBois was Director of Research for the NAACP until 1949 and now is referred to by its officers and members as the organization's "Honorary Chairman."

In addition to Walling and DuBois, the other NAACP founders -- all white -- were Dr. Henry Moskowitz; Socialist Oswald Garrison Villard, grandson of Abolitionist William Lloyd Garrison; and Miss Mary Ovington White, also a descendant of an old-time abolitionist. The first president of the Association was a white Boston lawyer, Moorfield Storey, who was identified in his youth with the abolitionist movement and who served as secretary to the original race-baiter, Massachusetts Senator Charles Sumner.

From that day to this, South-hating white people with long records of affinity for, affiliation with and participation in Communist, Communist-front, fellow-traveling and subversive organizations, activities and causes have directed and subsidized the NAACP. Its present president, Arthur B. Spingarn of New York City, is a white man as are a large number of the current officers, directors and principal contributors.

The files of the House Un-American Activities Committee reveal records of affiliation with or participation in Communist, Communist-front, fellow-traveling or subversive organizations or activities on the part of the following present officials of the NAACP -- the President, the Chairman of the Board, the "Honorary Chairman," 11 of the 28 Vice Presidents, the Treasurer, 28 of 47 Directors, the Chairman of the National Legal Committee, the Executive Secretary, the Special Counsel, the Assistant Special Counsel, the Southeast Regional Secretary, the West Coast Secretary, the Director of the Washington Bureau, the Director of Public Relations and two Field Secretaries.

The transcript of this evidence numbers 121 pages of single-spaced, typewritten copy and would require more than six hours to be read aloud. Time being a factor, it is impossible to present all of this material; but, to give you an idea of the backgrounds and ideologies of the policy-making officials and personnel of the NAACP, I shall cite chapter and verse on the activities of this organization's principal personalities.

(The designations which I shall use in describing the organizations and activities with which these individuals have been identified are those applied to them by the Attorney General of the United States, the House Un-American Activities Committee or the Special House Un-American Activities Committee.)

President Spingarn was a participant in the Conference on Africa held April 14, 1944, in New York City by the "subversive and Communist" Council on African Affairs. In 1945 and 1946 he signed statements favoring the granting of Army commissions to Communists and opposing the use of injunctions in labor disputes sponsored by the "viciously subversive" National Federation of Constitutional Liberties. He is listed as a sponsor of the "Communist front" Public Use of Arts Committee.

Board Chairman Channing H. Tobias was a member of the Executive Board and Co-Chairman of the New York Committee of the "Communist front" Southern Conference for Human Welfare which was charged in 1947 with "serving the Soviet Union and its subserveient Communist Party in the United States." He belonged, prior to 1949, to the "subversive and Communist" Council on African Affairs and was a member of the Editorial Advisory Board of the "Protestant Digest" -- a magazine which "has faithfully propagated the Communist Party Line." He sponsored the "subversive and Communist" People's Institute of Applied Religion and the American Committee for Yugoslav Relief and was a member of the Executive Board of the American League for Peace and Democracy, "the largest of the Communist-front movements in the United States." He has sponsored confer nces and activities of the "viciously subversive" National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, and the "Communist front" New York State Conference on National Unity and the "subversive and Communist" American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born and the National Committee to Win the Peace.

Roy Wilkins -- successor to the late Walter White as NAACP Executive Secretary -- was quoted on June 17, 1936, by the New York Daily Worker, the official publication of the Communist Party in this country, as attaching "greatest significance" to the 1936 National Communist Party Convention and stating that the Communist Party's racial program had had "a very wholesome effect" in the United States. He was further quoted by the Daily Worker on July 15, 1949, as boasting that he had voted in New York City elections that year for since-convicted Negro Communist Benjamin J. Davis. He is listed as a member of the National Committee of the "Communist front" International Juridical Association which has "actively defended Communists and consistently followed the Communist Party line." He was a sponsor of the "subversive and Communist" Conference on Pan American Democracy and of a joint meeting in 1937 of the "subversive and Communist" American League Against War and Fascism and the "Communist front" American Friends of the Chinese People. He has spoken for the "subversive and Communist" International Labor Defense and the Workers' Alliance, the former of which is regarded as the "legal arm of the Communist Party" in this country.

Special Counsel Thurgood Marshall -- the negro lawyer responsible for the NAACP's court attacks upon segregation in the public schools -- as late as 1950 was a member of the Executive Board of the "Communist front" National Lawyers Guild which has been described as "the foremost legal bulwark of the Communist Party, its front organizations and controlled unions." Since its inception, the Guild "has never failed to rally to the legal defense of the Communist Party and individual members thereof, including known espionage agents." And, as a member and policy-making official of this Communist Front, Marshall has served as Associate Editor of the "Lawyers Guild Review" and has criticized this nation's loyalty program. He also is listed as a member of the National Committee of the "Communist front" International Juridical Association which has "actively defended Communists and consistently followed the Communist Party line." And he was among a group of attorneys who, in 1947, protested the issuance of contempt citations against pro-Communist Hollywood writers who refused to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The director of the NAACP's Washington Bureau, Clarence M. Mitchell, protested against being asked whether he was or ever had been a member of the Communist Party at a hearing on proposed legislation to outlaw the Communist Party held before the House Un-American Activities Committee on May 3, 1950. Although he stoutly denied being a Communist, he was quoted as saying that such a question was "unfair" because it "immediately precludes from appearing before this Committee many of the people who would be on trial under a bill of this kind." The transcript further quoted him as saying that: "Presumably there are people who may, for sincere and personal reasons, wish to be members of the Communist Party. They may want to come here and object to this bill, but, I suppose, if they had to answer that question, they very likely would not come."

Director of Public Relations Henry Lee Moon, the Association's propaganda chief, is listed as a member of the "subversive and Communist" Washington Book Shop and the likewise-designated National Negro Congress which is "the Communist-front movement in the United States among negroes." His book, "Balance of Power: The Negro Vote," was praised by the Daily Worker and he was listed in 1949 as a nominee to be commentator for the "subversive and Communist" Voice of Freedom Committee.

Of the NAACP's 28 Vice Presidents, the following 11 have records of Un-American activities:

John Haynes Holmes, 23 citations; A. Philip Randolph, 20 citations the late Mary McLeod Bethune (who still is listed as a vice president) and William Lloyd Imes, 16 citations each; Oscar Hammerstein, II, the composer, and Bishop W. J. Walls, seven citations each; Ira W. Jayne and L. Pearl Mitchell, two citations each; and Willard S. Townsend, T. G. Nutter and Grace B. Fenderson, one citation each.

Of the 47 members comprising the Association's Board of Directors, the following 28 have records of the Un-American activities:

Earl B. Dickerson, 25 citations; Algernon D. Black, 18 citations; Lewis Gannett, 15 citations; Roscoe Dunjee, 13 citations; S. Ralph Harlow and Chairman Channing H. Tobias, 10 citations each; William H. Hastie, nine citations; Hubert T. Delaney, eight citations; Benjamin E. Mays, president of Atlanta's morehouse College, six citations; Robert G. Weaver, five citations; Buell G. Gallagher, four citations; President Arthur B. Spingarn, Earl G. Harrison, James J. McClendon Ralph Bunche, Allen Knight Chalmers and W. Montague Cobb, three citations each; J. M. Tinsley, Wesley W. Law of Savannah, Ga., Norman Cousins , Z. Alexander Looby, Harry J. Greene and Alfred Baker Lewis, two citations each; and H. Claude Hudson, Carl R. Johnson, A Maceo Smith, James Hinton and Theodore M. Berry, one citation each.

Two other Vice Presidents and three other Directors are well-known apologists for left-wing causes. The two Vice Presidents are Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon and Eric Johnston of the Motion Picture Industry. The three Directors are Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, CIO President Walter Reuther and Senator Herbert H. Lehman of New York.

Other officers of the NAACP with Un-American activity records are:

Lloyd Garrison, chairman, National Legal Committee, five citations; Treasurer Allan Knight Chalmers and Branch Department Director Gloster B. Current, three citations each; Southeast Regional Secretary Ruby Hurley, West Coast Regional Secretary Franklin H. Williams, Field Secretary Madison S. Jones and Assistant Special Counsel Robert L. Carter, two citations each; and Field Secretary Tarea Hall Pittman, one citation.

But of all the NAACP officials and policy-makers listed in the files of the House Un-American Activities Committee, none has a record as notorious as that of W. E. B. DuBois to whom I have previously referred as one of the founders and present "Honorary Chairman" of the Association. No less than 72 citations of Communist, Communist-front and subversive activity are entered against his name -- the latest of which was the statement he issued upon the death of Joseph Stalin reading: "Let all negroes, Jews and foreign-born who have suffered in America from prejudice and intolerance, remember Joseph Stalin."

Yet this same W. E. B. DuBois was one of the "modern scientific authorities" whose writings were accepted by the United States Supreme Court as the basis for its decision of May 17, 1954, prohibiting segregation in the public schools. DuBois contributed to 82 different portions of the book, "An American Dilemma," which was cited in its entirety by the Supreme Court as an authority for its ruling.

And, speaking of that decision, let me emphasize in passing that 15 other contributors to "An American Dilemma" also have lengthy records of pro-Communist activity in the files of the Un-American Activities Committee. The same thing is true of two of the six individual authorities cited by the High Court -- Theodore Brameld and E. Franklin Frazier -- who between them have been members of or identified with 28 organizations declared to be Communist, Communist fronts or Communist dominated.

Another of the six individual authorities cited by the Supreme Court -- K. B. Clark -- was, at the time of the arguments before the Court, on the payroll of the NAACP as a so-called "social-science expert."

These records of individual officials and members of the NAACP are not the only source of proof of the subversive influences on and in that organization.

Elizabeth Dilling reported in her book, "The Red Network," that, during the seven years from 1923 to 1930, the NAACP received some $43,000 from the radical Garland Fund among whose directors were Communists William Z. Foster and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn. She also disclosed that the official report of the Fourth National Convention of the Communist Party of the United States held in 1925 stated that "the Party had penetrated the NAACP."

Official records show that the NAACP has consistently affiliated itself with Communist and left-wing movements.

It was a member of the American Youth for a Free World which was organized in 1942 and, in 1948, was described by the California Un-American Activities Committee as "heavily infiltrated and effectively dominated by the Communist Party." The House Un-American Activities Committee in its 1951 Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications described the AYFW as "a Communist clearing house."

In 1945, the NAACP sent its Branch Department Director, Gloster Current to London as an official delegate representing the Association at the founding of the World Federation of Democratic Youth. This Federation was cited by the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1948 as "part of the Communist International "solar system."

A report made at a meeting of the Communist Party of the United States on July 16, 1946, showed that the NAACP was one of a group of left-wing organizations invited by the National Committee of the Communist Party to a meeting held in Chicago to form a "third party." That report, as detailed on pages 150-51 of the 1947 Report of the House Un-American Activities Committee, lists the NAACP as an active participant in the conference at which the Progressive Citizens of America was formed.

And earlier this month, according to the United Press, the NAACP picketed a hearing on Communist propaganda conducted in Chicago by Senator Eastland for the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

A pamphlet outlining the Program of the Communist Party of the United States, published in September 1954 by New Century Publishers of New York City, made specific reference on Page 22 to a link between the Communist Party and the NAACP. It stated:

"We call upon wage workers, working farmers, the Negro people, small business and professional people, upon the women and the youth, to join hands in a common fight...for the democratic demands of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

Former Negro Communist Foster Williams, Jr., testified before the House Un-American Activities Committee about this matter on June 17, 1954, in Seattle, Wash. He said:

"The Communist Party very sneakily manipulates the negro people for their own purposes..The NAACP has had this trouble."

The racial aims of the Communist Party of the United States and those of the NAACP are virtually identical. The Communist program, as reported in the May 26, 1928, issue of the Daily Worker, calls for :

"Full racial equality.

"Abolition of all laws which result in segregation of negroes.

"Abolition of laws forbidding intermarriage of persons of different races.

"Abolition of all laws and public administration measures which prohibit, or in practice prevent, Negro children from attending general public schools or universities.

"Full and equal admittance of negroes to all waiting rooms, restaurants, hotels and theaters."

Those are the identical demands being made today, 27 years later, by the NAACP.

On the basis of the evidence now in hand -- a minute portion of which I have related to you this afternoon -- no other conclusion can be drawn but that the NAACP is being used as a front and tool by subversive elements in this country. Either knowingly or unwittingly, it has allowed itself to become part and parcel of the Communist conspiracy to overthrow the democratic governments of this nation and its sovereign states.

Through its activities, the NAACP is fomenting strife and discord between the white and negro races in the South and is disrupting relations between these races which heretofore have been -- and at present are -- harmonious and friendly in every respect. These activities, carried to their ultimate conclusion, can only result in conflict, bloodshed and internal revolution, delivering this nation into the hands of international Communism.

The NAACP is being aided and abetted in its agitation by three "front" organizations on the Southern scene -- the Southern Conference Education Fund; the Southern Regional Council; and the SRC's affiliate, the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation. The Southern Conference Education Fund and the Southern Regional Council are both dominated by individuals who, like the officials of the NAACP, have long records of affinity for and participation in Communist, Communist-front, fellow-traveling, left-wing and subversive organizations and activities. Sworn testimony taken by both House and Senate Committees has placed known Communists in both organizations and the Southern Conference Education Fund may soon be designated a subversive organization.

The Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation is a perfect example of an organization formed for the purpose of exploiting the names, reputations and services of well-intentioned do-gooders. It is composed of some of Georgia's most distinguished clergymen and most prominent civic and social leaders who have been duped into doing the bidding of the more sinister elements manipulating the Southern Regional Council.

Investigations currently are being made of all three organizations -- the results of which will greatly embarass those good citizens who unwittingly have become involved in their activities. I urge all such persons to take immediate steps to disassociate themselves from these groups and to disavow their programs and leaders before they, their friends and their congregations are exposed to the anguish and embarrassment which exposure of these groups will necessarily mean.

The activities of the NAACP and its local fronts pose a serious threat to the peace, tranquility, government and way of life of our State. And for that reason it is my intention to present the evidence which already has been, and currently is being, compiled about the subversive nature of these activities to the 1956 session of the General Assembly of Georgia convening next January for appropriate action by the elected representatives of the people of this State.

In the meantime I pledge the full resources of my Office to the enforcement of all existing State laws and constitutional provisions relating to subversive activities and our traditional pattern of race relations. And, toward that end, I solicit -- and know I can count on -- the full support and cooperation of you, the peace officers of Georgia.

I thank you.

THE ATTACK ON

and

THE GEORGIA COMMITTEE ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION

A Brief Statement on the History and Aims of
The Southern Regional Council
October, 1955

THE ATTACK ON FREE OPINION

Last March the Southern Regional Council declared:

"There is presently a concerted attempt by official leadership (in the deep South) to stamp out independent thought and stifle all dissent with respect to school segregation...."

In recent weeks, the attempt to intimidate and silence those who believe in an enlightened, law-abiding approach to race relations has gone into high gear. Georgia's Attorney General Eugene Cook took up the attack in a diatribe aimed mainly at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In the course of his speech, Mr. Cook also attacked the Southern Regional Council and the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation.

The object of this side attack on two constructive Southern organizations was to frighten off the thousands of religious, civic, labor, and business leaders who have joined together to work positively at the South's most urgent problem. It is revealing that, although the work of these two organizations goes back 35 years, Mr. Cook has only now chosen to strike at them.

Every intelligent person will recognize this cynical attack for what it is. Mr. Cook hints darkly at "subversion," "sinister manipulation," and"leftwing associations." There is on the statute books of Georgia a strong law providing severe punishment for anyone guilty of subversive conduct or association. As the chief legal officer of the state, Mr. Cook should be expected to act through the process of law, safeguarding the rights and reputations of good citizens. But Mr. Cook knows his charges are false. Neither the Southern Regional Council nor the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation has ever been listed or accused of disloyalty by the U. S. Attorney General or any other official body. So Mr. Cook must resort to smear and innuendo in the public forum.

This, in brief form, is the story of the Southern Regional Council. Many Southerners may disagree with the Council's point of view. But no fair-minded person, in full possession of the facts will doubt that it is an honest and patriotic organization, responsible in both its methods and its aims.

HOW THE SRC BEGAN

The Southern Regional Council and its predecessor, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, have a history of 35 years of constructive activity. The Commission was founded in 1919 by a group of the South's leading church men and women. Among them were Dr. M. Ashby Jones, prominent Baptist minister, Mr. John J. Eagan, businessman and philanthropist, Dr. Plato Durham, dean of the Emory University Theology School, and Dr. Will W. Alexander, the Commission's director. Its work in behalf of sound race relations was acclaimed by the South's leading newspapers, religious leaders, and by many public officials. It provided a meeting ground where the best people of both races could work together to dispel prejudice, tensions, and violence. It made possible, through persuasion and education, much of the interracial progress of which Southerners today can be justly proud.

Early in the 1940s, leaders in the Southern interracial movement joined together to revitalize their efforts. As a result, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation merged in 1944 with the newly formed Southern Regional Council. The organizing meeting of the Council was held in response to a "call" issued by some of the South's finest leadership, including:

C. H. Gillman, Georgia Director, C.I.O.
George L. Googe, Southern Director, A.F.L.
M. Ashby Jones, Baptist minister
Ryland Knight, Baptist minister
Rabbi David Marx, The Temple, Atlanta
Bishop Arthur J. Moore, The Methodist Church
Ralph McGill, editor, The Atlanta Constitution
Stuart R. Oglesby, Presbyterian minister
Most Rev. Gerald P. O'Hara, Bishop of Savannah-Atlanta
Dean S. Paden, President, King Hardware Company
J. McDowell Richards, President, Columbia Theological Seminary
Bishop John Moore Walker, The Protestant Episcopal Church
Goodrich C. White, President, Emory University

Following the deliberations of this group and a subsequent conference with Southern Negro leaders, the SRC was chartered early in 1944. The incorporators were Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Ralph McGill, Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, and Dr. Howard W. Odum, professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina.

Since this auspicious beginning, the Council's membership has included distinguished Southerners, white and Negro, in all walks of life. Dr. Odum was the first president of the organization. He was succeeded by Paul D. Williams, of Richmond, Va., a prominent Catholic layman and co-founder of the Catholic Committee of the South. Mr. Williams served as president for six years -- from 1945 until 1951. He was succeeded by Mr. Marion A. Wright, widely known as a South Carolina attorney active in civic and educational affairs, now living in Linville Falls, N. C.

The Council's present and past board members number well over 150. The quality of its leadership may be measured by the list of members of the Executive Committee over the past 12 years, appearing on page 9.

HOW SRC WORKS

The Southern Regional Council consists of a board of some 80 Southerners representing the major religious faiths, both races, and the 13 states of the region. The members listed on page 10, are respected residents of their states and their communities. These people are the Southern Regional Council. They make the policies and review all activities at an annual meeting. They elect an Executive Committee which meets at least every three months to give closer direction to the organization. And full reports of all activities are sent to the members quarterly. The Council is non-profit, non-political, and non-denominational.

WHAT SRC HAS DONE

The Council works through the sound methods of education, fact-finding, and persuasion. It seeks no legislation, it carries on no court action, and it uses no "pressure group" tactics. It collects the facts about racial problems and progress in the South and makes these facts available to private citizens and public officials. NEW SOUTH, the Council's monthly publication, has built an unchallenged reputation for reliability and accuracy. Following are some of the areas with which the SRC's educational program has been concerned:

* Employment of Negro policemen in Southern communities.

* Newspaper handling of racial news.

* Community self-surveys, in which local people study their problems as a basis for achieving local solutions.

* Conferences of leading white and Negro Southerners with common concerns and a common desire to further democratic practices in their areas of interest -- health, housing, education, etc.

* Voluntary decisions to open professional associations, private colleges, public libraries, and the like to all qualified persons without respect to race.

* Impartial enforcement of the law and administration of justice in the South.

* Orderly adjustment at the community level to the recent decisions of the Supreme Court holding public school segregation unconstitutional.

AFFILIATED STATE ORGANIZATIONS

With the aid of a grant from the Fund for the Republic, the Southern Regional Council is assisting interracial organizations in 12 Southern states. Each of these organizations has its own membership, officers, and staff. In each case, people of the state involved make their own decisions as to policy and program. Affiliation with the Southern Regional Council is voluntary, and the purpose of the short-term financial aid from SRC is to help the state groups become strong, self-sustaining bodies.

The affiliated organization in Georgia is the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation. The Georgia Committee has a long and distinguished history, having operated continuously since 1919. Its directors and officers include some of Georgia's most respected clergymen, church women, and civic leaders. Its executive director is Dr. Guy H. Wells, President-Emeritus of Georgia State College for Women at Milledgeville. A list of the Georgia Committee's board members appears on page 11. To suggest that people of such intelligence and character would lend themselves to an unworthy cause is insulting to them and absurd on its face.

CHURCH SUPPORT

Church people have always been the moving force in the Southern interracial movement. This is as true today as it was 35 years ago. All of the major religious groups represented in the South have taken their stand in favor of the principle embodied in the Supreme Court's segregation ruling. The court ruling was endorsed by the Southern Baptist Convention, many of the Southern conferences of The Methodist Church, the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, the Province of Sewanee (Southeastern) of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Catholic Bishops of the South, the various Jewish religious and fraternal groups, and virtually all of the other denominations found in the South. It is only natural that many religious Southerners should seek to put the principles of their faith into everyday practice.

The Southern Regional Council and the affiliated state groups have enjoyed both financial and moral support from religious bodies representing the three major faiths.

Dr. George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Council, received the 1953 Annual Award of the Catholic Committee of the South "for his significant contribution to the welfare of the South."

COMMUNISM AND RACE RELATIONS

Those who seek, for political or other reasons, to fan the fires of racial prejudice have set out to brand interracial progress as "communist-inspired." By this means they hope to confuse the public and discredit the growing number of individuals and organizations who believe in equal citizenship for all.

Not only is this phony "anti-communism" vicious; it offends the intelligence of every thinking person. The international communist movement has one, and only one, interest in our racial problems -- that is, to exploit them throughout the world. Some two-thirds of the people of the earth are dark-skinned, and the communists are trying desperately to win them with the claim that our kind of democracy is available only to white persons. If there were no racial discrimination or segregation in this country, the communist movement in Asia and Africa would lack its must effective weapon.

A perfect example of this fact is the reaction of Soviet Russian officialdom to the Supreme Court decision. For days, the government-controlled Russian press made no mention whatever of the decision. When at last they could ignore it no longer, they announced defensively that the decision meant nothing -- that it would never be implemented. This is precisely the argument that Attorney General Cook and his fellow demagogs make so noisily. Unwittingly perhaps, but undeniably, they do a great service to the cause of communism every time they raise their voices on behalf of "white supremacy."

Individuals and organizations that work responsibly and conscientiously for the growth of democracy in the South and the Nation are the opponents that the communists really fear. Yet it is precisely these individuals and organizations that Mr. Cook and his kind seek to defame and discredit. What could please the communists more than to get the credit for every effort to make our American ideal a working, living reality? What could please them more than a campaign to arouse suspicion and hatred of those citizens who work intelligently for a more just, democratic, and Christian society? How they must delight in the irony of such Americans being stigmatized as servants and dupes of the communist cause!

No informed person believes that the communists want to see Negroes accorded equal rights and dignity or that they want to see our racial problems solved through the orderly processes of the law and constructive community action. The communists want to see us hopelessly bogged down in our prejudices and our fears. They want to see us defying the law of the land, whipping up racial hatred for political purposes. In this respect, they have a common purpose with Attorney General Cook and his kind.

TO KEEP OPINION FREE

The Southern Regional Council is a realistic organization. It was organized by Southerners and is run by Southerners who have lived with the problems of our region and know them well. Therefore, the Council recognizes the difficulties inherent in the changes now required of the South. But the people who make up the Council and the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation believe that we can and will -- as, indeed, we must -- make the transition to a society in which citizenship is not qualified by race.

The issue here is not whether everyone can agree with this point of view -- obviously many do not. The issue is whether or not citizens can voice this and other legitimate opinions without suffering abuse at the hands of irresponsible officials.

The answer must be "yes" if we are not to have thought-control in the South. The power of state officials is great, and if misused it is dangerous to all. If any citizens can be penalized for legitimate opinions honestly held, then all citizens can be penalized at the pleasure of a few.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Dr. George S. Mitchell
Southern Regional Council, Incorporated
63 Auburn Avenue, Northeast
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear George:

I have been out of the office for several days and am just getting around to answering your letters of November 18 and 29.

First, I want to approve the employment of John Hope and the payment of $1,000 to the AMA as requested. Hope's salary and job description as stated in your letter are also approved.

Thank you for sending me material dealing with the JOURNAL-AMERICAN smear. I stand ready to join any other offended board members who would like to sue for libel. I am enclosing biographical material as requested.

I made statements to the PITTSBURGH COURIER and to the CHICAGO DEFENDER as follows:

> "I am not now nor have I ever been a Communist or a fellow-traveler. Anyone who alleges otherwise is simply expressing a blatant untruth. I have supported many organizations and movements which were attempting to carry out worthwhile projects. I expect to continue to do this."

With kind regards.

Cordially,

Dear Dr. Mitchell,

I dropped by your office this morning hoping to discuss my case with you.

Mr. Fleming was kind enough to talk with me a few minutes. He gave me the impression that individuals associated with the SRC are inclined to give precedence to their anti-Communist bias over their concern for Constitutional liberties.

In the hope that there are exceptions among your acquaintances, I take the liberty of enclosing a fact sheet on my case which states the questions involved.

I hope you may be willing to assist in spreading the alarm about what is involved in this prosecution.

Sincerely yours,

Junius Scales

It was a pleasure to serve these scholars, and our staff is always ready to be of assistance.

MEMORANDUM July 31, 1964

To: VEJordan

From: LWDunbar

Vernon, we should make a decision about this. I am particularly concerned about the records which Miss Ames has, and what will happen to them after her death. This may require some discussion with Miss Ames, and perhaps Miss Wilkins or I should go up to see her.

This whole matter should be put before the Executive Committee, but not until we have prepared a staff recommendation. I would hope we could have one ready early next year.

Would you please work on this? I would like for you to chair a staff committee to prepare the question for consideration by the Executive Committee. You should, among other things, survey the records we have here, and discuss the matter with Atlanta University. In doing the latter, you could take up the University's interest in receiving the records.

Please ask Ruth Alexander, Montez Albright, and Paul Anthony to serve with you on the staff committee.

Mr. Leslie H. Fishel, Jr.
Director
The State Historical Society of Wisconsin
816 State Street
Madison 6, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. Fishel:

Thank you very much for your inquiry of July 2, 1964. We appreciate a great deal your invitation to deposit the records of the Southern Regional Council with the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

As you may not know, the Southern Regional Council is the successor organization to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. At the time the old Commission went out of existence and the Council was formed, 1944, the records of the Commission were deposited in the library at Atlanta University, and are still there and are occasionally used by scholars. A short time later, another decision was made regarding the rather interesting records dealing with the establishment of the Southern Regional Council. These were given into the personal custody of Miss Jessie Daniel Ames, a central figure in the founding. Miss Ames still has these records at her home in Tryon, North Carolina, and they too are occasionally consulted by others. No decision has been made as to their eventual disposition.

The preservation of records is an important matter, and I am afraid one to which we have not given proper consideration. I suppose we are too busily engaged in the present and the future. But I think we undoubtedly should, at an early time and after appropriate consideration, make some definite plans. These decisions should be made by our Executive Committee, and I intend, in the next few months, to take the matter up with the Committee. I think there is a likelihood that the Committee will believe that the records should be offered to a southern institution which has had some historical association with the Council, perhaps Atlanta University. But I shall certainly present to the Committee your letter, and I am sure that the Committee will be as appreciative as I am of your interest.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

Thank you for sending me a copy of the letter you wrote to Harper's. I am sharing it with other interested officers here.

Incidentally, you may be interested to know that the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial and The Rockefeller Foundation provided a total of $700,000 for general support and special programs of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation between 1922 and 1938, and the General Education Board contributed $51,500 to the Southern Regional Council for support of its interracial activities between 1944 and 1949.

I am glad the Foundation renewed these earlier interests of the several Rockefeller boards.

Article VI, Section 6, to read:

"Assistant Directors. The assistand directors shall work in cooperation with the executive director in the administration of the program and policies of the Council. In the absence or disability of the executive director, one of the assistant directors will be designated by the executive director, or by the executive committee, to perform, temporarily, the duties of executive director.

The Executive Committee discussed in some detail proposed job descriptions for the positions of Assistant Directors and they approved the attached job descriptions for Assistant Director for Information and Research, Assistant Director for Program Planning, and two Assistant Directors for Program Development.

Office Space - Interracial Commission files

After an adjournment for lunch, discussion turned to a proposal to place the files of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, to which the Southern Regional Council is lawful successor, in the custody of the Atlanta University Library, with the stipulation of the right of access to the files by personnel of the Southern Regional Council at times convenient to the library of Atlanta University, and with the provision for review by the Southern Regional Council of proposals for extensive research in the files of the CIC. The Executive Committee agreed that a proposal of this kind might be made to Atlanta University.

The space occupied by the Council at 63 Auburn Ave. then came under consideration. Other possible locations for its now somewhat expended Atlanta office have been explored, but the rent appears prohibitive. No other entirely suitable accommodations seeming to be available, the staff proposed an expenditure of an estimated $1700 be made for remodeling the present space. It was stated that the Council had, on entering the original space at 63 Auburn Ave., made such changes as were suitable then to the Council. The appropriate officials of the Wesley Memorial Building have agreed that the Council might make the desired changes now.

The present rental, plus proportionate parts of the remodeling expenditure, stretched over a three year period, would produce a total expenditure per year less than that budgeted for that purpose in the request to the Fund for the Republic.

Upon motion the proposed renovation of the office, at about $1700. was approved by the Committee.

Procedure for Professional Hiring - After considerable discussion, the Committee, upon motion, appointed a Personnel Committee of the Executive Committee composed of the President of the Council, Marion Wright; the Executive Director, George Mitchell; and the Chairman of the Executive Committee, Rufus E. Clement, to engage and fix salaries of new personnel at the professional level.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Thank you so much for arranging the interview with Mrs. Ames for me. I don't know when I have enjoyed an afternoon so much. She is a most pleasant and gracious person to talk with, and she made me feel so much at home. Words cannot express how much that interview meant to me. Not only was it a gratifying experience, but it also cleared up several questions for me.

Could I trouble you to send me Mrs. Ames' address in Tryon, North Carolina? I would like to write her thanking her for giving me so much of her time.

I was sorry that you were not at the interview, for I did look forward to meeting you as well as Mrs. Ames. I have finished most of my work in Atlanta for the time being, but perhaps when I am again in your city I can stop by your office and personally express my gratitude. You and your staff have been so helpful. Thank you so much. Until that time, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I received your very gracious letter yesterday and of course am quite pleased with its message. I am looking forward to writing this paper very much and am indeed grateful to you for allowing me to use the Association's papers.

The news that Mrs. Ames will be in Atlanta beginning August 8 came as an unexpected, but very pleasant surprise. Of course I would like to meet her and talk with her about the Association. As you say, it would be an invaluable experience for me. If you will arrange an appointment for me to visit Mrs. Ames, I will be muchly indebted to you. Anytime during that week of August 8th will be fine with me.

Once again, thank you very much.

Dear Mr. Barber:

We are pleased to give you our permission to make use of the files of the Southern Regional Council's predecessor, The Commission on Interracial Cooperation, and the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. In fact, we are delighted to know that you are interested in doing this study. I could not agree more that there is a magnificent, untold story here.

Incidentally, Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, who for many years was associated with the Association of Southern Women.... and the Interracial Cooperation, will be visiting in Atlanta beginning the second week of August (Monday, August 8th). I'm sure we can arrange for you to talk with her during that time, and suspect that such a conversation would be invaluable to you. It also may be that Mrs. Ames will have papers and records which she will be willing to share with you.

Anytime you're in Atlanta, please drop by for a visit.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I am a graduate student at the University of Georgia working under Dr, Charles E. Wynes in recent American history. I am currently working toward a Master's Degree.

During the spring quarter of last year I was introduced to the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching in one of my courses and became very interested in this group. I began reading about the Association in books and articles, but found that sources on it were limited. This convinced me that something more should be written about the Association relating its history and its contributions to the eradication of the crime of lynching.

I understand that the papers and correspondence of the A. S. W. P. L. have been deposited in the Trevor Arnett Library of Atlanta University by the Southern Regional Council. With your permission as director of the Council, I would like very much to use these papers and write a history of this woman's group as my Master's thesis. I feel that such a study will be a significant contribution to American history and assure you that it will be done with the utmost respect and admiration for Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, the Association's director, and her fellow workers.

I will be very happy to answer any questions you might have concerning this proposed study. Also, my directing professor Dr. Wynes is most willing to discuss it with you. He may be contacted through the history department of the University of Georgia.

I will be eagerly awaiting your reply and hoping that it carries your permission to use the A. S. W. P. L. papers. Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

Dear Dr. Anthony:

Some time ago, I communicated with Mr. Miles M. Jackson, Jr., Chief Librarian of Atlanta University, about using the filesof the Southern Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation. I am presently working on the Scottsboro Case for my doctoral dissertation here at the University of North Carolina. I am not even sure that I will be using the material in the files of the Southern Commission, but Mr. Jackson suggested that I would have to receive written permission from you in case I decided to do so.

I told him that I didn't think that would present any difficulties: I have been a member of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations for a number of years. And besides, I don't think your organization has been very restrictive about the use of the Southern Commission papers.

If you should need me to fill out any other forms, I would be glad to do so. Or if you should need any other information about my research project, I would be glad to furnish a research outline which I submitted to my examination committee.

Very truly yours,

From: MMJ

Bernice,

We're starting all over again with Prof. Holli. Please let's get to him every piece we've produced for as far back as you can go -- including a complete set of New South (for as far back as possible). Included in this mailing should also be a copy of every Executive Director's reports as we have on hand.

Paul has suggested that we ship periodically (that is, as soon as you have enough stuff together that can go parcel post), and not wait to collect one big bundle of stuff.

Thanks, MMJ

We should begin on this today.

(Two labels are herewith attached -- let me know when you're ready to make more shipments and I'll make more labels.)

Mailed 10/26/66 (Second Shipment)

The Trevor Arnett Library of Atlanta University is the official repository of SRC records and materials. During this year, if we can find the funds, we hope to work out a substantially better system than we have had in the past for our records. I hope this will include the use of microfilm and a much better system here at the Council for forwarding materials to the University Library. It is entirely possible should we do this that we can provide you with copies of the microfilm. Certainly we can provide you with a large selection of our publica-

Again we are grateful for your interest.

President

Dear Sir:

The University of Illinois at Chicago Circle has recently begun a major search for manuscript materials in Negro and urban history. Thus far we have received commitments for the papers of several organizations including the Chicago Urban League. Such collections will make it possible for scholars to research and write about the full scope of activity of the civil rights movement.

We should very much like to establish here a Southern Regional Conference collection covering all phases of the Conference's work to improve conditions for the Negro. Hopefully, such a collection might consist of retired correspondence files, scrapbooks, memoirs, minutes, reports, studies and other printed or manuscript materials.

The University of Illinois has made a profound commitment in the direction of Negro and urban studies. We offer courses in Negro History and one of our staff members, Professor Gilbert Osofsky, is about to publish two significant books, one a history of Harlem and the other a textbook to be used for courses in Negro History. We are also encouraging research and have a scholar who is about to publish a book on the Chicago Urban League.

I am certain that these three very important studies represent but the first installment of a new and vigorous scholarly interest in the Negro in America. However, we need basic source materials such as the papers and records of the Southern Regional Conference to bring this program to full fruition.

We hope that you will be favorably disposed toward considering the University of Illinois as a permanent archive for your records. I would be pleased to discuss any of the details of our document preservation program with you at your convenience.

If the Southern Regional Conference is so disposed the University of Illinois could send staff members to your Atlanta office to arrange for the transfer of such records to Chicago.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I have intended to write you for some time now to extend my congratulations on your recent appointment as Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council. The University Library of Atlanta University has had through the years a very pleasant cooperative relationship with the Council and we look forward to strengthening this relationship in the future.

Several years ago, the Council sent files for several interracial organizations to be deposited in our Library and we have considered them very unique collections of data on interracial affairs in the South. From time to time, we have let researchers make use of these materials. Recently, it has been brought to my attention by Dr. Annette Phinazee, who is our Special Services Librarian, that we have nothing in writing from the Council regarding stipulations, if any, for interested researchers. In other words, it is her impression and mine that permission must first be received from your office before we allow researchers to make use of the materials. Is this correct? It is also our understanding that these files were not actually donated to us, but deposited here for safe keeping. Am I correct on this? We are willing to follow whatever the Council stipulates.

It is my hope that we can interest you in continuing to deposit with us files from the Council. I say this because space is always a problem, but we do have sufficient space in the area where the other files you sent us are kept. We assure you that any materials sent us will be protected and treated just as all of our research materials.

With every good wish to you, I am

Sincerely yours,

November 29, 1967

Dear Mr. Anthony:

On one of Ed Stanfield's visits here during last summer I talked with him concerning some information I need that may be in the files of the Southern Regional Council and he suggested that I write the Office concerning the same.

During the fall of 1943-44- or 1945 as a reporter for The Dallas Express, The Informer and Associated Negro Press I went to a small West Texas Town near the border of New Mexico and in the vicinity of Lubock, Texas to investigate and get a story on a Negro (stranger in the Town) who went berserk and killed three white people on the streets one day. The only transportation in or out of the city (mass transportation) was one bus. Negroes in the Town became frightened and began leaving town as signs appeared in crude letters Nigger Don't Let the Sun Go Down. I spent two days and one night in the town. The Sheriff, who was the Judge and the School Superintendent hid the Negro in the basement of the Court House and late one afternoon came out and told the Town people he was dead and had the Negro brought out under the guise of a corpse put on a wagon and carried out of town- and he was quickly transferred alive to another jail. Charles Bynum sent the News Story to the Interracial Commission in Atlanta and this Sherriff was given an Award by the Commission.

I would like to receive a Xerox copy of the News Story or Award letters or any information in the files on the story. My files were destroyed in a fire ten years ago. The files of the Dallas Express and The Informer Chain were not being kept at that time and back copies are not available . If the Interracial Commission files are not in the possession of the Council could you give me a lead. Could you quote me a fee for the services rendered?

I am a Founder(one of the founders) and a Charter Member of the Houston Council on Human Relations.

Yours truly,

Dear Mr. Lawson:

While our unpublished papers relative to voting during the period 1944-65 are far more disorganized than we would like, you are more than welcome to use any of our materials.

The authors of the book, Climbing Jacobs Ladder, Pat Watters and Reese Cleghorn, are on the staff here. John Lewis, who was chairman of SNCC during the days that that organization was most involved in voter registration, is also on our staff. I believe you would profit from talking with these gentlemen.

Incidentally, Harold C. Fleming, President, Potomac Institute, Inc., 1501 - 18th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., was on the Council staff beginning in 1946 and served as its director until the late 60's. On his staff at the Potomac Institute is Mrs. Margaret Price who did much of our earlier research in this area. You might want also to talk with these two people.

Sincerely,

Dear Sir:

I am a graduate student at Columbia University working on my doctoral dissertation concerning the expansion of Negro voting rights, 1944-1965. Prof. William E. Leuchtenburg of the Department of History is sponsoring this project. Since the Southern Regional Council played an important role in this struggle, especially fighting the poll tax and coordinating voter registration drives, I will be exploring its efforts. In order to do so in an historical and scholarly manner it would be enormously valuable if I could examine the Council's unpublished papers. Thus, I would like to know if the Council might provide me the opportunity to carry out such research at your office.

I am grateful for any assistance you can offer, and I look forward to your reply. Thank you.

Yours truly,

Dear Mr. Anthony,

I am extremely grateful that you have given me permission to do research in your unpublished papers on voting rights, 1944-1965. At present, I do not know when I will be able to come down to Atlanta and begin the research. When I make my final plans I will let you know a few weeks in advance of when I will be arriving. I also would like to thank you for informing me about the presence of Pat Watters, Reese Cleghorn, and John Lewis in the Council. I would very much like to interview them, especially Mr. Lewis about his activities with SNCC.

Once again, thank you for this important opportunity. I will look forward to seeing you in the near future.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Dr. Anthony:

I am writing to request permission to do research in the papers of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, housed at the Trevor Arnett Library at Atlanta University.

I am presently under contract to the Louisiana State University Press for a book-length study on the efforts of the NAACP to secure federal legislation against lynching and mob violence, during the period from 1909 into the mid-1950's. I have been awarded an ACLS Grant-in-Aid to complete the project, and I should begin writing in about two months. I am currently scheduled to be in Atlanta in mid-April, and I should like to have permission to use the papers during that visit.

For your convenience I am enclosing a recent professional resume. If you need any additional information, please feel free to call upon me.

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

The University of Southern Mississippi Library is trying to collect and preserve for history the records and documents pertaining to the Civil Rights movement. It is interested in collecting all sides of the issue, and sincerely hopes that you will allow your records to join the collection.

I am a black student at USM, and the library has asked me to contact you when I am in Atlanta on December 31 to January 3 to answer what questions you may have, and to explain in fuller detail just what the program is about.

Please write me at Box 217, Schlater, Mississippi 38952, or call me at Area Code 601 658-4818 (collect), and let me know at what time it would be most convenient to see you.

Enclosed is a plan of the USM Library. Until the proposed new Archives building is built, the records will be safely stored in the Twentieth Century Social History room.

Your consideration in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

MEMORANDUM FOR ATLANTA CONTINUING COMMITTEE:

We are gathered together here in solemn assembly, conscious of our heritage and opportunity. In the name and spirit of America and of all her resources and institutions we covenant together in harmony and unanimity to make this day, or what this day should bring to pass, epochal in a new purpose, and new understanding, and a new fellowship.

In the name and spirit of America's science and education we seek to find and to tell the truth. In the name and spirit of America's democracy we seek the way of equal opportunity. In the name of America's patriotism, we strive for loyalty to the American dream, for leadership to guide, and for statemanship adequate to carry the burden of the new America. In the name and spirit of America's Christianity, we search for the new faith of fellowship. In the name of humanity, we propose to substitute the measures of the good society for the old biological struggle for physical survival. In the name and spirit of all these and the living reality of a complex world, we dedicate ourselves to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

Four ways there are, and perhaps more, of approaching these laudable and attainable ends. First, we agree upon a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better ordering of our society. We recognize fully that in the present crisis this covenant is as important as the earlier compacts of the forefathers, and that the framework within which we covenant together must comprehend a concept and a charter which guarantees equality of opportunity for all people. This means more specifically as bearing upon the burden of our present counseling that the Negro in the United States and in every region is entitled to and should have every guarantee of equal opportunity that every other citizen of the United States has within the framework of the American democratic system of government.

Second, we dedicate ourselves unswervingly to the successful achievement of this task. Since in the order of all nature and creation and of the growth and development of the people and society, there are always certain features peculiar to each society; since in the order of democracy there are certain elemental principles of self-government that are inherent in each folk and regional society; and since in both the physical and cultural heritage of the South there are certain cumulative and tragic handicaps that represent powerful factors in the situation, we appeal to the Nation, in covenant with the South, to exercise a wisdom and maturity through which methods, procedures, and rates of change may be worked out in the spirit of, and in conformity with, the principles of our American democracy.

Third, to the end that there will be actual realistic accomplishments rather than mere words and that there may be possible ways and means of actually insuring progress in all approaches to these goals of equal opportunity, we urge the South to pool its efforts and set up a strong, unified, Southern Regional Council, constituted of representatives of both races and of private and public groups. Such a council, in subscribing to the new declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all other available agencies and individuals in private and in public life and especially with a similar national group when established.

Fourth, since the crisis is not only southern but national, not only for whites but for Negroes and other races as well, and since the central purpose of the new council is cooperation and the building of active good will, we urge the formation of a National Committee on race and regional development, constituted of representatives of all races and of public and private groups. Such a committee, subscribing to the declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all available agencies and individuals in private and public life.

We recognize the sweep and power of the emotions in time of war and crisis and the rights and tendencies in the democratic way of life for thousands of individuals and groups to agitate, organize, and promote their own peculiar programs. This is and must be the essence of a democracy. But it is also the way of democracy to focus upon fundamentals and to give opportunity to responsible leadership through the orderly agencies of governmenment and of private citizens. To this end no greater service can be rendered to the Nation than to covenant together in responsible organizations, to provide leadership and clearing house, and to avoid conflicts, waste and overlapping, on the one hand, and, on the other, to minimize the harmful influence of irresponsible forces in this great hour of need for good will and for effective ways of doing what is needed. We feel that in these councils may be approximated needs more nearly than in any other ways that now appear.

The Nation is committed now to what is generally called, both in private business and in public life, post-war planning to the end that we may be ready for the demobilization and reintegration of our millions of returning soldiers into the best possible American way of life. Recognizing that the problems of the folk and of race constitute a more difficult problem than that of physical planning, by the same token we urge all the more the obligation to apply to this great area of our democracy the best the sciences, social sciences, the humanities, and religion can do in the realistic working out of next steps.

To this end, the present membership of the Continuation Committees of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences is hereby constituted the nucleus of the new Council; and the officers are authorized (1) to take immediate steps for the legal incorporation of the Council; (2) to appoint immediately the necessary staff personnel to implement this program, and (3) to enlarge the present membership in order to make it fully representative of all the interests encompassed by this program.

It is also respectfully urged that the President of the United States appoint a National Committee such as is suggested above.

Re: the old SRC records, including the ones now stored at AU and more recent old records now stored at SRC

We recommend that a resolution be submitted at the next meeting of the Executive Committee, outlining the following procedure:

1. That the Executive Committee take action immediately to officially designate Atlanta University as the recipient of the old SRC records now stored there and such records now stored at SRC as would be found useful to a complete history of SRC. The above action should be contingent upon the willingness of Atlanta University to become the official recipient of these records with all that this implies in cataloging and making them readily available to scholars, historians, etc.

2. That Pat Watters, or another appropriate person, immediately proceed to North Carolina for the purpose of tape recording Mrs. Ames account of the formation of the SRC and any other reminiscences about the old Commission on Interracial Cooperation, the Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, etc., and that this person discuss with Mrs. Ames the disposition of any other recored in her possession.

   Further, that this same procedure be followed with other early founders and members of SRC, e. g., Dr. Hancock, Josephine Wilkins, Rufus Clements, Ralph McGill, Bishop Moore and any others now available.

   These tape recording would be considered a part of the total SRC records mentioned above for Atlanta University.

3. That some appropriate person from SRC or from the Atlanta University Library go to Chapel Hill to look at the material on SRC given to the University of North Carolina. Such examination would include any papers given by Mrs. Ames, Howard Odum, Guy Johnson, Rupert Vance and others. This person would then initiate discussion with the University of North Carolina on how copies of any materials of special interest might be gotten to Atlanta University for inclusion with the other records.

MINUTES

Board of Directors
Atlanta Committee on Women's Interracial Activities

The Board of Directors of the Atlanta Committee on Women's Interracial Activities held its regular monthly meeting Nov. 11, 1930, at 409 Palmer Bldg.

The work of each sub-committee of the Atlanta Committee was discussed and reports on sub-committee activities made:

(1) Training School for Colored Girls - Chairmen: Mrs. Louis J. Elsas
Mrs. J. H. Wheeler

This committee is cooperating with the Atlanta Federation of Colored Women's Clubs in raising, through the Negro clubs, Atlanta's quota of $250 toward a building fund for the Training School for Colored Girls. The state must raise $2,500 by Jan. 1, 1931, for the Training School in order to receive a gift of equal amount ($2,500) from an anonymous donor. The Negro women of the state have already purchased a 10 acre lot for the School near Macon. Once work is begun on the plant an effort will be made to turn the Training School over to the State for public support.

(2) Committee on Education - Chairmen: Mrs. E. Marvin Underwood
Mrs. M. T. Norris

At present this committee has three projects: a survey of rural school conditions (white and colored) of Fulton County; the securing of a higher salary scale for Negro teachers of Fulton County when the 1931 school budget is made; and securing a portable school building in a congested Negro area of Atlanta where there are insufficient schoolroom facilities for the colored children.

(3) Committee on General Cultivation - Chairmen: Mrs. W. Frank Smith
Mrs. John Hope

The organizing of the Speakers' Bureau is occupying the attention of this committee at present. Speakers are being enlisted who can present the aims and methods of interracial cooperation from the points of view of the religious, educational, patriotic, judicial, and welfare organizations convening in the city. Places will be secured for these speakers on programs of the organizations. A complete calendar of meetings of city, district, state, southwide, or national scope to be held in Atlanta in 1931 will be compiled by this committee.

(4) Committee on Institutions - Chairmen: Mrs. J. Houston Johnston
Mrs. A. D. Howard

The reorganization of the teaching program of the Fulton County Reformatory for Negro boys is a project of the Committee on Institutions.

(5) Committee on Housing Conditions - Chairmen: Mrs. W. A. Albright
Mrs. Ida B. Hill

This committee is gathering complete information about housing ordinances of other cities prohibiting the renting of property not reaching certain minimum standards. With this information in hand the committee will approach the proper city officials in regard to an Atlanta housing ordinance. Th committee is familiarizing itself with housing conditions in the Negro residential areas of Atlanta.

(2) Minutes - Bd. of Directors
At. Com. Wom. Inter.Act. Nov. 11, '30

(6) Committee on Hospitals and Health - Chairmen: Mrs. B. L. Bugg
Mrs. Ludie Andrews

An investigation of the denominational hospitals of the city with the idea of securing Negro wards in them, is an immediate project of the Committee on Hospitals and Health. Cooperating with the Red Cross, the committee is also aiding in procuring a ward for colored children at the Battle Hill tuberculosis sanatorium.

RACIAL ATTITUDES TEST

Race Relations Seminar, Atlanta Committee on Women's Interracial Activities
March 10, 1931

DIRECTIONS

Read the statement following the Roman numeral carefully. Then read the possible solutions to the situation, numbered 1, 2, 3, etc. In the left hand margin renumber the solutions according to their value, truthfulness, and correct application to the problem. Number the best solution (1), the second best (2), and so on until all the solutions have been numbered according to their worth. Follow the same procedure for each of the five principal statements.

I. In a community of twenty thousand inhabitants there are fifteen thousand whites and five thousand Negroes, a ratio of 3 whites to one Negro. Bonds are being floated for new public school buildings, the bond issue for $90,000. Both white and colored children are now attending school in old, weatherbeaten frame houses lacking in beauty, freedom from fire hazards, and any of the modern conveniences found in up-to-date school buildings. Conditions in the Negro schools are worse than those in the white school, as, has been the case in many communities, the oldest white school buildings had been turned over to the Negroes after they became too bad for the white children to be educated in.

( ) 1. One-third of the bond issue $30,000 should be used in buildings and equipment for the Negro children. The citizens of the community should allow this amount to the Negroes for philanthropic reasons, expecting no return from the money invested in this way, but considering the proportion of Negroes in the community - one-third of the total population - one third of the money for schools should be spent for Negro children.

( ) 2. Nothing should go to the Negro school children. These children cannot appreciate beautiful school surroundings: brick buildings, landscaped grounds, and modern equipment, such as would be bought with money raised by floating the bonds.

( ) 3. The $90,000 should be spent in proportion to the need, disregarding color of the school child entirely. Since some of the buildings now used for the white children can be remodeled and be quite as satisfactory as new buildings on the same sites, and none of the Negro schools can be made over but all will have to be razed and new ones erected, in order to supply the same facilities to both white and colored children slightly more than one-third of the proposed bond issue would be required for the Negro schools. However, this would be a good investment of the money, and the way in which the best returns would result.

II. There is a bill before the State Legislature to create and maintain a Training School for Colored Girls.

( ) 1. The State now owns and operates a Training School for white girls which has proved quite successful in caring for girls between the ages of eight and twenty-one picked up on the streets, accused of petty crimes, guilty of vice or living in houses or associating with persons of immoral fame. In the Training School these girls are taught vocational trades that they might be prepared to make a decent living, upon their release; they are given moral training and religious education. If this procedure has proved successful for white girls, the same type of institution would be the best way of handling Negro girls guilty of crimes similar to those for which white girls are sent to the Training School.

( ) 2. Negro girls are inherently, innately, immoral. To attempt to teach them to live upright, moral, lives would be a waste of the State's funds. As the girls would be dismissed at the age of twenty-One, or before that age be dismissed on probation, they would immediately return to their old vices.

III. The larger Negro universities are adding special schools for training for Negro leadership in the fields of law, medicine, education, etc.

( ) 1. There is a dead-level plane above which the Negro cannot pass in education of the specialized type. The Negro doctor can never become as efficient as a white doctor, the Negro lawyer can never think through a case as clearly as a white lawyer would do in the same instance, and Negro college professors will always be inferior to white college trained men. Therefore, we should train additional white leaders for the Negroes and educate the Negroes to follow, as wisely as possible, but not for positions of leadership in their own race.

( ) 2. A Negro doctor, given the same training that a white doctor enjoys, will be as efficient as the white doctor. There is no excuse for our not allowing the ambitious Negro to advance as far as he wishes, just as we offer the ambitious white every opportunity for leadership in the professional fields. To educate leaders for Negroes from their own race will benefit both whites and Negroes; it will give the Negro self-confidence and confidence in the ability of his race for achievement; it will make for greater racial purity, a thing desired by both races.

( ) 3. The Negro will not follow leaders of his race after they are trained for places of leadership. The Negro prefers to follow a "poor white" than a well trained, capable, leader of his own people. Since this is true, there is no use in training leaders who will have no following, doctors who will have no patients, lawyers who will have no cases, teachers who will find no schools.

( ) 4. We have not given the Negro a chance to see whether he will trust the leadership of his own race. It would be a good investment to train, as efficiently as we train white leaders, a group of the most ambitious and intelligent Negroes and give them an opportunity for leadership among their race.

IV. In a city in Georgia two petitions for extension of the water and sewer lines are before the City Council. One is a request for water and sewerage connections in a new subdivision for whites that is being opened, and the second is from the only Negro residential area of the city.

( ) 1. The Negro does not need as great sanitation and sanitary precaution as the white. In some manner dirt, filth, and exposure to disease germs do not affect the Negro. Because of long years of living without sanitation the Negro has become immune to diseases caused by lack of sanitation, and having become accustomed to habits of uncleanliness he prefers to remain in this state, content.

( ) 2. The Negro should have available for residence a part of the town in which there are water and sewerage. To deprive him of these common facilities is inexcusable. Common decency demands that the city make some arrangement for water supply and sanitation when a part of the community is set aside for his residence.

( ) 3. As most of the Negro women in this community are employed in the homes of white people, the health of the white families is endangered if the Negro women are exposed to disease in their own homes because of lack of sanitary protection and precaution. Any diseases which they might contract would go immediately into many of the white homes of the city; therefore, every effort should be made to give the Negroes opportunity for health in the way of an inspected water supply and in sewerage connections.

V. A large percentage of employed Negro women and girls are in domestic service, employed as cooks, maids, and house-girls.

( ) 1. Because there are few openings for the untrained Negro woman and girl who must work that her income, supplementing that of the man of the house, will enable her and their children to live, any wage the white woman wishes to pay for the services of the Negro woman will be acceptable. Since the Negro woman will work all day for a wage that she can hardly subsist on, because she must often work for this or go without work, the white woman is right in paying as little as possible for domestic help, and requiring as long hours as she desires of the "colored help."

( ) 2. The home and family life of the Negro woman is just as important to her as the home and family of the white woman is important in the life of the white woman. Since this is true, the white woman is in a position to know that the Negro mother working out all day, with children at home, needs some time each day with her children while they are awake. The employer who requires her servant to arrive early in the morning before the Negro woman's children have gotten up, and who keeps the servant late at night until after her children have gone to bed, is unjust to the Negro woman, though she is violating no law.

( ) 3. We are in need of an eight-hour-day law for women, white and Negro. Such a law would prohibit any woman from working more than eight hours a day, and more than six days a week.

( ) 4. Special training in cooking, house cleaning, buying of food, and other household duties should be taught in the Negro schools, in preparation for domestic service. When the Negro girls and women are better prepared to efficiently carry out their duties in the home, they can demand better salaries and shorter hours. Until that time, we are justified in present wages and long hours.

( ) 5. Since most white women employing Negro servants prefer to train them after they have been employed, it would be a waste of time and money to offer courses in household arts in the Negro public schools. Then, too, the trained Negro will demand more, and we wish to continue to make our own salary scale with no limit on the working day and week for those Negroes we employ.

Mrs. H. H. Hirsch, Chairman, invites you to tea

Friday, March 13,

4:30 o'clock

at the home of Mrs. E. Marvin Underwood

21 Avery Drive

Atlanta, Georgia

GENERAL CULTIVATION

One of the primary functions of the local Committee on Women's Interracial Activities is to educate Atlanta leaders and populace, both white and Negro, regarding conditions of health and hospitalization in the city, care of Atlanta's indigent and dependent, penal institution operation and management, housing conditions and school facilities, and to disseminate information and form discussion groups concerned with problems of legal justice and social rights of the Negro citizen.

The series of race relations seminars was one means of educating a group of invited white women. Outstanding Negro and white speakers led the discussion of topics of world wide, Southern, and local interest. For six consecutive Tuesday mornings the group of women met at a local church to concentrate for two hours on matters of race relations and racial justice.

For the first time in Atlanta, Interracial Sunday was observed with a special service at a white church, with both white and Negro speakers on the program; music furnished by Negro and white choirs.

As one phase of its general cultivation program, a tea was given by the Board of Directors of the Atlanta Committee on Women's Interracial Activities to the presidents, or other official representatives, of the civic organizations of women in Atlanta. The work of the Atlanta Committee, and particularly the set up of the Speakers Bureau, was explained to the group present.

PROGRAM OF WORK

It is recommended that the Atlanta Committee on Women's Interracial Activities:

I. Endorse the program of the general Commission on rural schools and cooperate by studying rural school conditions in Fulton County.

II. Assist the Federation of the Colored Women's Clubs thro the special committee appointed by the State Committee in securing an appropriation for a State Training School for Colored Girls.

III. Endorse a Negro hospital for Atlanta and pledge cooperation thro the Atlanta Committee on Health with existing or specially created agencies working to secure such an institution. Special recognition is given to the untiring efforts of the Junior Red Cross to build a ward for Tubercular Negro children.

Believing that there is a sufficiently intimate relation between juvenile delinquency and the administration of law, it is recommended that:

A. and B. The committee on Institutional Provisions for Children be asked to direct the committee's activities in affairs affecting law observance and legal protection, not only for children but adults.

In view of the fact that it has been several years since any special consideration has been given school and housing problems, it is recommended that the Board of Directors:

C. and D. Direct its attention to having made a personal study by members of the Committee of housing and community conditions of Negro citizens and that a similar personal study be made of Negro schools in Atlanta.

Loving and Hating in the Bible

[Reprinted from The Southwestern Christian Advocate]

THE full strength of these words as they are used in the Bible has been lost by missing their meaning. We take them to mean more than they mean in one direction, and in this way we lose the force of their meaning in the intended direction. We take them to mean too much in the direction of sentiment, or even sentimentality; we miss their force in the direction of fact and act. In one sense love and hate can not be commanded; in another sense they can be.

I

What is Loving an Enemy?

IT WOULD be a gain if we would try to clear up in our minds the different shades of meanings which the one word "love" is made to serve. When we are told to love our neighbors as we love ourselves, and to love our enemies, manifestly the meaning of love is not romantic or affectionate or parental or filial. Many words are difficult, that is, they are mere attempts, the best we can do, to express the idea. It is so with the word love.

In the great thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians our King James translation uses the word charity, and the more recent translations have substituted the word love. Charity is better. Of course, it does not mean charity in the sense of giving a dime to a beggar. It means being kind and unselfish, free from envy and jealousy, not rejoicing in injustice, but welcoming the truth and not detraction in regard to our neighbors and even our enemies.

As used in the Bible in sentences like loving our neighbors and enemies, the word love carries a combination of justice and kindness, with thinking and doing justice as the basis. It is the spirit of practical good-will. Whatever of sentiment may precede or follow it, justice is the foundation of satisfactory relations. How easily and conventionally we use the words brotherhood of man, and loving one's neighbor, without thinking of the ABC of justice. Justice is something practical, has its feet on the ground.

Our translation of the New Testament, in several outstanding passages, does not use the word justice where this is really the actual translation. For example, it is, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his justice." And in St. Paul's definition of the kingdom of heaven he says, it is "Justice and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." When our King James translation was made, righteousness meant primarily rightness or justice. The Catholic translation does in fact use the word justice in these passages.

It is worth while to dwell on this thought, because the basis of satisfactory relations amongst men must be justice. There must be justice before the law, justice in our thoughts, justice in our dealings. This applies to individuals, to governments, and to races. Dr. Washington once said that the best Southern speech on race relations he ever heard was made by a certain governor who began by saying that he laid no particular claim to a sentiment of love for Negroes, but he believed in justice. This is different from the sentiment that still hovers around the ghost of the "old black mammy." However fine and even beautiful such sentiment may be, we see the difference. In the ordinary relations of life justice is the staple. But, of course, we need kindness and mercy to supplement justice. There must always be Good Samaritans.

Does not the wonderful, often quoted verse in the book of the Prophet Micah cover the whole ground? It is in the Old Testament, but it is a Christian verse. "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Here we have the whole matter beautifully knit together—justice, mercy, and reverent obedience to the will of Him who is Father of all.

II

What is Hating Your Mother?

IN THE twenty-sixth verse of the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Luke, it reads: "If any man come to me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he can not be my disciple." Now it is perfectly evident what our Lord means. He means, of course, that in following Him there may arise some occasion when everything has to give way and a man must take issue with, and perhaps separate himself from, even his mother. I personally knew such a case. The young man's integrity of conscience was at stake, loyalty to his vision of justice was at stake, his every sense of right was at stake. His attitude of opposition wounded his mother deeply, but he was right. Had the mother lived longer, she would have acknowledged that he was right.

This seems to me to illustrate what Christ meant. He was not thinking of sentiment. At no time did the young man hate his mother—that is, in the sense in which we ordinarily use the word hate. On the contrary, he was all the time deeply distressed at her distress, and perhaps loved her more than ever, just as Christ loved people whom He knew to be in the wrong.

The fact is that the word hate, like the word love, is made to serve a number of meanings for which we might well wish that distinct words had been available. In some sense neither hate nor love implies sentiment. In a sermon preached several years ago one of the ablest theologians and preachers of the English Church said outright: "Love is not sentiment." He was, of course, speaking of the word as used in most passages of the New Testament.

So when our Lord spoke about hating father and mother, it was not "sentiment" that He had in mind. The young man mentioned above never for a moment had the "sentiment of hate" for his mother. What he was about was not hating his mother in this sense, but following the will of God. In the New Testament love generally means just this, namely, being and doing in accordance with the will of God; and hate means opposition to what is against the will of God. So loving an enemy means being and doing toward him as God would have us be and do, under any and all circumstances; that is, forgiving and ready to help.

In thinking about neighbors and enemies we have to remember that God cares about one person just the same as about any other. He expects us to think and act toward all others as we would wish them to act toward ourselves. This is the statement of a fact. There is no "sentiment" about it, any more than our Lord was thinking of the sentimental side when He said that under certain circumstances a man must hate his father or mother.

We ought always to use judgment in our reading of the Bible. I do not mean that there is any requirement of great learning and high intellect, but there is requirement of common sense. We sometimes destroy the very force and power of the words by putting into them the tone of sentimentality when they are tremendous statements of fact or sledge-hammer commands. One of these sledge-hammer commands is, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. When we think of its great meaning, we see that it is no impossible command, but an absolute rule for right relations between man and man.

Mr. Henry Ware
Standard Building
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Ware:

On January 6, 1944, the Southern Regional Council was chartered by the State of Georgia. Its purpose is stated in the charter as " . . . the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South, in the endeavor to promote a greater unity in the South in all efforts toward regional and racial development; to attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region; to reduce race tension, the basis of racial tension, racial misunderstanding, and racial distrust; to develop and integrate leadership in the South on new levels of regional development and fellowship; and to cooperate with local, state, and regional agencies on all levels in the attainment of the desired objectives."

The charter meeting of the Council was held in Atlanta on February 16-17, at which time directors were elected and by-laws and a program of action were adopted.

We are very sorry to find that through some inadvertence you did not receive an invitation to charter membership and, therefore, did not attend the recent meeting. At this time, however, we are inviting you to become a charter member of the Council, which will hold its first annual meeting in October 1944. We trust that you will accept election and will give the Council your enthusiastic support, and we hope that we may have your early reply.

Cordially yours,

GUY B. JOHNSON

July 31, 1944

Some time ago we wrote you and invited you to accept charter membership in the Southern Regional Council. Perhaps our letter did not reach you, or perhaps you have meant to reply and have been too busy to do so.

The enclosed pamphlet, "The Southern Regional Council - Its Origin and Purpose," will give you the sort of information which you might like to have before deciding whether to accept membership in the Council.

The Southern Regional Council is an organization composed of liberal-minded Southerners, white and Negro, who believe that the South needs a more positive and courageous approach to its social, civic, economic, and racial problems. The strength of the Council is derived from its members, who determine its policies and its program of action. It is therefore imperative that the Council have the whole-hearted support of a large number of progressive people throughout the South.

We should like very much to enroll you as an active member of the Council. Dues are at present only one dollar a year, but additional contributions are, of course, welcome. Whether your answer is affirmative or negative, won't you please check the appropriate items on the enclosed blank and return it to us?

Sincerely yours,

As you probably know, the Southern Regional Council, which was an outgrowth of the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond Conferences, was chartered by the State of Georgia on January 6, 1944. Its purpose, as set forth in the charter, is "...the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South, in the endeavor to promote a greater unity in the South in all efforts toward regional and racial development; to attain through research and action programs the ideals of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region; to reduce race tension, racial misunderstanding, and racial distrust; and to cooperate with local, state, and regional agencies on all levels in the attainment of the desired objectives."

The Incorporators of the Council designated as charter members all persons who took part in one or more of the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond Conferences and all members of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. At the organization meeting, which was held in Atlanta on February 16-17, these members voted to extend the privilege of charter membership to all persons who signed the Statement issued by the Atlanta Conference of white leaders on April 8, 1943. As a signer of the Atlanta Statement, you are invited to accept charter membership in the Council.

The structure of the Southern Regional Council is democratic. It is governed by its members. It has a Board of Directors of fifty and an Executive Committee of seven plus the elected officers. The officers of the Council are: President- Howard W. Odum; Vice presidents- P. B. Young, Homer P. Rainey, and Carter Wesley. The members and Board of Directors will meet annually in Atlanta on the second Wednesday in October. Members will pay dues, and the amount of dues for the current year has been set at $1.00.

In these critical times, and particularly in the post-war days that lie ahead, it is imperative that liberal and progressive people in the South stand together for a constructive approach to the civic, economic, and racial problems of the South. The Southern Regional Council can be a great force for good in the South if it has the wholehearted support of a large group of members who represent the leadership of both races. We trust that you will accept charter membership and will give the Council your enthusiastic support. A reply form is enclosed for your convenience in indicating your decision.

With best wishes, I am

With these we are including the September issue of THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER and single copies of several pamphlets which we hope will be helpful to you in leading your discussion group. Two of the pamphlets are publications of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, which merged with the Southern Regional Council early this year.

The Council has two classes of membership: Voting members, persons who live within the Council's area (thirteen Southern states) and who subscribe to the aims and purposes of the organization as set forth in the charter; Associates, persons living outside this area who are interested in the organization and wish to keep in touch with the work by receiving our literature. My dear Miss Clay:

Thank you for your letter of the 16th in which you give me permission to quote from Understanding Our Neighbors.

I am very sorry that typographical errors occurred in the material which I sent you. Obviously they will be corrected.

In your letter you suggested that I drop out "want social equality" and substitute for it "wish to invade the social life of white people". If it is agreeable to you, I would much prefer to use the complete sentence as it is stated on page 29 of your pamphlet, Understanding Our Neighbors, which is as follows:

> "8. That Negroes want social equality - that they wish to invade the social life of white people...."

I shall be pleased to receive a copy of the pamphlet, The Southern Regional Council, Its Origin and Purpose. I am much interested in this whole problem, and want to keep up with the most recent developments in the field.

Dear Mrs. Spight:

The Commission on Interracial Cooperation, to which your letter of November 20 was addressed, merged with the Southern Regional Council in February of this year.

We are glad to have your check for $2.25, covering renewal of the nine subscriptions to THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER which were listed in your letter.

It occurs to us that you and the other persons on your list might be interested in becoming members of the Council. We are, therefore, sending you herewith a copy of our pamphlet THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, ITS ORIGIN AND PURPOSE, which will acquaint you with the background and program of the organization. With this we are including membership-application cards, which we shall be glad to have filled in and returned by anyone who wishes to have his name presented to the Membership Committee. The next meeting of the Committee will be held on December 5.

In the case of the Urban League, our by-laws provide for the affiliation of "organized groups or agencies whose aims and methods are, in whole or in substantial part, similar to the aims and methods of the Southern Regional Council."

Individual membership dues for the current year are $1.00, while the amount of dues for an Affiliate is $2.50. In either case, of course, credit will be given for the FRONTIER subscriptions which you have sent us, since members of the Council are entitled to all publications of the organization.

Dear Mrs. Yeatman:

We are delighted to know of your interest in the Southern Regional Council. As requested, we are sending under separate cover a number of pamphlets, with several issues of our monthly paper THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER, which we hope will be helpful to you in your work in the Fourth Province. Since I, too, am an Episcopalian, I am especially anxious to have the women of the Province cooperate with us in this important work.

You are, no doubt, already acquainted with the purpose of the Council. In the pamphlet entitled THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, ITS ORIGIN AND PURPOSE, however, you will find a brief statement concerning its program, and the December issue of the FRONTIER tells something of our plans for 1945.

The Council believes that now as never before the people of the South must mobilize their spiritual and intellectual resources in the interest of constructive social change. It needs the cooperation of a large number of representative citizens throughout the South. We hope very much that you will be interested in becoming a member of the Council and that you will return the enclosed membership application card, authorizing us to add your name to our roll. We shall be glad to apply as dues the $1.00 which you sent for the literature, since members are entitled to our pamphlets, as well as the FRONTIER.

We are very glad, indeed, that you are planning to attend the meeting of women which Dr. Johnson has called, and we shall reserve a room for you at the Piedmont Hotel as requested.

We shall look forward to the pleasure of meeting you but, in the meantime, we hope that you will accept membership in the Council.

Dear Miss Clay -

Enclosed please find a check for one dollar ($1.00) for any publications from the Southern Regional Council that will be of value to me, as Representative on the Department of Christian Social Relations, in the Fourth Province.

My son, J. P. Yeatman, now 'overseas' for over two years, was working towards his Doctor's Degree, at the University of North Carolina, under Dr. Howard Odum, and, through him, I have been greatly interested in the work of the Southern Regional Council.

I shall appreciate greatly anything you may send me.

Very sincerely,
(Mrs. J. P.) Mary H. Yeatman
Provincial Representative Dept. Christian Social Relations

In cooperation with the war effort the Mid-South Conference of The Rural Department of N. E. A. will not convene in Atlanta, Georgia on February 1, 2, 3.

Perhaps a streamlined conference may be arranged for at a later date.

Members of the Georgia organization may expect a letter concerning the activities of that group soon.

Dear Mr. Johnson,

Under the other set-up of the Interracial Commission of Atlanta, my name was on their mailing list. I have been informed that the publication of pamphlets from time to time will be under the Southern Regional Council. But I am sending in my name as one who is interested in news of your interracial work and should like to be kept on your mailing list.

Thanks much for such consideration.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Dr. Johnson:

A few days ago while talking with you in Jackson, Mississippi I suggested that we would like to have any regular printed matter sent out from your office that would be of help to our Local Committee on Inter-racial Cooperation. I wish you would please put our name on your mailing list. Such matter can, at present, be addressed to Mr. Emmett Ward, Merchants Bank Building, Vicksburg, Mississippi.

I am anxious to be kept on your mailing list for the clip sheet, and I told my friend, Mr. Farrar Shelton, Farmville, Virginia, that I would ask you to add his name to the list. He is doing some thoughtful and effective work in trying to improve racial understanding in Farmville.

I am glad to learn through various persons who attended the Atlanta meeting in February that the council is getting off to a very promising start.

Dear Mrs. Yeatman:

Enclosed herewith is our check for $18.11 to reimburse you for expenses incurred in connection with your trip to Atlanta for the conference on February 2. We were glad that you could be present, and we trust that the meeting will result in our having a closer working relationship with you and other church women in positions of leadership in the South.

We had hoped that you would return the membership application card, authorizing us to enroll you as a member of the Southern Regional Council. Thinking that you may have overlooked the card, I am sending another one herewith. We shall be happy to have you accept membership in the Council, especially in view of your official position in the Episcopal Church in this Province. May we hear from you soon?

It was a pleasure to meet you, and I shall look forward to seeing you again.

Dear Miss Clay -

The idea of having church women, of different denominations, from many Southern States, to meet together, and discuss the problems, confronting them now, and in the Post-war days, was indeed a splendid one.

It was indeed a pleasure and a privilege to be one of that group, and I am grateful for the opportunity of being present, to hear all its deliberations, at the meeting at the Piedmont Hotel, on February the second.

I shall do what I can to have us the Christian Social Relations Secretaries in the Fourth Province, all ~~that~~ I learned, at that fine meeting.

I appreciate greatly all that you did for me, while I was in Atlanta. I hope to have the pleasure of seeing you, again, in the near future.

Warm regards for you and Dr. Johnson, and best wishes for your work.

Dear Miss Williams:

Your card addressed to the Interracial Commission has been delivered to this office, since the Commission merged with the Southern Regional Council at its charter meeting last year.

According to the records kept at Tuskegee Institute, there were two lynchings during 1944. I am attaching clippings which give some of the details.

We regret that we do not have for distribution the material about Dr. George Washington Carver which you are seeking. If you will write to the Carver Foundation at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, I am sure that you can get it.

We are interested in hearing that you are developing another "Unit—The Negro." The one which you prepared a few years ago has been helpful to us in answering inquiries from persons who are working on units of study. We hope that you will let us know when the new one is completed, and we shall be glad to hear from you if we can be of assistance in any way.

I am sending you herewith a copy of the revised edition of the pamphlet AMERICA'S TENTH MAN, which was distributed originally by the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. With this is included a copy of THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, ITS ORIGIN AND PURPOSE, as well as a leaflet telling of the program for 1945 which was adopted at our annual meeting in December.

The Council believes that now as never before the people of the South must mobilize their spiritual and intellectual resources in the interest of constructive social change. It needs the cooperation of a large number of representative citizens throughout the South. We hope that you will be interested in becoming a member of the Council, and we are enclosing a membership application card, which we shall be glad to have you fill in and return to us. As a member you will, of course, receive our monthly publication THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER, a copy of which is included with the pamphlets, and all other materials issued by the Council.

We shall look forward to hearing from you.

Dear Mr. Strozier:

As a signer of the Atlanta Statement, which was in reply to the Durham Statement issued by a group of Southern Negroes in October 1942, you were invited to become a member of the Southern Regional Council and to attend its charter meeting in February of last year. We have just learned through Mr. A. C. Robinson, who is now associated with our organization, that you did not receive the letter. We regret this very much, and we should like to renew the invitation at this time.

The enclosed pamphlet and leaflet will tell you something of the background and program of the Council. In its effort to promote "the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South," the Council needs the cooperation of a large number of representative citizens throughout the South. We hope, therefore, that you will be interested in becoming a member and that you will return the enclosed card authorizing us to enroll you.

Members of the Council receive the monthly publication, THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER, and all pamphlets issued by the organization. The annual dues are only $1.00, but members are asked to make an additional contribution to the current budget if possible.

We shall look forward to hearing from you.

Dear Mrs. Yeatman:

Your recent letter, asking what would be expected of you as a member of the Southern Regional Council, should have had an earlier reply.

As a member, you might be called upon from time to time for information concerning situations that might arise in your state or community. Then, we should hope that you would find it possible to extend the Council's program through your work with the Department of Christian Social Relations, and perhaps through other organizations of which you are a member. I am sure that you would not find the duties of membership arduous.

In view of the fact that the Synod of the Fourth Province voted last October to "commend to the attention and active cooperation of the various Departments of Christian Social Relations the work of the Southern Regional Council," we should be especially glad to have you accept membership, which would give us a closer working relationship. To save you the trouble of looking up the membership card, I am enclosing another one herewith, and I hope that you will decide to fill it in and return it to us.

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

By Leslie W. Dunbar

The Southern Regional Council

By Leslie W. Dunbar

Abstract: The Southern Regional Council evolved from the Commission on Interracial Co-operation formed in 1919. Shaped by and shaping Southern history, it has reflected whatever has been best in Southern ideals, taking its present structure in war-year (1944) optimism and declaring against segregation in 1951. Odum's founding vision sought to solve the South's racial problems through a commanding regional body's oblique attack on underlying stresses—economic, social, political—but events early forced the Council to focus on race solely. Disruption of traditional racial patterns by the civil rights movement may now allow a shift in emphasis from human relations to human resources. Commitment combined with objectivity has been the hallmark of publications and information services. The council comprises a co-optative board of 100, which directs policy, and a staff. Autonomous but in close liaison are state Councils on Human Relations which have general membership. Because the Council is noncompetitive and has enjoyed trust, it frequently administers programs through and with other agencies. Flexible and unencumbered by restraining policies, the Council looks to embody a future South of constructive dialogue and cultivation of resources.

Leslie W. Dunbar, Ph.D., Atlanta, Georgia, has taught at Cornell University, Smith College, and Mt. Holyoke College. He worked for the Atomic Energy Commission, 1951–1954, and was a Guggenheim Fellow, 1954–1955. He was Director of Research for the Southern Regional Council from 1954 to 1961 and has been Executive Director of that organization since 1961. He has contributed articles to various journals and magazines.

THE Southern Regional Council (SRC), twenty years old in 1964 and successor organization to the former Commission on Interracial Co-operation begun in 1919, has been an indigenous strand of Southern history. In some measure, which others must estimate, it has also helped shape that history. Contrary to the view widely held, a concern for racial justice and democracy has always been an element of the Southern tradition, and, even when ineffective and hard-pressed, was never altogether extinguished among the region's whites. The Council has embodied and increased this element, deriving strength and opportunities from its growth, shortcomings from its vicissitudes.

FORMATION

The Council was formed during the war years, at one of those occasional moments in the region's history when there was a widespread opening of the mind of the white South to a disposition toward, and even a hope for, change. Indeed, without this happy climate the Council would not, perhaps could not, have been established. But a large part of the Council's difficulties since have had their origin in the same happy fact. For the Council was intended by its founders to be a body of commanding regional stature and authority; indeed, the prominence of a large number of the 292 white persons who signed the "Atlanta Statement" of 1943 promised that it would be. This founding assumption withered quickly, however, as the liberal moment passed and prestigious names deserted the infant they had helped birth, and as over the South Negroes turned to the more immediately productive leadership of the NAACP lawyers to advance their cause. When the Council in 1951 took an explicit and public stand against segregation, many—but not all!—remaining whites of power quietly departed. In the last few years, there has been a return, not of the same persons, of course, but of new men of prominence, and the white side of Council membership again approximates in distinction the Negro membership.

If it may seem passing strange for an employee of the Council to write in these detached terms of it, the explanation is at once both simple and basic. For the Council, as was said before, is a part of the South's history, and one must look at it not only with love but with realism. The Council never had nor has a realistic chance to be anything more than the South at its best. It can never exceed—though of course it can fall short of—its environment of men and ideals and intelligence.

AIMS AND METHODS

The intellectual midwife of the Southern Regional Council was Howard W. Odum, who saw in its creation the possibility of an immense catalyst furthering his dream of regional development. True to Odum's view that the racial relations of the South could not be changed and perfected by a frontal assault, but only by encountering and solving them in the context of the other political, social, educational, and economic problems of the region, the Council set out in its early days with all these interests. Very soon, however, its program focused on race, and has stayed there. Odum's great strategy was artificial; race so undercuts and overhangs every Southern problem that none can be rationally treated without first wresting it from enslavement to a debilitating system of race relations. Somewhat paradoxically, Odum's strategy may now, twenty years later, be the road for continued usefulness of the Council.

Again, this is said with the detachment that sees the Council not merely as an organization to which one has grown deeply attached and identified, but as the representative of liberalism in the Southern region. The civil rights movement will have overcome the old race relations of the South for but unsatisfying results if the same energy and intelligence are not soon addressed to making the political, social, and economic life of the region—and the nation—adequately responsive to the needs of the newly emancipated people; this is to say that emphasis must shift from the cultivation of human relations to the cultivation of human resources.

Even in the boldness of its first days, the Council proposed as its methods research, information, and interracial dialogue. Essentially, these are still the methods. Especially since 1951, when the Council publicized its stand against segregation, its research and information work has been faced with an interesting challenge. Thoroughly committed to one side of the era's most bitter controversy, the Council has, nevertheless, claimed objectivity and factual accuracy for its research publications and information services. Combining partisan commitment and objectivity is sufficiently rare as to be a delight for those who attempt it, and the steady growth of attention to the Council's publications and the rather dizzying increase of demand on its information services suggest that the attempt has not failed.

Early publications of the Council had an impressive circulation. Among them, such pamphlets as The South: America's Opportunity Number One (1945); Rupert B. Vance, Wanted: The South's Future for the Nation, with an introduction by Governor Ellis Arnall of Georgia (1946); and Dorothy Dickens' Wanted: A Healthy South (1946) reveal something of the initial thrust of the Council. Among the many publications of this pre-1954 period, another which had wide attention and direct influence on Southern practices was Race in the News (1950). The Council has always had a basic interest in limitations on suffrage, and has reported and commented frequently. Two pamphlets in particular, released in 1957 and 1959, and both written by Margaret Price, had substantial impact on the legislative history of the civil rights acts. The Federal Executive and Civil Rights (1961) received careful attention by the incoming Kennedy Administration. George McMillan's Racial Violence and Law Enforcement (1960) has been widely used in Southern police training. Vivian W. Henderson, The Economic Status of Negroes (1963) and Robert Coles, The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study (1963) offered light and bearing on basic issues. Many of the Council's recent publications have sought to interpret confused events to a perplexed but deeply concerned nation; an example of these was Howard Zinn's Albany: A Study in National Responsibility (1962). With caution, SRC has ventured into book publication; to date, there have been Benjamin Muse, Virginia's Massive Resistance (Indiana University Press, 1961); Muse, Ten Years of Prelude (Viking, 1964); and James McBride Dabbs, Who Speaks For the South? (Funk and Wagnalls, 1964). Through the years, a monthly magazine, New South, has come out.

THE COUNCILS ON HUMAN RELATIONS

In 1954, the Council ceased being a membership organization in the usual sense. Originally, it had absorbed and maintained several state groups created under the guidance of its predecessor, the former Commission. Now it was to decentralize, establishing in the various Southern states Councils on Human Relations, to which all membership was transferred and which, about 1957, became legally autonomous bodies. The Southern Regional Council is now a cooptative body of about 100 members.

Between it and the state Councils on Human Relations the relationship that has developed is somewhat like that between parents and their adult children: as intimate as desired, but not binding. The state councils are an expression of the "grass roots" philosophy of one of my predecessors, the late and much beloved Dr. George S. Mitchell. They, and their many local chapters, give strength, outreach, and a capacity for local attentiveness and action. It is within them that the old, and still firmly held, belief in the essentiality of interracial contact and dialogue and co-operative action on real problems is today largely expressed.

The present stucture has also had the unintended beneficial consequence that, freed from the exigencies of a mass membership, SRC has during these years of tension been able to move, usually quietly but generally freely and effectively—one believes—in field work of many kinds. There have also been unending consultations with people well outside the orbit of civil rights movement; during these years, the much lamented breakdown of communication between the races has not been nearly so real as that between the white South and the rest of the nation, and SRC has been one of the few open transmission lines.

A not so beneficial consequence has been that the new structure almost inevitably yielded, as a by-product, a heavily staff-oriented operation for SRC. This has enabled SRC to develop an unusual degree of flexibility of program and versatile staff skills; but surely long-run interests, not only of the organization but of the liberalism which it expresses for the South, require that the SRC lay membership—"the board"—resume active policy direction. Or, to put it differently, in the days of "massive resistance," when only defense strategies were possible, they were probably best left to the professionals; in the fluid and progressive present, lay leadership all over the South must assert itself in behalf of the new opportunities.

This is not to say that the "board" is idle. Its members comprise a very large chunk of the progressive leadership of the South, active in all fields of struggle and reform. But for the most part the conspicuous leadership they supply is outside the program activities of the Council itself. They greatly strengthen that program, however, and not only by the weight of their names. At least as important is the base they give to SRC's strategic contacts and influences throughout the region, and the deeper dimensions they give to the staff's understanding of events and policies by their frequent informal reports.

There seems to be a growing intellectual awareness throughout the nation that some measure of conflict, even a large one at times, is indispensable to social reform. Yet concurrently, we have the emergence and growth of the new profession of "intergroup relations," which has always, even though sometimes unacknowledged, the aim of minimizing if not preventing conflict, and of containing it whenever loosed. Another paradox is that the most radical wing of the civil rights movement has a thorough intellectual devotion—almost obsession—to a fuzzy "power structure" theory of social control and change, surely almost the purest of conservative theories.

THE VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

Undoubtedly a good bit of SRC's work, both in the field and at the writing desk, in the decade since 1954 has sought to minimize conflict and to reach the "power structure." More in keeping with the founding vision of SRC has been the program which since early 1962 has been its largest; that is, the administration of the Voter Education

Project. Here is a combined effort by all the principal civil rights groups and many local Negro organizations to increase voter registration dramatically and, in decisive places, decisively. The Project, which will close its field work in late 1964, promises to telescope into a couple of years the voting growth which by normal trends would have taken a decade or more. Voting is no panacea and registration even less so, but without them there is no progress at all.

From the Project, SRC will draw and publish research findings, directed at the question of the effectiveness of organized activity to counterbalance depressing socioeconomic conditions. But for the present, the Project can illustrate another facet of the SRC program. Only because SRC is a noncompetitive and generally trusted agency has it been able to administer the Voter Education Project. In other ways too numerous to list, a great deal of SRC's activities involve co-operation with other agencies.

THE FUTURE

As the Voter Education Project is loyal to SRC's founding hopes, so too is the state Council on Human Relations movement. The ties between the state groups and SRC are today drawing steadily closer, and nearly everywhere the state groups and their local chapters are stronger than they have ever been. How they may prosper in the future depends chiefly on two questions. Can they shift from being defensive bands, waging a brave fight against hostile racists, to the role of creative artisans, contributing to an intelligent and humane cultivation of all the human resources of the region? Will white and Negro liberals of the South continue to find a biracial association a valued instrument for achieving their interests?

SRC's own future depends also on these same questions. We shall have the rule of civil rights in the South, but only the bold would today predict whether we shall also have an integrated social order. We stand a better chance of building one if Negroes and whites continue to believe that it is worth-while to join and work with each other, with a candor which embraces their separate identities and their common interests. The Council has taken pride in being a useful organization, free of restraining strategies and versatile enough to meet many issues. For the future, how the Council may evolve depends, as it always has, on the configuration of Southern society.

Talked with Dr. Johnson today concerning vacations. Each person has two weeks vacation per year. Up to now, there has been no policy about holidays, when they fall within a vacation period. We discussed Miss Kirby's vacation which is from August 27 to September 10th during which period Labor Day falls.

Dr. Johnson stated it was agreeable to him to let this holiday not count as a part of her vacation. Therefore, she will have an extra day to add on to her vacation.

It is my understanding that on the following holidays the office of the Southern Regional Council is closed.

1. New Year's Day
2. Independence Day
3. Labor Day
4. Thanksgiving Day
5. Christmas Day

Miss Clay tells me that the office has closed for a half day on Christmas Eve, but that this is not a permanent practice.

If the above information is correct I should like to add it to a file in which I am compiling all information on office policies, working toward the beginnings of an office manual.

Re: Central Calendar

As some of you may have already noticed, we have hanging on the wall in the main office a large calendar which has enough space under each date for writing in scheduled meetings and events.

This calendar is for the convenience and use of the entire staff, and all happenings such as the following should be posted:

1. All SRC meetings, such as:
   (a) Board meetings
   (b) Annual meetings
   (c) Executive Committee meetings
   (d) Meetings of other committees
2. Any meetings sponsored by the SRC, such as the Rural Health Conference to be held on the 13th and 14th.
3. Any local community events — conventions, institutes, and meetings of general interest.
4. National or regional meetings which might be of interest to the staff or members of the Council.
5. Any information which will serve as a reminder to the entire staff -- such as posting the name of the stenographer on duty on Saturday mornings, deadline dates for special projects, etc.

The stenographers, in sending out the notices of the SRC meetings, will post those dates on the calendar, but they will not be able to catch dates of all important local, regional, and national meetings. All members of the staff are asked to inform Miss Martin of any meetings or events which should be posted on the calendar.

Thank you for your cooperation.

MEMORANDUM

To: Mrs. Inez B. Tillison

From: Jane Martin

If agreeable with office schedule, I should like to take one day of my annual leave on November 23, the day following the office holiday for Thanksgiving, November 22.

I should also like to return to the office at one o'clock on December 26, if permissible, so that I will not have to travel on Christmas day from Athens to Atlanta. Since I am due an afternoon off for work on Saturday morning, December 1, I should like to ask for special permission to exchange the morning of December 26 for this Saturday morning's work rather than the regularly scheduled Friday afternoon off of the week following December 1.

It would be helpful to have a memorandum about the SRC policy on the accumulation of annual leave, i.e., whether it accumulates from the day of employment with SRC or from the day of last vacation.

Some questions have come up recently concerning capitalization of such words as south, southern, state, federal, etc. So that we may be consistent in the use of capitals, I am suggesting that we follow these rules, some of which I have taken from The Secretary's Handbook by Traintor and Monro and from Modern Grammar at Work by Watts.

Names of points of the compass (north, south, etc.) are capitalized when they denote a region. Example: The South needs industrialization.

Such nouns are not capitalized when they indicate a direction - as: Turn north when you reach the bridge.

Capitalize southern, northern, etc. when used as part of proper names to designate a world division; do not capitalize such words when used to indicate parts of states. Examples: Northern Italy western New York
Western Asia southern Florida

Such words as southern, northern, etc. are not usually capitalized when merely descriptive in character such as: eastern fashions, etc. but for our use in Council letters, and etc., I am suggesting that whenever the word southern is used to express a quality or characteristic of the South, ~~that~~ the word southern be capitalized. (This would apply to eastern, northern, and western also). Examples: Southern economy Southern farmers
Southern politics Southern States
Southern customs Southern leadership

However, do not capitalize the word southern, when used in a general way, such as: southern part of the state follow the southern route

Always capitalize nouns referring to the inhabitants of different sections of the country: Southerner, Northerner, etc.

The word state is capitalized when used with a name of a state or when used in the place of the name: State departments, State rights, State of Florida, etc.

Do not capitalize government when referring to that of a state in the United States. Capitalize government when used synonymously with the U. S. Government or when referring to that of a foreign nation. As:

a Government official the Italian Government

Capitalize Federal when referring to the U. S. Government or Constitution. Examples:

the Federal Government
the Federal Constitution
Federal laws

In titles of books, magazines, and articles, it is conventional to capitalize the first word and all other words except prepositions containing less than four letters. A preposition of less than four letters is capitalized also if it stands last in the title.

Quotation marks are used to enclose titles of articles in magazines, poems, lectures, etc.; for titles of books italics are preferred. Titles of books, magazines, and newspapers should be underlined to denote italics.

From: Inez B. Tillison

While you were out of town yesterday I had a chance to discuss with Miss Clay and Miss Kerby the routine for handling SRC Membership dues. I made the following notes concerning the present procedure:

1. Money for membership dues usually comes in with the membership card signed by the member (Card # 1 attached). Miss Clay opens the mail, and makes a typed notation of the money received for bookkeeping records (as is done for all money coming in for literature, etc.)
2. A receipt is written in longhand either by Miss Clay or Miss Kerby. The first copy is sent to the member and a carbon kept for the file.
3. A letter is usually sent with the receipt, sometimes a form letter by Miss Kerby, and sometimes a special letter written by Miss Clay. See copies of form letters attached--one to those members who join and send regular dues, the other to those members who made a contribution.
4. The payment is then entered on the blue dues card (Card #2 attached). If the new member is one who has been previously invited, a blue card will already be in the file box of those invited to membership. In that case, the card is removed from that box, the address checked, the amount posted, and it is filed in the alphabetical file of SRC members. If there is no card in the "invited" box, then one is typed, the amount posted, and the card filed. This posting is sometimes done by Miss Clay sometimes by Miss Kerby.

5. The payment is then posted to the looseleaf book record of dues and contributions. There are several of these books and they are kept in Miss Clay's office. Each page has a name, address, amount of dues and contributions, and the date; the blue card shows the date invited to membership, the date accepted, and comments, in addition to the information in the book.

6. Miss Kerby cuts the stencils for the addressing machine. Stencils for SRC members are blue and are filed in the cabinet alphabetically by states.

7. The following cards are made from the stencil:

   (a) One for the alphabetical SRC list
   (b) One for the geographical card list
   (c) One for the board list (if the member is a board member)

8. Miss Kerby then files cards:

   (a) The card which has been returned signed by the member, or in case of renewal, the white card which has been returned. This file box is on Miss Clay's desk.
   (b) The blue dues card in metal card box which is on Miss Clay's radiator.
   (c) The cards which have been run from the stencils in cardboard boxes in the cabinets under the stencils.

The above procedure also applies to Associate Members. The same procedure is used with the following exceptions:

   (1) The word "Associate" is written on the blue dues card and in the looseleaf book record of dues and contributions.
   (2) Stencils for associate members are cut on orange stencils, and filed separate from the regular members.
   (3) The card list of associate members is filed alphabetically.

Note re: Fellows, Since they do not pay for their membership, Fellows are not included in the file of blue dues cards nor in the looseleaf record of dues. Stencils for Fellows are red and are filed in a separate place in the stencil cabinet from general SRC membership. An extra card 3"X5", light green in color, is typed for Fellows, in addition to the white card list which is run from the stencil.

I would like to make the following suggestions which I believe will result in a more efficient procedure:

(1) That Miss Kerby be given full responsibility for routine in connection with memberships. That all receipts be written, all posting done, stencils cut, and all card lists made and filed by her. If the work increases, or for some reason the work gets behind, I suggest that Miss Kerby let me know and we will arrange for extra help. Up until now, Miss Clay has been writing some of the receipts, posting some of the amounts, etc.

(2) That when Miss Clay wants to write a special letter to a new member, she indicate this by a note on the membership card which she turns over to Miss Kerby. That Miss Kerby write the receipt and follow through on all the routine in connection with the member, but return the receipt to Miss Clay to be enclosed in the special letter. The receipt will serve as a memorandum to Miss Clay that she is to write a special letter. She will either write the letter herself, or will dictate it to a member of the stenographic staff. Arrangements for time needed will be made with Mrs. Tillison.

(3) That the posting to the looseleaf book be discontinued as it is a duplication of the blue dues card. Punched cards might be used with a rod so that cards cannot be removed from the file box. Whether the punched cards are used or not, a positive rule should be made that no card will ever be removed from the SRC membership file, except by Miss Kerby for posting. We should encourage the staff to use the alphabetical card list when clearing names or checking addresses.

(4) That cards for the Honorary Fellows also be made and filed in the card box with the other blue dues cards for SRC members. That word "Fellow" be typed at the top of the card as "Associate Member" is typed for associate members. In the space on the card where dues are posted, an "F" may be written to indicate that the member does not pay dues. This card should be made when a person is asked to be a Fellow, and when he accepts the date filled in, just like a regular SRC member.

(5) That Associate members' cards which are now kept in a separate place at the front of the file box, as well as the cards for the fellows, be filed along with the regular members.

(6) That the stencils for the Fellows (which are now filed separately) be filed in the geographical file of members. As they are red in color they can easily be picked out if we want to send material to the Fellows only. As the files now are, when envelopes are addressed to all members in any one state, they are addressed to "paying members" only.

A separate set of stencils are cut for the board members, and if material is sent to the Fellows very often, it would save some time to have a separate set of stencils made for Fellows.

(7) That the 3"X5" card which is typed for Fellows be discontinued as it is a duplication of the white card list run from the stencil.

In looking back over these suggestions, I don't think I have cut out many of the steps in the procedure. I do not think it is possible to cut it down any more, unless we discontinue some of the card lists which are run from the stencils. However, I believe the usefulness of these card lists more than balances the time spent in making them.

I have also looked into the procedure in connection with subscriptions to the Southern Frontier and will let you have a memorandum on that later.

Later arranged to have receipts typed, & some of them numbered, so that we may know how many members we have at all times.

MEMORANDUM

January 8, 1946.

To: Dr. Johnson

From: I.B.T.

I would like to make the following recommendations concerning salary increases for clerical staff to be effective January 1st, 1946.

1. A $15.00 a month increase for Miss Kerby. Miss Kerby has been with the organization longer than any of the other girls. According to Miss Clay's records, she started work for the Commission in May, 1943, at the rate of $95.00 a month. In March, 1944 she received an increase to $105.00 a month, and in January, 1945, was raised to $125.00 a month. The increase beginning January 1st will make her rate $140.00 a month.

   Miss Kerby is doing a fine job of keeping the membership records and mailing lists up-to-date. Miss Kerby is not a fast typist, but she does do a good job of cutting stencils. Although her position does not require a specific skill, such as stenography or knowledge of bookkeeping, it does require patience and a knack for following through on minute details. Since I came to the Council, I have added to her responsibilities the job of sending invitations to prospective members. This job was formerly handled by Mrs. Saxon.

2. An increase of $15.00 a month for Mrs. Saxon. Mrs. Saxon started work with the Council last January at the rate of $115.00 a month, and has not received an increase. This recommended increase would bring her salary up to $130.00 a month.

   From my observation, Mrs. Saxon has shown marked improvement since August (when I came to the Council). Her typing speed has increased and she has seemed to take over more responsibility in connection with the order letters. She composes a nice friendly letter in answer to inquiries. For a while I was worried about her telephone "technique", but this has improved considerably in the past couple of months.

3. I would recommend an increase of $10.00 a month for Miss Martin. Miss Martin came to the Council in April, 1944 at a starting salary of $125.00 a month. In August, 1944, she received an increase to $135.00 a month, and one in January, 1945, to $145.00. This recommended increase will bring her rate up to $155.00 per month.

Miss Martin is one of the best stenographers I have ever known. She is quick, accurate, and does beautiful work. I have observed that she handles people well as receptionist, and has done a very good job in reorganizing the files.

The fact that I have recommended an increase of $10.00 for Miss Martin and $15.00 for the other girls does not indicate that she deserves less increase, but is simply to bring the salary rate of all three girls closer together.

4. An increase of 5 cents an hour for Connie Way. Connie has been with the Council since May, 1945, and has been working at the rate of 40 cents an hour since he started. Connie is an intelligent boy, is anxious to please, and follows instructions well. He has charge of metering mail, and has done a very good job, with the exception of a few mistakes in his postage records. This increase would make his rate per hour 45 cents.

These increases as recommended would be effective January 1, 1946, and would be the total increases for the year 1946--unless there are some changes in responsibility or duties.

I have not recommended an increase for Mrs. Warwick. Her salary was set by Dr. Mitchell as head of Veterans Service, and any expenditures for that separate budget are approved by him. Mrs. Warwick's salary at present is much higher than any of the other clerical staff. For instance, Miss Martin, who performs approximately the same duties as Mrs. Warwick, is making $30.00 less per month. It probably would be a good idea to hold up any increases for Mrs. Warwick until Miss Martin's salary is somewhere near $175.00 per month.

At present our minimum salary for clerical workers is $115.00 per month (Mrs. Saxon); our maximum salary is $175.00 per month (Mrs. Warwick). For permanent salary ranges for clerical staff I would like to suggest that the following be considered:

Position	Minimum salary	Maximum salary
Clerk (General Office Clerks or Clerk-Typists)	$125.00 per mo.	$160.00 per mo.
Stenographers	125.00 " "	160.00 " "
Steno-Secretaries (or private Secretaries to Executives)	150.00 " "	180.00 " "

The maximum salary for private secretaries probably should go as high as $200.00 a month after several years of service with the organization. What do you think?

Memo . . . FROM THE DESK OF

Dr. Johnson:

Here's what I found in the postal guide concerning reply envelopes:

"Business reply cards...envelopes or labels, bearing the name and address of the distributor...including the number of the special permit, may be distributed and returned through the regular mails under the provisions of Section 510 Postal Laws and Regulations, 1940, without prepayment of postage, the regular postage, plus one cent additional on each business reply card or letter under cover of business reply envelope to be collected on delivery."

Re: Postage on dues notices

We mailed 807 notices to people delinquent for 1946 and 1947 (roughly 150 of these owe for both years). Postage on these is as follows:

410 -- 1½¢
397 -- 3¢

Those which were sealed (3¢ postage) contained cards with "April 25, 1947" stamped on the back.

When the cards come back to us, we are to keep account of those with the date stamped on the back and those unstamped. Inthis way we can tell something of the effectiveness of first class versus third class postage.

We sent 29 notices to people delinquent for three years--1945, 1946, 1947. Names and addresses were filled on the typewriter (letter mimeographed) and were signed by Dr. Mitchell.

Our cardex tabs show your name with unpaid dues for three years.

Although our by-laws provide that members not paying dues for two consecutive years are to be removed automatically, I hesitate to do this until I have specific word from you that you wish to have your membership lapse.

As one who was among the early believers in and supporters of the Council, your continuing faith and confidence are highly prized. Therefore I hope you will let us have your check for membership dues for 1945, ($1.00), 1946 ($2.00), and 1947 ($2.00), so that we may bring you up to current membership status.

Dear SRC Member:

Recently our membership has been increasing at the rate of almost one hundred a month. We think you will agree that this is indicative of the growing strength and effectiveness of SRC in the affairs of the region.

While we are proud of our new members, we do not in the least overlook the vital importance of the continuing interest and support of old members. We urge you, therefore, to mail us, before it slips your mind again, a check for your 1947 dues.

We hope that you will use the enclosed card and self-addressed envelope for forwarding your money, including any additional contribution you feel you can make. We might remind you that dues and contributions to SRC are deductible for income tax purposes.

I. LETTERS - GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

These instructions pertain to the preparation of letters in general. The table of contents or index should be consulted for references to instructions on specific types of correspondence, documents, etc.

1. Paper

Appropriate Department or bureau letterheads should be used for the ribbon copy in all correspondence. Thin letterhead paper should be used for carbon copies to outside third persons. Other carbon copies should be on manifold or light-weight bond in accordance with bureau requirements.

2. Envelopes

Franked envelopes should be used for all official letters. Large envelopes should be used for thick communications which cannot be folded. The address should be typed directly on the envelope, whenever possible.

The address should begin approximately one-third the length of the envelope from the left edge and approximately one-half the depth of the envelope from the top edge. It should be blocked without punctuation at the end of lines unless abbreviations are used. When it is necessary to break a line in the address, the part carried over should be indented two spaces.

The complete address should be shown on the envelope. If an attention line has been used in the letter, it should also be written on the next line after the name of the organization on the envelope.

Window envelopes may be used for form letters or when more expedient and convenient.

3. Margins

Margins depend upon the length of the letter. The letter should have a "framed picture" appearance on the page. The right and left margins should be at least one and one-quarter inches and the bottom margin at least one inch.

4. Spacing and Paragraphing

Block style should be used with double spacing between paragraphs.

5. Punctuation

Modified open punctuation should be used in the address and closing parts of the letter. No end punctuation should be used except a colon after the salutation and a comma after the complimentary close. (See Exhibit No. 1, p. 38.)

6. Placement of Date, Address, and Salutation

The date should be properly placed with respect to the length of the letter and should be flush with the right margin.

The address is written four spaces below the date. The salutation is written two spaces below the last line of the address. (See Exhibit No. 2, p. 39.)

For a window envelope, the space to be left between the top of the page and the date depends upon the number of lines in the address. For a plain envelope the aproximate space between the top of the page and the date is determined by the length of the letter.

7. Date

The month should be written in full and the day of the month indicated in figures without "st," "nd," "rd," and "th," and without a period following the year. Example: July 15, 1940

If the date is not typed on the letter at the time of preparation, but is stamped in later by the mail room, the preparation date should be typed under the dictator's name and stenographer's initials on the carbon copies. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

8. Address

The address should be single spaced, in block style, each line flush with the left margin except that any necessary adjustments should be made when window envelopes are used. Punctuation at the end of lines should be omitted unless abbreviations are used. When it is necessary to break a line in the address, the part carried over should be indented two spaces. (See Exhibit No. 4, p. 41.)

Titles and Names

A title may be placed on the same line as the name of the addressee or on the line below.

8. Address (Cont'd.)

Firm Names

A firm name should be written as it appears on the letterhead used by the firm, even though the printed name includes abbreviations. If a letterhead is not available, words such as "Company," "Corporation," or "Incorporated" should not be abbreviated.

Street Numbers

Streets designated by numbers should generally be spelled out, but figures followed by "-st," "-nd," "-rd," or "-th," may be used for streets numbered over 10 if they do not immediately follow the house number.

City and State

The names of the city and the State should be written on the same line, with a comma between them. If one line is not sufficient, the city and State should be written on separate lines without punctuation. (For acceptable abbreviations, see the Style Manual of the Government Printing Office.)

9. Salutation

The salutation should begin at the left margin, two spaces below the last line of the address (or two spaces below the "attention" line). It should be followed by a colon.

If the salutation is not indicated by the dictator, "Gentlemen" is used for a firm and "Dear Mr. _____" for an individual. Ordinarily, "Dear Sir" should be used only when the name of the person is not known. A woman who signs her name without "Miss" or "Mrs." should be addressed as "Miss." (See section on Forms of Address, Salutation, and Conclusion.)

10. File Reference

File references given in incoming letters should be quoted in replies.

Bureau file references, when required on outgoing letters, should be typed flush with the left margin approximately two inches below the top of the page. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

11. Attention Line

Ordinarily an attention line should not be used. If one is used, however, it should be placed two spaces above the salutation, flush with the left margin. (See Exhibits Nos. 3 and 5, pp. 40 and 42, respectively.)

12. Subject Line

Although a subject line is not generally used, if one is necessary it should begin two spaces below the salutation, flush with the left margin. (See Exhibits Nos. 4 and 5, pp. 41 and 42, respectively.)

13. Confidential Mail

The word "CONFIDENTIAL" in capital letters should be written flush with the left margin approximately one inch below the lowest printed line of the letterhead. (See Exhibit No. 2, p. 39.)

14. Air Mail, Registered Mail, and Special Delivery

Form AD-19 should be prepared in quadruplicate and three copies forwarded with the correspondence to the Department Post Office through bureau mail rooms. To insure immediate consideration by the recipient, "AIRMAIL" or "SPECIAL DELIVERY" may be typed in the same location suggested for "CONFIDENTIAL." (See paragraph 13.)

15. Placement of Text

The text of a letter should begin flush with the left margin and two spaces below the salutation, or below the subject line. All succeeding paragraphs should be similarly blocked. (See Exhibit No. 1, p. 38.)

Short letters of one paragraph may be double spaced. Letters of two or more paragraphs should be single spaced with double spacing between paragraphs. (See Exhibit No. 1, p. 38.)

16. Second and Succeeding Pages

When a letter requires more than one page, the last page should contain at least two lines in addition to the complimentary close and the signature.

Each page after the first should be numbered about one inch from the top beginning with an arabic numeral, flush with the left margin, followed by a hyphen, the name of the addressee, a second hyphen, and the date. The text should continue four spaces below. (See Exhibit No. 6, p. 43.)

17. Extracts and Quotations

Extracts and quotations should be single-spaced, blocked, and indented five spaces. Brief quotations of three lines or less may be run as a part of the paragraph in which they appear.

18. Complimentary Close

"Very truly yours," is the usual form of closing for letters addressed to private individuals. "Sincerely," "Sincerely yours," and "Cordially yours," are each a more intimate form preferred by some dictators. "Respectfully," is reserved for letters to high officials. (See section on Forms of Address, Salutation, and Conclusion.)

Only the first word should begin with a capital letter.

The proper punctuation at the end is a comma.

19. Placement of Complimentary Close and Title

The complimentary close should be typed beginning slightly to the right of the center two spaces below the last line of the text. The title of the signer should be typed five spaces below and should be blocked with the complimentary close. When it may be necessary to insert the word "Acting," the title should be typed seven spaces to the right. (See Exhibit No. 1, p. 38.)

There should be no punctuation after the title.

20. Signature for Superior

The form to be followed when a secretary signs a letter for her superior or sends out a letter in his absence depends upon the specific situation and individual preference. She may sign his name in the usual place, adding her own initials in very small letters or she may sign her own name.

If a secretary sends a letter out in her own name, beneath her signature she should ordinarily type "Secretary to" and the name of her superior. His title should be substituted if the official significance of his name would not be clear.

21. Enclosures or Material Sent Separately

A complete list of enclosures should be typed below the signature and title, flush with the left margin on the file copy and all other carbons retained by the Washington office,

21. Enclosures or Material Sent Separately (Cont'd.)

except when they are enumerated in the letter itself. If the length of the letter will not allow room for the list, it should be typed on a separate full sheet of paper and attached to the file copy. Such a list need not be attached to any other carbon copies. Only the word "Enclosure" or "Enclosures" should appear on the ribbon copy. It should be typed flush with the left margin and at least two spaces below the title of the signing official. For two or more enclosures a numeral should be added to indicate the number. (See paragraph 24 of this section and Exhibit No. 7, p. 44.)

If material will be sent under separate cover, the words "Separate Cover" should be typed on the carbon copies only, and a notation added to indicate the manner of sending the material, such as "Registered Mail," "Parcel Post," or "Express."

22. Identification of Dictator and Stenographer

The capitalized initials of the dictator's first name, middle name (if one is used), and last name, with the remaining letters of his last name completely spelled out in small letters, followed by a colon and the stenographer's initials, capitalized, should be typed two spaces below the list of enclosures and flush with the left margin on all carbon copies except extra copies for third persons. (See paragraph 24 of this section and Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

23. Distribution of Copies

The names of third persons to whom copies are sent should be listed on the carbon copies, at least two spaces below the dictator's name, following the symbol "cc" typed flush with the left margin. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

24. Information Typed on Carbon Copies

The original should always be removed from the typewriter before any information is typed on the carbon copies.

25. Arrangement of Letter File

The standard arrangement of letters and the carbon copies in a file is as follows:

25. Arrangement of Letter File (Cont'd.)

Outgoing letter)
Enclosures (on letters to Con-) gressmen, enclose one extra copy)) clipped together Envelope, lengthwise, address side)

* Protecting sheet of blank manifold

Carbon copies for third persons)
Envelopes (arranged as above)) clipped together

#* Copy to be initialed
Other file copies (with copies of enclosures if required)

Incoming letter and attachments

Previous correspondence

The entire file should be clipped together securely.

* Stenographers should consult their supervisor for exceptions.

# A number of offices like to have this copy marked in some way to avoid delay in searching for the proper copy to initial. This may be done by attaching a paper clip or small strip, or by extending the copy a little from the rest of the file.

II. LETTERS PREPARED FOR THE OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Except for the instructions listed below, letters for the signature of the Secretary, Under Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Assistants to the Secretary, Director of Finance (also Budget Officer), Director of Personnel, Land Use Coordinator, and the Chief, Office of Plant and Operations should be prepared in accordance with the instructions given under "Letters - General Instructions."

1. Spacing

If a letter consists of a full page or more, the address should be written approximately one inch below the seal when the Department (blue seal) letterhead is used. A short letter should be balanced on the page.

2. Date

The letter should not be dated at the time of preparation, but the preparation date should be typed under the dictator's name and stenographer's initials on the salmon and all file copies. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.) The date of the letter should be the actual date of dispatch and will be placed on the letter by the Secretary's Files after signature and before mailing.

3. Complimentary Close

The closing "Sincerely" or "Sincerely yours" should be used in all letters prepared for the Secretary's signature except letters addressed to the President and Members of the Supreme Court when the closing "Respectfully" should be used.

4. Signature and Title

Unless otherwise specifically instructed by supplemental memoranda, only the title of the official to sign should be typed on letters prepared in bureaus or offices for signature of the officials listed above. In no case should the word "Acting" be typed on the letter with the title. This will be stamped on when applicable. The word "Secretary" should always be typed seven spaces to the right to allow for use of the stamp when necessary.

5. Copies

All letters for the signature of the Secretary or members of his staff should be accompanied by one salmon and two white copies. Extra copies to meet the bureau filing requirements should also be made. In addition, extra carbon copies of letters addressed to the following officials and offices should be provided on plain white paper without printing or initials as indicated below:

5. Copies (Cont'd.)

Senators and Representatives.....1 extra copy
White House.....1 extra copy
Joint Committee on Printing.....1 extra copy
Senate Committee on Agriculture.....2 extra copies House Committee on Agriculture.....2 extra copies House Committee on Public Lands.....2 extra copies

Chairmen of committees of Congress or members of Congress reporting on bills or dealing with proposed or possible legislation.....4 extra copies

The Bureau of the Budget transmitting recommendations for appropriations or reports or recommendations on legislative bills.....3 extra copies

The Office of Government Reports regarding proposed State legislation.....1 extra copy

The Comptroller General.....3 extra copies

6. Enclosures

Enclosures except publications, circulars, or other reference material should be submitted in duplicate in order that a copy may be retained by the Secretary's Files.

Copies of letters or telegrams prepared for the Secretary's signature should not be used as enclosures or referred to in a communication, until a copy bearing the date of dispatch and the facsimile signature of the signer is provided by the Secretary's Files.

7. Identification of Dictator and Stenographer

The capitalized initials of the dictator's first name, middle name (if one is used), and last name, with the remaining letters of his last name completely spelled out in small letters, followed by a colon and the stenographer's initial capitalized, should be typed two spaces below the list of enclosures and flush with the left margin on the salmon and

7. Identification of Dictator and Stenographer (Cont'd.)

all white copies except extra copies for third persons. (See paragraph 24 of "Letters - General Instructions" and Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

8. Signing Official

a. Replies to Other Agencies. When a letter is written in reply to a letter addressed to this Department by another executive department, independent establishment, or other government agency, it should be prepared for the signature of the official indicated on the "pink jacket" referring the letter to the bureau concerned for the preparation of a reply. As a general rule, if a letter is received from an "acting" Secretary or Assistant Secretary of any department, the reply should be addressed to the Secretary of that department and not to the "acting" Secretary or Assistant Secretary who signed the incoming letter.

b. Letters Originating in the Department. When a letter addressed to the head of another department, independent establishment, or other government agency originates in this Department, it should be prepared for the signature of the Secretary if it involves a matter of policy or a question of considerable importance. Letters relating to routine matters should be prepared for the signature of the appropriate staff member of the Secretary's Office.

All communications to the Office of Government Reports relating to proposed State legislation should be prepared for the signature of the Secretary.

9. "Green Jackets" and "Pink Jackets"

A green jacket (Form AD-114) should be prepared for all letters originating in the bureaus for signature in the Secretary's Office. The six blanks beginning with "Letter to" and ending with "Initials of stenographer" should be filled out under the direction of the dictator of the letter. The subject should be an accurate digest of the letter, including specific references to the name of the addressee, date of letter replied to, if any, and other essential information.

A pink jacket prepared by the Secretary's Files is used as a cover sheet for incoming letters referred to the bureaus for preparation of replies. The memorandum of action taken should be filled outon the pink jacket when the reply has been prepared. If the letter is referred to another office, a report of such referral should be made to the bureau official responsible for Secretarial correspondence so that the Secretary's Files will be able to locate the file if necessary.

If the incoming letter requires reply for signature in the Secretary's Office and is not accompanied by a pink jacket, a green jacket should be prepared as explained above.

The pink or green jacket should be the cover sheet of the file throughout its movement within a bureau or from bureau to bureau to signal correspondence requiring signature in the Secretary's Office.

Since letters referred to bureaus and offices by the Office of the Secretary should be answered within three days after receipt by the bureau or office, pink-jacketed letters should ordinarily be given preference over other typewritten work.

10. Arrangement of Letter File

Before a proposed letter is transmitted for signature, the file should be arranged as follows:

The pink or green jacket)
The outgoing letter)
Enclosures) clipped together

Protecting sheet of blank manifold paper

Carbon copies for third persons)
Envelopes (arranged as above)) clipped together

Salmon copy
Salmon copy of original draft if rewritten

Carbon copies of outgoing letter
Copies of enclosures that accompany outgoing letter

Incoming letter and attachments

Previous correspondence

The entire file should be clipped together securely.

11. Rewritten Letters

If a letter prepared in one bureau is rewritten in another bureau, the new draft should be accompanied by the initialed salmon copy of the original draft, canceled in lead pencil. The salmon copy of the new draft should be initialed (on the last page if more than one) by the chief or acting chief of the bureau in which the letter was rewritten. All file copies, salmon and white, should have the following legend typed in the lower left corner.

Originated in (bureau) , (date)
Initialed by _____ Rewritten in (bureau) , (name of rewrite officer) , (date)

12. Disposition of Correspondence

All notes or memoranda relating to the disposition of the correspondence after signature by the Secretary should be attached to the salmon carbon of the outgoing letter.

13. Initialing and Clearance

The initials of the chief or acting chief of the bureau or office in which letters are prepared for signature in the Office of the Secretary should be written in ink or indelible pencil in the lower right corner of the salmon copy on the last page (if more than one). Others to whom the letter may be referred by the Secretary's Office should initial in the same place. Employees within a bureau whose duty it is to approve letters should initial in accordance with the bureau's system, but only the initials of the chiefs or acting chiefs of bureau should appear on the salmon copy.

All letters to the Comptroller General should be initialed by the Solicitor and the Director of the Office of Budget and Finance before being submitted for signature.

All replies to requests for records or reports on proposed legislation should be referred through the Secretary's Files to the Director of the Office of Budget and Finance for transmission to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget before being finally transmitted to Congress.

14. Returning Copies of Letters

Letters addressed to Members of Congress and transmitted to the Department for information should always be returned with the reply. Letters transmitted by other correspondents should also be returned when requested or when it is obvious that such action should be taken. In all cases, copies should be retained in the bureaus. Copies are not required by the Secretary's Files.

15. Directing Correspondents to Field Officers

If a correspondent is referred to any field officer for additional information, a copy of the letter advising of the reference should be sent to the proper person in accordance with bureau requirements.

16. Drafts of Letters for the Signature of the President

The instructions for the preparation of letters for signature in the Secretary's Office should be followed except that (1) plain white bond paper instead of letterhead should be used for the original; (2) two extra white carbon copies should be provided in accordance with White House requirements; and (3) the complimentary close and title should be omitted. The suggested draft should be accompanied by a letter of transmittal prepared for the signature of the Secretary. (See paragraph 5 of this section.)

17. Legislative Reports

Legislative Reports should be prepared in accordance with Secretary's Memorandum No. 730. "Department of Agriculture" letterheads should be used for both reports to committees and clearance letters to the Bureau of the Budget. The following numbers of copies should be prepared:

a. Transmittal letters to the Bureau of the Budget:

1 salmon copy (for initialing - retained in the Secretary's Files)
1 white copy (retained in the Secretary's Files)
1 white copy (indicating date of dispatch to the Bureau of the Budget - returned by Secretary's Files to originating bureau)
1 white copy (indicating date of dispatch to the Bureau of the Budget - returned by Secretary's Files to the Office of Budget and Finance)
Other copies, if any, needed by preparing bureau

17. Legislative Reports (Cont'd.)

b. Drafts of proposed reports to Congress:

1 salmon copy (for initialing - retained in the Secretary's Files)
1 white copy (retained in the Secretary's Files)
2 white copies (to accompany the original to its final Congressional destination)
2 white copies (for the Bureau of the Budget) Occasionally, in cases where it is desirable to obtain the views of other agencies on proposed legislative reports, the Bureau of the Budget requests this Department to furnish additional copies of the reports after the usual number have been received. Where such a need can be anticipated, it is suggested that extra copies be prepared at the time the report is prepared so as to expedite clearance and to make unnecessary a repetition of the typing.
1 white copy (indicating date of dispatch to Congress - returned by Secretary's Files to originating bureau)
Other copies, if any, needed by preparing bureau

c. Drafts of reports if addressed to the Bureau of the Budget:

1 salmon copy (for initialing - retained in the Secretary's Files)
1 white copy (retained in the Secretary's Files)
2 white copies (for the Bureau of the Budget)
1 white copy (indicating date of dispatch to the Bureau of the Budget - returned by Secretary's Files to originating bureau)
Other copies, if any, needed by preparing bureau

d. Enclosures required in appropriate cases:

1 copy (retained in the Secretary's Files)
1 copy (for the Bureau of the Budget except in the case of private relief bills)
2 copies (to accompany report to its final Congressional destination)

Exceptions may be made to the rule on enclosures in the case of bulky files, documents, etc., which it would be unreasonable to have copied.

17. Legislative Reports (Cont'd.)

e. Arrangement of file, as submitted for signature:

Jacket)
Original of report)
2 copies of report) clipped together
Enclosures)
Envelope, lengthwise, address side)

Protecting sheet of blank manifold paper

Salmon copy
Whites copies
Copies of enclosures

Copy of bill on which report is made

All of the above clipped together of the Budget)

Copies of enclosures (if any))
Copy of bill on which report is made) clipped together Envelope, lengthwise, address side)

The entire file then should be clipped together securely.

IV. MEMORANDA

Memoranda are used for communications between the units of the Department, whether interbureau or intrabureau.

1. Paper

Memoranda should be written on a memorandum form (See Exhibit No. 9, p. 46) or on the regular letterheads of the office of origin, if a printed memorandum form is not provided.

2. Envelopes

Chain envelopes should ordinarily be used for memoranda; if the material is confidential, requiring that it be sealed, a franked envelope may be used, and should be plainly marked "BY MESSENGER." The name of the addressee and his bureau must be shown on the envelope on all mail.

3. Date

The month should be written in full and the day of the month indicated in figures without "st," "nd," "rd," or "th," and without a period following the year. Example: July 15, 1940

If the date is not typed on the memorandum at the time of preparation, but is stamped in later by the mail room, the preparation date should be typed under the dictator's name and stenographer's initials on the carbon copies. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

4. Heading

The following form for the heading should be used:

The words "To," "From," and "Subject" should appear at the head of the memorandum beginning flush with the left margin and followed by a colon, with the appropriate information for each.

The "To" line should give the name of the person to whom the memorandum is addressed, his title, section, division, or bureau if applicable. The name should not be preceded by "Mr.," "Mrs.," or "Miss." No end punctuation should be used.

The "From" line should state the name of the person sending the memorandum, his title, section, and division.

The "Subject" should be brief and worded as specifically as possible. The first letters of all words except articles, conjunctions, and prepositions should be capitalized.

If the subject contains two or more lines, it should be single-spaced, the second line beginning flush with the first.

4. Heading (Cont'd.)

The parts in the heading should be aligned with double-spacing between the separate items.

5. Text

The form for the text of the memorandum should follow the form for letters.

6. Complimentary Close

There should be no complimentary close.

7. Signature

The person whose name is typed in the "From" line of the memorandum must initial or sign his full name (in ink or indelible pencil) after the text of the memorandum. The initials or name of the signer of the memorandum are not to be typed in.

8. Attachments

A list of attachments should be typed three spaces below the last line of the memorandum flush with the left margin on all the carbon copies unless the enclosures are enumerated in the memorandum. Only the word "Attachment" or "Attachments" should appear on the ribbon copy. For two or more enclosures, a numeral should be added to indicate the number.

9. Identification of Dictator and Stenographer

The capitalized initials of the dictator's first name, middle name (if one is used), and last name with the remaining letters spelled out followed by the stenographer's initials, capitalized, should be on all carbon copies. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

10. Copies

The names of third persons to whom copies are sent should be listed on the carbon copies two spaces below the dictator's name, following the symbol "cc:" typed flush with the left margin. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.) Names preferably are arranged in alphabetical order.

Memoranda to the Secretary, Under Secretary, Assistant Secretary, or their assistants should be accompanied by one white carbon copy on thin letterhead of the bureau or office originating the memorandum.

V. TELEGRAMS

1. General Form

Standard Form No. 14A should be used for all messages sent from Washington by Government or commercial facilities. (See Exhibit No. 10, p. 47.)

All parts should be typed in lower case type with ordinary punctuation. Block style and double-spacing must be used in the address and in the body of the telegram. The date should be written in unabbreviated form as on a letter. The appropriation to which the telegram is to be charged should be typed in the space provided, that is, in the upper right corner of the form. The kind of service desired, straight telegram, day letter, night letter, etc., should be indicated under the printed heading. (See Exhibit No. 10, p. 47.)

2. Style

"Retel," "relet," "reourtel," and "reourlet" may be written as one word and will be counted at the rate of five letters per word; for example, "retel" one word; "reourtel" two words. The body of the message should begin with one of the above examples, if appropriate, and should be followed by the date of the letter or telegram reference. (See Exhibit No. 10, p. 47.)

Punctuation

Between points in the United States, no extra charge is made for the transmission of the following punctuation marks: comma, period, colon, semi-colon, dash, hyphen, quotation marks, parenthesis, question mark, and apostrophe. Actual punctuation marks make unnecessary the using of the word "stop" or the spelling out of punctuation marks. Other punctuation marks will be charged as words. A fraction bar, decimal point, comma, or a dash when part of a group of figures is considered one figure in the group.

Figures

As a general rule, figures typed in arabic should be used instead of words to indicate numerals. A group of five figures or fewer will be charged as one word.

Cities and States

Cities and States of two or more words are counted as one word.

3. Signature and Title

A telegram may be signed in the following ways without extra charge:

The name of an individual and his title

The name of an organization and (a) the title of an official, or (b) the name of a department or branch, or (c) the name of an individual.

(See also paragraph 7 of this section.)

4. Copies

An original on Standard Form No. 14A and two carbon copies are required on all telegrams. Two additional copies are required on "multiple-copy" messages. (See paragraph 6 of this section.) A confirmation copy and an addressed envelope for this copy may be prepared, if administratively desirable.

5. Identification of Dictator and Stenographer

The capitalized initials of the dictator's first name, middle name (if one is used), and last name with the remaining letters spelled out, followed by the stenographer's initials, capitalized, should be on all of the carbon copies except the confirmation copy. (See Exhibit No. 8, p. 45.)

6. Classes of Service

The following classes of telegraph services are available:

Straight Telegram

A straight telegram receives priority either day or night over all other messages.

Day Letter

The day letter is a deferred day message with the rates ordinarily lower than straight telegram rates. For a day letter to be delivered on the day of its issue, sufficient time must be allowed for transmission and delivery during regular office hours, subject to the priority accorded straight telegrams.

6. Classes of Service (Cont'd.)

Night Letter

The night letter is a deferred night message accepted up to 2:00 a.m. for delivery at the beginning of the business day.

Serial Message

The serial message is a series of telegrams sent under one date to the same addressee and bearing the same signature.

Multiple-copy Message

This type of message is sometimes called a "book" message. It is used when the same message is to be sent to several different individuals or organizations. An original and four copies of both the message and the list of individuals or organizations are required. The original and one copy will be sent to the telegraph office and a stamped copy returned to the originating bureau.

7. Prepared for Signature in the Secretary's Office

The same general instructions should be followed except that one salmon and one white carbon copy in addition to those required on other types of telegrams should be supplied. The title "Secretary of Agriculture," "Under Secretary of Agriculture," or "Assistant Secretary of Agriculture," as the case may be, should be indicated but in no case should the name be typed in.

VI. OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS

These instructions govern the preparation of official documents having general applicability and legal effect, such as Proclamations, Executive Orders, and other official papers for publication in the Federal Register. (See Exhibit No. 11, p. 48.)

1. Paper

All documents shall be typed on legal-sized paper (8 by 12½ inches).

2. Margins

All documents shall have a left margin of approximately two inches and a right margin of approximately one inch.

3. Spacing and Paragraphing

The paragraphs shall be indented five spaces to conform to Federal Register regulations. All documents shall be double-spaced, except that quotations, tabulations, or descriptions of land may be single-spaced.

4. Title

A suitable title shall be provided. It should be centered and typed in capital letters. It should not be underscored.

5. Land Descriptions

Descriptions of tracts of lands shall conform, insofar as practicable, to the most recent edition of the Specifications for Descriptions of Tracts of Land for Use in Executive Orders and Proclamations, published by the Federal Board of Surveys and Maps. This information is given in the Style Manual of the Government Printing Office.

6. Copies

An original, a first white carbon copy, a salmon carbon copy, and four white carbon copies are required on all documents for publication in the Federal Register. One additional white copy is required on Proclamations and Executive Orders. If a document is to be transmitted through another Department, one additional copy is also required.

7. Federal Register Documents

Form OS-186 should be prepared and attached to the document in the originating bureau.

VII. TYPOGRAPHIC STYLE

1. Punctuation

The general rules governing modern punctuation are that no mark should be used unnecessarily and that in the choice and placing of marks the aim should be to bring out the meaning clearly.

Since most dictators do not specify punctuation except for unusual constructions, the typist should be thoroughly familiar with the purposes and general uses of this mechanical aid to clearness and emphasis.

2. Capitalization

Overcapitalization should be guarded against. The general principles are that proper nouns and proper adjectives are capitalized but common nouns and common adjectives are not. Since some nouns and adjectives are construed as proper in certain connections and common in others, it is impossible to determine in advance whether a capital should be used. If the purpose of capitalization and the general principles are kept in mind, a reasonable uniformity is possible.

3. Spelling

The simple approved form of spelling should generally be used. If the dictionary gives more than one approved spelling, the simpler form is preferable.

Unless The United States Board on Geographic Names or its successor, The Division of Geographic Names, has approved a different form, the spelling given in the United States Postal Guide is to be used for geographic names in the United States and its possessions, and the International Postal Guide is to be followed in the spelling of foreign names. This information is available in the Department Library.

4. Division of Words

The division of words given in the dictionary should be followed. Words are ordinarily divided by syllables. The following rules should also be followed:

> Not more than two consecutive lines should end in word division.
> Hyphened words should be divided at the hyphen.

4. Division of Words (Cont'd.)

A word should not be divided on a single letter, and division on two letters should be avoided if possible; for example, a-bout.

The last word on a page and the last word of the last full line of a paragraph should not be divided.

Abbreviations such as U.S.D.A., U.S.N., should not be divided.

Initials should not be separated from each other and preferably not from the surname.

In general, when a consonant is doubled, the division should be between the two consonants.

Titles, such as Dr., Mrs., and Gen., should not be separated from the names to which they belong.

A monosyllable should not be divided.

Words beginning with prefixes should be divided on the prefix if possible.

Contractions, proper names, figures, and abbreviations should not be divided.

Separate signs, letters, or short abbreviations should not be separated from that to which they apply.

Dates should be divided between the day and the year, if necessary; not between the month and the day.

5. Numerals

The rules given in the Style Manual of the Government Printing Office should be followed in typing numerals.

6. Underscoring

Underscoring is used to emphasize or call attention to words which are to be differentiated from other text. It may be used for the following:

6. Underscoring (Cont'd.)

Foreign words and phrases

Reference words, phrases, and abbreviations used in citations and footnotes

Titles of publications whether in running text, citations, or footnotes

Names of vessels and airplanes

Names of legal cases except the "v" or "vs" for "versus"

Scientific names of genera, subgenera, species, and sub-species (Groups of higher rank are not underscored.)

"To be continued," "See," "See also"

Letters indicating indefinite persons ("A," "B")

To set off the relevant matter following such expression as "the word."

7. Headings

Center Headings

If the heading consists of more than one line, all overrun lines should be typed without spacing between the lines and blocked with the first line of the heading.

Center headings may be written in the following manner:

All capital letters

Small letters, underscored, with the first and last word and all important words capitalized

Small letters, not underscored, with only the first word and proper names capitalized.

7. Headings (Cont'd.)

Side Headings

Side headings should be placed flush with the margin, typed in small letters, underscored, with all of the important words capitalized; they should not be followed by a period. They may be used over either a single paragraph or a number of paragraphs.

Run-in Headings

Run-in headings apply only to single paragraphs; they are placed at the beginning of the paragraph and are run in with the text.

8. Rough Drafts

Rough drafts should be double-spaced unless otherwise specified. The words "Rough Draft"; the capitalized initials of the dictator's first name, middle name (if one is used), and last name, with the remaining letters of his last name completely spelled out in small letters, followed by the stenographer's initials, capitalized; and the date of preparation should be typed in the upper right corner of the first page.

9. Copying

The word "Copy" should be written at the top of the first page of every manuscript copied.

When a letterhead is copied, the address should always be included.

To show that the original was signed, "(S)" should be written before a signature when it is being copied.

Any initials should always be copied.

If anything is apparently unintentionally omitted in the original, a short line should be made beneath a space to note the omission in the copy. If a letter or figure is obviously wrong, a line should be made beneath it. An entire word should not be underlined but a question mark in pencil should be placed after it.

Punctuation should be copied exactly as it is written unless there is an obvious typographical error.

9. Copying (Cont'd.)

An intentional omission of material should be indicated by three asterisks if a paragraph, or by three dots if words or sentences.

10. Tabulations

The instructions given in the Style Manual of the Government Printing Office should be followed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON

Mr. John Doe
Chief Administrative Officer
Division of Employee Training
Department of Blank
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Doe:

Letters for the signature of the Secretary of Agriculture are prepared in accordance with the instructions given under "Letters - General Instructions" of the Department Style Manual. There are, however, a few exceptions as explained in the section entitled "Letters Prepared for the Office of the Secretary."

If a letter consists of a full page or more, the address is written one inch below the seal when the Department letterhead is used. Letters are not dated when prepared. The date is placed on the letter after it has been signed and immediately before mailing.

Letters prepared for the signature of the Secretary or members of his staff indicate only the title of the official to sign the letter. The name of the official is not typed on the letter.

Enclosures, except publications, circulars or other reference material, are submitted in duplicate in order that a copy may be retained by the Secretary's File Room.

Telegrams for the signature of the Secretary have one original on a telegraph blank form (Standard Form No. 14A), one salmon copy, and four white carbon copies. When it is essential to indicate the title of the Secretary, "Secretary of Agriculture" is used.

Sincerely yours,

Assistant to the Secretary

REGULATIONS ON BUDGETARY ADMINISTRATION

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, approved June 10, 1921 (42 Stat. 20), and as President of the United States, I hereby prescribe the following regulations with respect to the compilation and reporting of information on the financial condition and operations of the Government and with respect to the budgetary control of expenditures:

You and Your Telephone

A Pamphlet on Good Telephone Usage

Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company INCORPORATED

America uses the telephone far more than any other form of fast communication.

An average of more than 100,000,000 telephone conversations are held in this country every day—which is equivalent to approximately three for every four persons in the entire population.

Approximately 33,000,000,000 telephone conversations is the annual total—more than twice the number of letters, post cards and telegrams.

You and Your Telephone

"Use your telephone in such a manner that people will like to call you, and to have you call them," said a business man to his employees.

"I know the people at Such and Such Company," a person remarks who has never been there. "I've talked with them by telephone. They're good people to deal with."

So it goes. Every time you telephone you make a definite impression—good, bad, or indifferent—on the person at the other end, just as surely as you get an idea of what that person is like. Your voice, what you say, and how you say it, is what reveals you to others. It's on just such impressions that much of this country's business depends; for if favorable they make for confidence and good will.

The art of getting good results by telephone—making pleasing impressions, meriting good will, having people like to telephone with you—is largely a matter of dealing with others as you would have them deal with you. "Phone as you would be phoned to," is the way one prominent executive put it.

This pamphlet outlines methods of applying that principle. They have been found to be the best by telephone users in many lines of business. Furthermore, you will find them practical and easy to apply.

"Phone As You Would Be Phoned To"

The telephone provides communication by voice—the natural and quickest way of making your thoughts and personality known to others. You like to deal by telephone with people whose voices and manner of speaking show them to be courteous, interested, alert. Not so with those who seem abrupt or indifferent.

Individuals and business concerns are increasingly interested in this phase of their telephone service. Here is a company telling its employees that "the telephone, if properly used, will enhance sales and create a spirit of friendliness within and towards our organization." In a newspaper article headed, "Pleasing Voice Now An Important Business Asset," pleasing and correct telephone speech and manner is rated "the foremost requirement" of employees having telephone contacts with customers.

In the best sense of the word, it pays to have a good telephone personality. Whether you are an executive, a secretary, a salesman, a clerk, a switchboard attendant, or are engaged in any other occupation—or just your own personal affairs—your success depends largely upon how you treat customers, make friends, create good will. And a telephone personality plays just as important a role as a face to face personality.

Although you can't actually see the person at the other telephone, you can imagine what his face looks like and how he feels in response to what you are saying or doing. You can get a good response by saying or doing the right thing at the right time, and in the right manner.

The Voice With A Smile Wins!

If you could call yourself up, what would you hear? Simply your own voice and speech—your sole representative. You would hear yourself as others hear you.

Would it please you? Would you know, in an instant, that here was a person genuinely courteous, interested, alert? Would there be something about your tone of voice, your way of greeting, your manners, the ease with which you were understood, which gave a glimpse of a friendly face, of an alert, capable person? Would you find yourself quickly responding to an attractive personality?

Since your voice and speech is all that there is to your telephone personality, you'll want to study it, and be thinking about using the voice with a smile, almost every time you make or answer a call. Then, too, you'll want to be careful about the clearness of your speech. If you speak distinctly, making it easy for the other person to understand, you will make a good impression from that one feature alone.

"What was that?" "I'm sorry, I didn't get that." If your listeners sometimes break in with such remarks, it usually means that your voice is not doing its job well. It's a signal that you should form your words better, or speak more slowly, or perhaps more directly into the mouthpiece—your lips not more than half an inch away.

So, the first thing to do about having a good telephone personality is to give attention to your voice and speech.* That attention should be directed to these two essential goals:

Be easily and accurately understood, and
Make the good impression that brings a pleasant response.

How Are Your Callers Welcomed?

There is one way in which you can "call yourself up" and hear how you sound to others—that is, if you are the head or manager of a business concern or institution, or a professional man, interested in the kind of welcoming answers that are received by your customers, clients, or patients. Just call up your headquarters once in a while and listen with an attentive ear to the welcome you get. How do you sound to others? Do you like the way your callers are greeted? And the way they are treated?

On such test calls, you'll find it helpful to rate the voices that you hear, representing you. For example, are they—Pleasing? Helpful? Indifferent (mechanical)? Curt? Indistinct?

If you take that kind of an interest in your telephone service, and let the people at the office know about it, you'll be pleased—and benefited—by the results, and so will your callers.

Now let's look at some of the specific situations in telephoning.

How to Meet Your Caller

When the bell rings and you open the telephone door, your first words are important. Remember, you don't know who is calling. It may be one of your firm's best customers. Or a prospective customer making inquiries. Or a good friend. Naturally, you want to make such callers feel that they are welcome—as you would if you met them face to face.

*NOTE: If you are interested in learning more about the effective use of the voice in telephoning, you are welcome to a copy of a pamphlet, "The Voice With A Smile," which can be obtained as shown on the last page of this pamphlet.

The welcome you offer is the promptness and pleasantness of your answer, the friendly attitude shown in your first greeting, even before you know who your caller is. This is not only courtesy but "good business." Time and again it actually determines the attitude of the caller and assures an agreeable tone to the interview.

As you know from your own experience, people don't like to be kept waiting. Possibly some of your callers may have to wait—"cooling their heels" and growing impatient over a delayed answer—because you may be the only one who can help them. But they may not be very agreeable when you finally answer. If, on the other hand, there are other firms who can serve these delayed callers about as well, there is every likelihood they will not wait long before calling someone else.

Some of the slow answers, which make callers impatient, are due simply to failure to keep other telephone conversations reasonably brief. It's an interesting fact that a minute, while waiting, seems awfully long, whereas a minute, while talking, seems like no time at all.

To sum up, always have a prompt and pleasant greeting ready for every telephone caller.

What to Say When You Answer

When you answer, avoid such old-fashioned, indefinite and time-wasting words as "Hello" and "Yes." The best way to answer is to identify yourself by saying your name, or that of your company or department, or your telephone number—or combinations of these—depending upon what will be the most helpful to the person calling.

Examples:

"Mr. Brown," or, "Mr. Brown speaking"

"Robert Smith and Company"

"Bates Brothers, Mr. Johnson speaking"

"Rug Department, Mr. O'Brien speaking"

"This is 4-1099"

Much can be accomplished simply by the tone of these few words of identification. A pleasant rise in your voice seems to ask, "Is this the person (or firm) you are calling?" And the important welcome already mentioned is conveyed by a tone of helpful, friendly interest that seems to say, "What can I do for you?" It shows that you are pleased to receive the call.

Your own identification made, the person calling usually responds by identifying himself. The conversation can then proceed with no time wasted in annoying questions like, "Who is this?" or "What company do you represent?"

Now suppose you are answering someone else's telephone. In that case you should give the name of that person.

Examples:

"Mr. Brown's office"

"Bates Brothers, Mr. Johnson's telephone"

"Doctor Jones' office"

"Mr. Thompson's telephone (or, 'residence')"

Where desirable, the name of the person answering is also given, as, "Mr. Brown's office, Miss Smith speaking."

Asking a Question Tactfully

Sometimes when you answer another person's telephone, it will be desirable to find out who is calling—if he does not identify himself. The best way to do this without appearing inquisitive, and to make it clear that the information is for the other person, is to ask a question like one of these:

"May I tell him who is calling (or, 'who called'), please?"

"May I take a message for him, please?"

"Would you like to have him call you?"

This method also indicates your willingness to be of service to the caller. Incidentally, whenever you take a message for someone, be sure to write it down and place it where the person will see it as soon as he returns.

Occasionally when you answer your own telephone, the person calling may not give his name. In such a case, it is important not to use a question which may seem peremptory, such as "Who are you?" or "Who's calling?", but one like the following:

"May I ask who is calling, please?"

"I am sorry, but I did not get your name."

Just the phrasing of the question will change it from one that may be resented to one that is willingly answered. This shows the importance of paying attention to smallest details.

Attending to Calls For Someone Else

If you are employed by a firm which has its telephones served by a private switchboard, keep in mind that being transferred from one telephone to another may be annoying to the person calling. No one likes to be obliged to repeat what he has to say to several different people before reaching the one who can attend to it. Therefore, if you yourself can attend to a call satisfactorily, always do so, instead of transferring it.

If you can not take care of the call yourself, there are several ways to handle it, as follows:

(1) You may say that you will refer the matter to the proper person. In some cases you will want to indicate that the person calling will be called back, while in other cases this will not be necessary.

Examples:

"That is something Mr. Brown looks after. If you wish, I will tell him about it, and I am sure he will give it prompt attention."

"That is something Mr. Brown handles. If you wish, I will refer it to him and ask him to call you back."

(2) You may offer to transfer the person calling to someone who can take care of his call.

Example:

"That is handled by our Credit Department. If you wish, I will have you connected with them."

(3) If you do not know who should handle the matter, inform the person calling that it is not handled by your department but that you will refer it to someone who will take care of it.

Example:

"I am sorry, but that is not handled in this department. If you wish, I will refer the matter to the proper person and ask him to call you back."

Whenever transferring calls, make sure that the person calling knows what you are doing. Signal the switchboard attendant and explain the situation to her so that she will not have to ask the person calling to repeat. For example,

"Will you please connect Mr. Smith (or, 'this call') with Mr. Brown in the Credit Department?"

Wait for the attendant's reply, to be sure she understands correctly.

Of course you will see that anything you have undertaken to have attended to does receive the necessary attention.

How to Introduce Yourself When You Are Calling

So far, you'll notice, you have been the person receiving a call. Now let's take it the other way around—you are the person calling and presenting yourself at the other person's telephone door. Although the situation is reversed, the underlying ideas are the same. You hope to make a good impression and to be greeted by a welcoming answer. But, whether you feel that the answer is welcoming or not, you want to make a good first impression by the pleasant way you introduce yourself.

If you stop to think of it, a self-introduction is an important matter—from your standpoint, anyway. As you are the caller, you are in the position of wanting something—either service, such as attention to your needs, or a hearing for whatever you may desire to promote or sell. In either case, your cause will be aided by genuine, well-expressed courtesy.

If the desired person answers and identifies himself, promptly announce your own name and, if desirable, your firm name. For example,

"This is Mr. Wood, of Curtis and Sons."

Wherever appropriate, it is helpful to combine a pleasant greeting with your announcement. For example,

"Good morning, Mr. Baker (or simply, 'Mr. Baker'), this is Mr. Wood of Curtis and Sons."

If the one who answers the telephone is not the person you want, or does not identify himself, ask pleasantly for that person. Unless your voice is recognized, it is usually helpful to announce your own name also.

Examples:

"May I speak to Mr. Baker, please? Mr. Smith calling."
"Mr. Smith calling. Mr. Baker, please?"

If you do not want any particular person, simply state your wishes in a nice way, preferably in the form of a request.

Examples:

"The Rug Department, please?"
"Will you please give me information regarding——?"
"Please take an order for——."

Incidentally, remember that it is always helpful to speak pleasantly to switchboard attendants, secretaries, and others upon whom you depend for further assistance. They—like everyone else—respond to "the voice with a smile."

Bad Impressions Are Sometimes Made Thoughtlessly

Perhaps you have had this experience—and annoyance. Your telephone bell rings—you answer—a secretary's voice says, "Just a minute, please. Mr. Jones wants to talk to you." Then a wait—and finally Mr. Jones comes to the telephone. Sometimes, you may not even be told who is calling.

Presumably Mr. Jones is busy and thinks he can save time by telling his switchboard attendant or secretary to get you on the telephone and then call him back. But he forgets that he is the one who asks the favor of your time, and that actually he requires you to waste your time—waiting for him. Perhaps, too, he doesn't realize that connections, including long distance, are now made so quickly that it's much more efficient to remain at the telephone, or be called to it as soon as the point is reached where the called person's telephone is being rung. This saves time, for both the people and the equipment involved. Furthermore, always being at the telephone, ready to greet the called person when he answers, is the courteous way to telephone and has much to do with what people think of you and your firm.

Of course, Mr. Jones' practice of having his secretary get people for him is followed without any intention of causing annoyance. If one stops to think of it, however, it does seem to be a bit inconsiderate. You might imagine the following somewhat parallel situation. It is wholly ridiculous, of course, but it illustrates the point. Mr. Jones, wishing to see you personally, marches with his secretary to your office, has his secretary ask your secretary for permission to notify you that he is calling, whereupon his secretary enters your office and asks you to remain at attention, while she returns to the outer office, procures Mr. Jones—if he is still there—and finally escorts him into your presence. A little comedy of secretarial manoevering!

It was a very busy executive who recently said, "My time is valuable, of course. But the time of people with whom I usually talk by telephone is also valuable. They don't like to be kept waiting by me any more than I like to be kept waiting by them. So the only sensible and fair thing is to be at my telephone, ready for the answer of the person I'm calling. And I appreciate being shown the same courtesy when the situation is reversed. The waiting time for the person calling is rarely longer than a few seconds, and it's time well spent."

Another Helpful Suggestion

Whenever possible, have paper, pencil, and business records at hand so that you can use them as needed during a call, without having to leave the telephone and keep the other person waiting. When it is really necessary to interrupt, first request permission of the other person and explain what you are going to do.

Examples:

"Will you hold the line, please, while I find out about that?"

"Will you excuse me just a moment, please, while I consult our records?"

Listen a moment to be sure you were understood and that there appears to be no objection.

When returning to the telephone, if there has been some delay in doing so, apologize for it or thank the other person for waiting.

Examples:

"Thank you for waiting, Mr. Smith."

"I am sorry to have kept you waiting, Mr. Smith."

Add a few words of explanation, if it appears desirable to do so.

In cases where it would require some time to secure the necessary information, or take the required action, offer to call the other person back later.

Examples:

"I am sorry, but it will take a little time to get that information. If you wish, I will call you back as soon as I have it."

"Would you like me to call you back as soon as I can get that information, or would you prefer to wait?"

What to Do When Away From Your Telephone

When you are to be away from your telephone, it is a good plan to leave word where you are going, how you can be reached—with the telephone number, if that is available—and when you probably will return. This is especially desirable if those who may answer the telephone in your absence are not qualified to speak for you.

The Little Matter of Replacing the Receiver

When you have finished your telephone visit, and courteously said "Good-by" or "Thank you," replace the receiver gently. Slamming the receiver might cause a sharp crack in the ear of the person with whom you have been talking. Since you would not "slam the door" after an actual visit, be just as careful in closing your telephone door.

Likewise, if at any time you have to lay down the receiver in order to have two hands free, while someone is waiting on the connection, it is better to place it gently on the desk or table rather than seeming to bang it down.

Some Other Important Little Things

As you know, people like to be addressed by their names, together with titles where appropriate. So, in your conversations, sound the personal, as well as courteous, note—"Mr. Brown," "Mrs. Thompson," "Dr. Baker," "Professor Courtis," "Colonel Smith," and so on. Likewise, the words "Sir," and "Madame," frequently are in good taste and most helpful for those who are in the business of rendering some form of service to others.

Little expressions of consideration, like "Thank you," "I am sorry," and "I beg your pardon," are jewels, when properly used, in the art of making good impressions. So, too, are such things as letting the other person finish without interruption, and avoiding argument or the display of impatience.

As to other details, such as the general character of your speech—the avoidance of slangy and slovenly expressions, and the use of good English—they are matters for each person to decide for himself. As a general rule, the most effective speech is that which is correct and at the same time natural and unaffected. The best manners are those which are in good taste and prompted by a genuine consideration for the feelings and convenience of others.

Your Telephone Number

Whenever you leave word for someone to call you, don't fail to leave your telephone number in addition to your name. And be sure that the person to whom you give it gets it correctly. That will save trouble for the one from whom you are asking the favor of a return call.

Indeed your telephone number is important. It should be featured as prominently as your address, on your stationery (social as well as business), billheads, promotional booklets, folders, etc., and in newspaper and other advertising.

Your number is needed by the reader of your letter, or advertising material, when he has the impulse to reach for the telephone. Displaying it freely will make it easy for customers to call you when making purchases or inquiries regarding your product or service, and likewise, easy for anyone else to get in touch with you promptly. It will also save them the trouble of searching for your name in the Directory or calling the Information Bureau. Those who are featuring their telephone numbers find that it pays. They know that many a message, many an order, has been lost because of the omission of a printed telephone number.

A Partner—Yours For Success

To find other ways of getting the greatest value out of your telephone, put yourself in the other person's place. "What would please me if I were at the other end of this connection?" Figure it out from that angle, as you think over your telephone habits.

Your success by telephone—like your general success—depends on your thoughtful effort and intelligent observance of certain fundamental principles. If you observe the simple requirements of good telephone technique, suggested in these pages, you will find, as many others have found, that your telephone will become more truly a partner—Yours for success.

The Voice With a Smile

HOW A BRIGHT SMILE LIGHTS UP A PERSON'S FACE! It makes it pleasant to look at, even though it may be a plain face. And how contagious a smile is! You usually respond with a smile of your own.

It's much the same with your voice. The voice with a smile wins! This well-known saying refers, of course, to the kind of voice you like to hear over the telephone—the kind operators are trained to use, to indicate their desire to serve you courteously.

Everyone wants to make a pleasing impression—over the telephone as well as face to face. Have you a good telephone personality? Perhaps you don't know. If you could only have a voice mirror, you could tell how you look to others when you visit them by telephone. You would be all the more sure that a good telephone appearance is wholly a matter of your voice and how to use it. Being handsome or homely makes no difference, and clothes don't count. You can have a good telephone personality if you'll be careful about just one thing—your speech.

This isn't difficult, as you'll see by reading these pages. Some of the suggestions are in fact so simple you may overlook them. Practice is necessary, however, for "practice makes perfect." But that doesn't mean a lot of long and tiresome exercises. A few minutes a day spent on voice grooming soon gives one the habit of clear and pleasing speech which, by telephone or otherwise, is necessary in order to—

Be easily and accurately understood, and
Make the good impression that brings a pleasant response

Some People Have Lazy Lips

To be easily and accurately understood it is necessary, of course, to speak distinctly. You do this if you pronounce your words carefully, giving proper form to each sound in every word.

Just try this: Open your mouth slightly—and now, hardly moving your jaw, or tongue, speak a few sentences.

You've heard people talk in just about that way, and probably had trouble in understanding them. They're suffering from stiff jaws, lazy lips, sleepy tongues. No wonder their words sound mumbled, shut in, or "swallowed," instead of being nicely formed and directed outward to the listener. Incidentally, in face to face conversation your facial expression will be much more interesting to others if your lips are mobile.

Many of us do get a bit careless and let our talking muscles get stiff. Like any other muscles they need limbering up to be really useful. Why not take a few exercises that will make it easier for you to speak clearly. You'll find suggestions for this purpose in later pages. In addition, just thinking about your speech helps a lot. Reading aloud at home and observing how other people speak are also good ways of becoming speech conscious.

How Fast Should You Speak?

Over the telephone it's more important to speak unhurriedly, as well as distinctly, than when face to face. This is because your listener cannot have the help of watching you, seeing your gestures and the changing expressions of your face. You save yourself and others a lot of time when you make yourself understood without having to repeat what you have said.

Some people used to think they had to talk fast over the telephone or their time would be up before they were through. Well, when talking at an ordinary rate a person averages about 378 words in three minutes. If you try to "talk a blue streak" the chances are you won't make yourself nearly as well understood, and will have to use up valuable time saying things over again.

Telephone speech should be neither too fast nor too slow. If too fast, words are jumbled, parts of words are lost to the ear, and bad sounding forms creep in—"wadjado," for "what did you do," and so on. If too slow, the words sound disconnected, and lose meaning and interest for the listener.

Ordinarily, the very act of speaking clearly will tend to prevent your talking too fast.

Speak Close to the Mouthpiece

Your voice is carried most clearly by telephone when you speak directly into the mouthpiece, with your lips not more than half an inch away. If you change this direction or widen this distance, some of the sound that ought to reach the listener will stray elsewhere instead of into the telephone.

It's just as important to speak directly into and close to the mouthpiece as it is to keep the receiver close to your ear. Your telephone should be located so conveniently, of course, that you can use it with ease, and without being disturbed or disturbing others.

When you speak into the telephone properly, no shouting or loud talking is necessary. Too loud talking may actually cause a blurred sound and make it difficult for the listener to hear and understand. The telephone is made to carry words spoken no louder than in ordinary conversation.

Your Voice is YOU

You wish to make your voice a faithful messenger of good will and to gain a pleasant response. But since you are not face to face with your listener, there is a tendency to let the voice become mechanical and without expression. Unfortunately, however, your only means of making a good impression is a pleasing tone of voice, together with a clear and correct way of speaking.

Your voice over the telephone is you. Though no smile or gesture can be seen at the other end of the wire, you can put a tone or a "sparkle" in your voice which will serve equally well. A mechanical sounding voice, however, is just as bad as an expressionless face.

The voice of the telephone operator has been mentioned as expressing an interested and helpful attitude. This kind of voice is being heard more and more in all lines of business and social activity. If you also are frequently in telephone touch with other people, you will find it helpful to study the difference between a voice having a "personal interest tone" (which is another name for the voice with a smile) and one lacking that expression of interest. This difference is suggested in the contrasting sets of words which follow.

The Voice Having Personal Interest Tone	The Voice Lacking Personal Interest Tone
Pleasant	Expressionless
Friendly	Mechanical
Cordial	Indifferent
Cheerful	Impatient
Interested	Inattentive
Helpful	Repelling

Test Others—And Yourself

The next few times you call up some business or professional places, pay special attention to the voices of the persons who answer the telephone. Which words in the two lists given above best describe their tones? Are you pleased by their voice attitudes?

After such tests, study your own voice. Try to hear it as others hear it, and rate it as frankly as you have rated these others.

The way your voice rises and falls, the way you show what is important by proper emphasis, the way shades of feeling appear in your voice—all these give color to your speech and help to make it pleasing and convincing.

Even the way you say the words you may use in answering the telephone is important. Suppose they are, "Robert Smith and Company." In these four words you can accomplish much. By a pleasant, questioning tone you seem to ask, "Is this the firm you are calling?" At the same time, by the helpful note in your answer, you ask "What can I do for you?" and imply that you are pleased to receive the call. All that in just four words! That's the kind of an answer the customers of Robert Smith and Company like to get.

Here's an important point about the voice with a smile. In addition to the pleasing effect upon the hearer, you get a pleasant reaction yourself. So, you see, you win in two ways.

Sounds That Go Wrong

You've probably noticed the way telephone operators pronounce certain numbers, such as "nien" for "nine." The reason is that several numbers sound much alike over the telephone and, unless spoken with special distinctness, cause misunderstanding and confusion. For example, five and nine may get mixed up; so may oh and four and eight; also, strange as it may seem, two and three.

How to make these and other sounds go right is shown in the following simple directions. You'll find them a big help, as absolute accuracy is necessary in understanding all numerals and letters in telephone numbers.

Numeral or Letter	Sounded as	Principal Sounds
0	oh	Round and long O
1	wun	Strong W, and N
2	too	Strong T, and long OO
3	thr-r-ee	A single roll of the R, and long EE
4	fo-er	Strong F, long O, and strong final R
5	fi-iv	I changing from long to short, and strong V
6	siks	Strong S and KS
7	sev-en	Strong S and V, well sounded EN
8	ate	Long A, and strong T
9	ni-en	Strong N, long I, and well sounded EN
10	ten	Strong T and N
J	jay	Strong J, and long AY
R	ahr	Strong R
M	em	Short E, and strong M
W	dubble-yoo	Full value given to every syllable
F	ef	Short E, and strong F

You'll notice that the suggested ways of saying several of the numerals are not just as the dictionary gives them. Practical experience, however, has shown that this is the easier and surer way over the telephone to avoid confusion with other numerals.

Your Mouth Is a Sound Instrument

To sound any particular note on a musical instrument requires a special position or action, such as pressing a violin string at exactly the right point and drawing the bow correctly. So, too, there is a special position or action of the lips, tongue or jaw for every sound used in speech. The lips sometimes close or take a slightly parted or rounded shape; the jaw moves up or down; the tongue moves into many positions.

These speech workers have a way of shirking on their jobs, however, unless we give them special attention. To insist on right mouth action for any sound is to make sure that that sound is formed rightly and uttered clearly.

Let's see how true this is. If you haven't made the following test before, you'll be astonished at the variety and importance of mouth action required to form the different sounds. Now—

Talk, Look, and Listen

Standing before a mirror, watch and listen to yourself while you say the vowel sounds in the way shown in the following list. Carefully note your mouth action while you say each vowel so that it sounds exactly right.

Vowels	Sounded	As In	Approximate Position of Mouth
A	ah	father	Open
A	ay	ate	Half open
A	aw	call	Open, lips slightly rounded
A	a	hat	Half open
E	ee	he	Almost closed
E	e	met	Slightly open
I	eye	kite	Open, then closing
I	i	it	Slightly open
O	o	hot	Open
O	oh	old	Open, lips round
U	oo	flute	Almost closed, lips slightly rounded
U	uh	hut	Half open
OI	aw-i	oil	Open, then closing
OU	ah-oo	south	Open, then closing

The movements of the jaw to produce the above mouth positions permit the tongue to take the necessary positions for the various sounds.

To make the consonant sounds shown in the next list is even more important. There is much more movement required of the tongue and lips, and the teeth have a part. Unless spoken strongly and distinctly, consonant sounds may not be heard at all or may easily be mistaken for others.

Breath Consonants	Voice Consonants	Nasal Consonants	Formed by
F	V		Lower lip against upper teeth
P	B	M	Lips
	W		Lips
	WH (as in "when")		Lips
T	D	N	Tip of tongue against upper gums
	L		Tip of tongue against upper gums
TH (as in "three")	TH (as in "then")		Tip of tongue against upper teeth
S (and soft C)	Z (as in "maze")		Tip of tongue almost touching upper gums
SH	Z (as in "azure")		Front of tongue almost touching upper gums
	Y (as in "yet")		Middle of tongue raised close to hard palate
CH	J (and soft G)		Tip and front of tongue against upper gums
	R (as in "run")		Sides of tongue against back teeth
K (and hard C and Q)	G (hard)	NG	Back of tongue against soft palate
X (as in "ax")	X (as in "exact")		Same as K followed by S, or G followed by Z

Practice further by reading or talking aloud, also in front of the mirror, to see how well you can use the correct mouth action in ordinary conversation. Continue to listen to your own voice intently, as you practice, so that you can detect any faults.

Probably the best "voice mirror" you have is your own hearing. Ask yourself frequently, "How do I sound?" Be honest with yourself. If you wish another check, try out your speech on someone whose judgment you value, and ask for frank criticism.

Try These Easy Exercises

If your speech is not as clear and distinct as it should be, here are some simple exercises for your lips, tongue and jaw which will make them flexible and more quick and sure to do their duties.

To exercise the lips: (1) extend them forward in open circular form; then let them relax and return to normal. Repeat several times. (2) Starting with lips closed, puff them apart with the breath, as for the sound of "p" in the word "part," and repeat this rapidly. (3) Repeat, adding the various vowel sounds, in order, as "pah," "pay," etc. (4) Again repeat, substituting the "b" sound, as, "bah," "bay," etc.

To exercise the tongue: (1) with mouth well open, curve tip of tongue upward to touch the gums just back of front teeth, and return to normal. Repeat several times, gradually speeding up. (2) Repeat, sounding "lah" each time tongue is lowered. (3) Again repeat, successively using the sounds "tah," "nah," and "dah."

To exercise the jaw: (1) drop the jaw, with muscles relaxed, far enough to permit inserting the thumb sidewise between the teeth. Return to closed position, and repeat several times. (2) Repeat, sounding the syllable "mah" each time the jaw is dropped. (3) Repeat, using the sounds "maw" and "moh." Avoid any forcing down or stiffening of the jaw. It should drop loosely.

Some Good Practice Sentences

Each of the following sentences has a grand mixture of vowels and consonants. Read them aloud, slowly enough to give every sound its proper value and to be conscious of your mouth action. They will give all-round exercise to your vocal apparatus and at the same time some mighty useful ideas to carry about with you.

It's a good plan to add other practice sentences, selected from your reading or made up by yourself. And then there are always those old tongue-twisters—like "Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers" and "She sells sea shells." They are very good exercises for stiff or lazy speech organs.

1. For distinct enunciation, every word, every syllable, every sound, must be given its proper form and value.
2. Think of the mouth chamber as a mold, in which the correct form must be given to every sound.
3. Will you please move your lips more noticeably?
4. The teeth should never be kept closed in speech.
5. As your voice is the most direct expression of your inmost self, you should be careful, through it, to do yourself full justice.
6. You may know what you are saying, but others will not, unless you make it clear to them.
7. Through practice, we can learn to speak more rapidly, but still with perfect distinctness.
8. Good speech is within the reach of everyone, through conscientious practice.
9. The courtesy of face to face conversation, where the smile plays such an important part, can be expressed, over the telephone, only through the tone of voice and a careful choice of words.

Finally, here is a thought which was expressed by Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone and one of the great voice teachers. It should prove especially valuable for use in practicing.

"Consonants give intelligibility to speech, but vowels give beauty of utterance. Consonants constitute the back-bone of spoken language—vowels the flesh and blood. You cannot do without them."

POPULATION PROBLEMS IN THE SOUTH

It is hard enough for people to get along together when they belong to the same family. Those of different families find it more difficult, and when there is a difference of nationality or race, it is more difficult still.* The United States has sometimes been called the "melting pot" of the world, which means that our population is made up of many different nationalities and races. Among this conglomerate population there are many differences, much misunderstanding, more or less "looking down" upon one another by the various groups, and not a little suspicion and hostility. So, while this mixture is probably an element of strength, at the same time it creates numerous population problems.

In the East there is the problem of the "foreign born"—millions of people of foreign birth, speaking different languages, and largely unaccustomed to American institutions. Their assimilation into American life and citizenship constitutes a real problem. On the West Coast there is the problem of some 200,000 Orientals—Chinese, Japanese, and Koreans. These are people of a different race and culture; they work hard and live more cheaply than Americans, hence they are keen competitors; they cannot readily be assimilated. While this group is relatively small, people have sometimes become excited about it and made it the center of heated political controversy. In the Southwest there is another population group that is not yet adjusted. This is composed of a million Mexicans, most of them laborers and agricultural workers. Because of various handicaps, they are often an exploited and neglected element in the population.

For two hundred years the South's most serious population problems have centered about the Negro. "Next to representative government," says Thomas Nelson Page, noted Southern writer, "this is today the most tremendous question which faces . . . the people of the United States." Of America's handling of this problem, Mr. Page says: "In dealing with this question in the past nearly every mistake that could possibly be made has been made."

THE FIRST GRAVE MISTAKE

Turning back the pages of history we see clearly that Page was right. The introduction of slavery was the first grave mistake. Not only was it morally wrong to make slaves of human beings; we see now that it was unwise as well, politically, economically, and in every other way. Many of the nation's founders saw it even then.

Looking at slavery on the moral side, Thomas Jefferson, himself a slave owner, said: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just." Contemplating its probable political effect, as a divisive issue in the life of the nation, George Washington said: "I can already foresee that nothing but the rooting out of slavery can perpetuate the existence of our Union." In 1818 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church declared that

* This difficulty, it seems, is due to the fact that people do not so readily understand those who are different from them, that they tend to be suspicious or fearful of those they do not understand, and finally that they foolishly assume that those who are different from them must necessarily be inferior.

slavery was "a gross violation of the most sacred and precious rights of human nature and utterly inconsistent with the law of God."

In 1816, in the hope of getting rid of slavery by freeing the slaves and restoring them to their native country, the African Colonization Society was established in the South. This movement was endorsed by several state legislatures and great sums of money were contributed to it by Southern people.

In 1832 the Virginia legislature came within one vote of abolishing slavery. Governor Edward Coles of Virginia, who had inherited some hundreds of slaves and was forbidden by state law to emancipate them, took them over to Illinois, set them free, supplied them with land, stock, and tools, and befriended them until they were self-supporting.

It is probable that neither Jefferson nor Washington realized how tragically true their prophecies regarding the effects of slavery were destined to be. For fifty years the issue was the center of bitter political controversy in the young republic, destroying its unity and threatening its existence. Finally the struggle culminated in the greatest misfortune in our history, the war between the states. Nearly four million members of a common country faced each other in battle, sometimes brother against brother. Four years they fought till 600,000 of the nation's finest young men were dead, and one whole section of the country lay prostrate, bankrupt, and desolate.

A NEEDLESS TRAGEDY

If slavery was a mistake, the means by which we ended it was, if possible, a greater one. We see now that the war could have been averted by the exercise of a little patience and restraint on either side, and that the problem could have been worked out on the basis of reason and justice, with much greater advantage to both sections and both races. Not only would such a course have saved the vast treasures of life and property that were destroyed by the war; it would also have averted the aftermath of sectional bitterness and division which, to some extent, continues even to this day.

Even President Lincoln saw this and declared in March, 1862: "In my judgment, gradual and not sudden emancipation is best for all." A noted federal officer, General Samuel Armstrong (later the founder of Hampton Institute), looking at the situation from the humane standpoint, said: "It is simply barbaric to whip the South and go home rejoicing, to build monuments of victory, leaving one-third of our countrymen in the depths of distress."

OTHER COSTLY BLUNDERS

But even the war, costly as it was, did not end the tragedy of errors. Reconstruction also was a succession of costly blunders, some of them wicked, others well meaning, but mistaken and stupid. To quote General Armstrong again: "The reconstruction measures were a bridge of wood over a river of fire."

It is a mistake, however, to hold the newly freed Negroes chiefly responsible for the wrongs of the reconstruction era. In fact the Negroes themselves were largely the victims of designing men who used them to get control of the Southern states.* In his book, THE NEGRO AND THE NATION, Merriam says: "Plenty of waste and mischief was wrought . . . Yet most of the plunder seems to have gone into the pockets of knaves of the superior race."

It is a mistake also to speak of Reconstruction as the period when the South was "controlled by Negroes," "under Negro rule," etc. Strictly speaking there was no such period. Though Negro voters outnumbered the whites in five Southern states, in every state these Negro voters elected white governors; in every state but one the legislatures they chose were predominantly white, three to one, five to one, even ten to one. The chief responsibility for Reconstruction, therefore, must be laid on white leaders, rather than on the Negroes whom they used to put them into power.

In fairness also it must be admitted that the reconstruction governments did some good things. For example, they all framed state constitutions which in most cases were retained for many years after reconstruction ended. They established in each state a genuine public school system, where before there had been only makeshifts. A Negro member of the South Carolina reconstruction legislature, speaking at the convention which disfranchised him, made this defense of the government of which he had been a part:

"We were eight years in power. We have built schoolhouses, established charitable institutions, built and maintained the penitentiary system, provided for the education of the deaf and dumb, rebuilt the jails and courthouses, rebuilt the bridges, and reestablished the ferries. In short, we have reconstructed the state and placed it upon the road to prosperity, and at the same time, by our acts of financial reform, we transmitted to the Hampton government an indebtedness not greater by more than two and a half million dollars than was the bonded debt of the state in 1868."

In his history of the United States, Rhodes says of a Negro member of the Mississippi legislature: "John R. Lynch was a credit to his race and in 1872 made an impartial and dignified speaker of the House." In 1873 Lynch was given a public testimonial by Republicans and Democrats, and the leading white newspaper, the Jackson Clarion, said of him: "His bearing in office had been so proper, and his rulings in such marked contrast to the partisan conduct of the ignoble whites of his party who have aspired to be leaders of the blacks, that the conservatives cheerfully joined in the testimonial."

UNUSUAL RECORD OF LOYALTY

In this connection we might well remember also the Negro's record of loyalty to the white people of the South during the war. Of this record Page says: "No race ever behaved better than the Negroes behaved during the war. Not only were there no massacres and no outbreaks, but even the amount of defection was not large. Not only did they remain loyal, but they were nearly always faithful to every trust that had been confided to them." In a notable tribute to this same record Henry W. Grady says: "History has no parallel to the faith kept by the Negro in the South during the war.... I rejoice that when freedom came to him after years of waiting, it was all the sweeter because the black hands from which the shackles fell were stainless of a single crime against the helpless ones confided to his care."*

* Some of these men were plainly self-seeking grafters; some were well-meaning but misguided zealots; some, no doubt, were sincere patriots seeking to make the best of a bad situation.

In contrast with the disorders usually following great social upheavals —as for example the French Revolution—the Negro's conduct after emancipation was also worthy of note. By the Thirteenth Amendment nearly 4,000,000 slaves were set free, most of them illiterate, without property, and untrained in self-direction and self-support. Yet there were no outbreaks, no serious disorders, no efforts to get revenge, "no reign of terror," such as often accompany revolutions. Page says that no serious trouble developed till the Negroes "were worked on by the ignorant and designing class who in one guise or another became their teachers and leaders." When asked how the Negroes had conducted themselves after the war the Confederate leader, General John B. Gordon, replied: "The remark is not uncommon in Georgia that no other race on earth relieved from servitude under such circumstances would have behaved so well."

ALL SECTIONS RESPONSIBLE

In contemplating past mistakes in dealing with the race question, let us remember that all sections of the country, North as well as South, must share the responsibility. If slaveholding centered largely in the South (because it was more profitable there), the slave trade centered in New England. Rhode Island, for example, built 103 slave ships in ten years; in 1770 that state alone had 150 ships engaged in the slave trade. When slaveholding became an issue, the extremists on one side were just as unreasonable as those on the other, and did just as much to make a rational settlement impossible. Neither is it necessary at this distance to "blame" anybody for what happened. It is just as well, and much kinder, to assume that most people meant well, on whichever side they were, and that the wrongs they did were mistakes of judgment rather than of intent.

Just the same it must be clear, as Page says, that our past dealing with this question has been full of costly mistakes. It is also evident, as he says again, that this problem is still one of the "most tremendous" which confronts the South and the nation. Hence it seems important that young people in the schools preparing for citizenship give serious study to this matter, so that in the future it may be handled more wisely than in the past and with less loss and greater advantage to all concerned. With that purpose, let us look now at some of the more important aspects of the present situation.

POPULATION TRENDS

In 1930 the Negro population of the United States numbered 11,891,143, or a little less than one-tenth of the total population. Of these, 8,805,635 were in thirteen Southern states and 3,085,508 were in other sections of the country.

In the previous ten years, 1920-1930, the net increase in Negro population was 1,428,012. It is notable, however, that in the thirteen Southern States the increase was only 364,529, or five per cent, while in other sections it was 1,063,483, or sixty-three per cent. This looks strange, but it was due to the fact that nearly a million Negroes went north during the prosperous twenties, lured by the hope of industrial employment. The most rapid gains were in the great cities of the East and North, so that today the five cities having the largest Negro population are all north of the Potomac River.

Meantime the white population of the country increased somewhat faster than the colored, so that the proportion of Negroes in the total was smaller in 1930 than ever before in the nation's history. In 1790 this proportion was 19.3%, or practically one in five; in 1930 it had fallen to 9.7%, or not quite one in ten. The proportion of Negroes in the South also has been steadily decreasing. In 1880 it was 36 per cent, or more than one in three. In 1900 it was 32.3 per cent; in 1920, 26.9 per cent; and in 1930 24.7 per cent, or a little less than one in four.

The same trend is found in every Southern state, with a single exception.* The population of South Carolina, for example, which was 58% colored in 1900, was only 45% colored in 1930. Meantime, between 1900 and 1930, the percentage of Negroes in the population of the other Southern states had gone down as follows: Mississippi from 58.5 per cent to 50.2 per cent; Louisiana, 47.1 to 36.9; Georgia, 46.7 to 36.8; Alabama, 45.2 to 35.7; Florida, 43.7 to 29.4; Virginia, 35.6 to 26.8; North Carolina, 33 to 29; Arkansas, 28 to 25.8; Tennessee, 23.8 to 18.3; Texas, 20.4 to 14.7; Maryland, 19.8 to 16.9; Kentucky, 13.3 to 8.6. We see, therefore, that the common opinion that Negroes are increasing faster than white people is far from true. They are not even keeping up.

The rapid movement of Negroes to other sections of the country is significant also. It tends to relieve the tension in the South, and at the same time it is giving the problem a national aspect that may help toward its solution.

PROGRESS SINCE EMANCIPATION

Since their emancipation in 1865, the progress made by American Negroes has been remarkable. Some commentators say it has been more rapid than was ever shown by any other group in an equal length of time. This is probably true, when one considers their poor start, limited opportunities, and heavy handicaps.

Though most of them were penniless when set free, it is estimated that Negroes now possess property valued at more than two billions of dollars.

* The single exception is Oklahoma, which had seven per cent of Negro population in 1920, and 7.2 per cent in 1930.

This includes more than 20,000,000 acres of land. In 1930 there were 882,850 Negro farm operators. Of these 181,016 were owners and part owners, with farm property worth more than $350,000,000. In the preceding year Negro farmers produced 32% of all the South's cotton, 25% of its sweet potatoes, 19% of its tobacco, and 16% of its corn.

In 1930 eighty per cent of Negro men and thirty-eight per cent of the women (including boys and girls over ten) were gainfully employed in hundreds of occupations and trades. Of these, many thousands were listed by the Federal census as owners, managers, foremen, and overseers. They were conducting more than 25,000 retail stores, with sales aggregating $100,000,000 a year. Engaged in the various professions were 351 technical engineers, 361 chemists, 430 artists, 545 photographers, 1,038 social workers, 1,247 lawyers, 2,146 dentists, 3,805 physicians and surgeons, 4,130 actors, 5,728 trained nurses, 10,533 musicians, 25,034 clergymen and 54,683 teachers.

In recent years the race has made great gains in health. Between 1910 and 1930 their death rate per thousand decreased from 24.2 to 16.5. In ten years their average life span increased from forty-one years to forty-six. These gains without doubt were due largely to education, with increasing emphasis on hygiene and sanitation.

The educational progress of the race is best shown by the decrease of illiteracy (inability to read and write) from an estimated ninety per cent in 1865 to sixteen per cent in 1930. The 1930 census reported 2,477,311 Negro children attending school. About 22,000 are in college and more than 20,000 have won college degrees, many of them with honors. Hundreds have achieved notably in music, art, and literature, and have made valuable contributions to American culture. Others have won distinction in science and invention. On the whole the record is highly creditable and justifies great hope for the future progress and usefulness of the race.*

GRAVE PROBLEMS FOR BOTH RACES

Along with these evidences of progress, however, there still exist among Negroes many conditions that constitute grave problems for both races. One of the commonest and most serious of these is poverty. Though the aggregate wealth of the group is large, the great majority of Negroes are still poor and dependent. Many of them own practically nothing, their earnings are uncertain and very meager, and their standards of living low. Most of them occupy rented houses without modern conveniences and often unfit for human habitation. Insufficient clothing, poor food, and unsanitary surroundings sap their vitality and encourage disease. Scant

* A general survey of Negro progress since emancipation—in property ownership, industry, business, education, religion, health, literature, and art—will be found in "America's Tenth Man," "Recent Trends in Race Relations," and "Singers in the Dawn." Personal or library copies of these should be available to every student making this study.

 In 1930 there were 2,803,756 Negro families in the United States; of these, 2,050,217, or 73 per cent, were living in rented houses.

hope for the improvement of their condition tends to destroy ambition, discourage energy, and lower efficiency.

WAGES AND PUBLIC WELFARE

The low wage scale of most Negro workers is a serious element in this problem. Low wages for any group mean, of course, that they have little purchasing power and that their standards of living are low. This in turn means less business for those they buy from. At the same time the competition of this low wage group tends to lower the wages and living standards of all other workers. So everybody suffers together, white and colored, business people as well as wage earners.* This is doubtless one reason why the wealth of the Southern states averages only $1,785 per person, while in the rest of the country the average is $3,609—more than twice as great. There is no ready-made answer to this problem, but intelligent people may well begin to consider it seriously.

FARM TENANCY

Of the 882,850 Negro farm operators reported by the 1930 census 700,911 were landless renters and tenants. Only one in two hundred of these families had a telephone and but one in three hundred had water and lights in the home. More than three-fourths of their houses were valued at less than $500 each. Yet in 1929 these Negro farmers produced crops and food stuffs valued at 643 millions of dollars. Had their conditions been such as to favor ambition and efficiency, their productiveness and their value to society undoubtedly would have been much greater. There are also 1,954,137 white farm tenants, making a total of some 2,600,000 farm tenant families, comprising twelve million people.

At last we are beginning to realize the magnitude and seriousness of this problem and to look about for a solution. The governments of Ireland, Denmark, Finland, and other European countries have remedied similar conditions of tenancy, poverty, and dependence by making farm ownership possible on easy terms. A similar program in this country has been authorized by Congress and funds have been appropriated to begin it.

POOR HEALTH AND HIGH MORTALITY

Of late the health of Negroes, as stated before, has shown decided improvement. With all that, however, the rates of Negro morbidity and mortality (long names for disease and death) are still much too high. In 1927 the annual Negro death rate was 17.5 per thousand, while that of white people was only 10.8 per thousand. This means that Negroes were dying at a rate 62% higher than white people. In 1930 their death rate was 16.5 per thousand, which still was more than 50 per cent higher than that of white people. In a number of states and in many cities it was twice as high. Vicksburg, Mississippi, reported the highest death rate, 43.4 per thousand; Little Rock, 35; Charleston, 33; Lexington, Kentucky, 32.9; Shreveport, 32.1; Columbia, S. C., 30; Macon and Savannah, Georgia, and Greenville, S. C., 26.

* Speaking of the efforts people sometimes make to keep others down, Dr. Booker T. Washington used to say: "It isn't possible to hold another man down in the ditch without staying down there with him."

Tuberculosis is one of the commonest diseases among colored people, their yearly death rate from this cause averaging 193 per hundred thousand. The rate varied greatly in the different states, but in every case was two to five times as high as the tuberculosis death rate among white people. Since this disease is largely preventable and curable, it is evident that health agencies have not given proper attention to its prevalence among colored people.

Infant mortality (the death of babies under one year of age) was 99.5 for every thousand Negro children, as compared with 59.6 for white infants. This higher rate was due to a variety of causes—unsanitary surroundings, poor medical attention at birth and later (a great number of Negro mothers have no physician at the birth of their children), improper food because of ignorance and poverty, and lack of maternal care due to the fact that so many Negro mothers have to go out to work.*

CONSEQUENT ECONOMIC LOSS

All this means, of course, that there is a great deal more sickness among Negroes than among white people. This, in turn, means corresponding loss of time, reduction of efficiency and producing power, and heavy expense for the care and treatment of the sick. This loss to society runs every year into hundreds of millions of dollars; yet much of it is due to preventable illness and could be saved by more efficient public health services. Unfortunately, these services are frequently limited largely to white people, though obviously it is the Negroes who need them most. For example, public health clinics, dental examinations, and inoculations against contagious diseases are much more general in white than in Negro schools. Hospital facilities for Negroes are meager and often entirely absent. This, of course, means that Negroes have a poorer chance to be healthy than white people, and that disease and death are commoner among them.

FROM ALLEY TO AVENUE

Here again everybody suffers, white people as well as black, for many diseases are contagious, and, as someone has said, "disease germs do not respect the color line." Every day, according to the 1930 census, more than a million Negro cooks, laundresses, and maids go into the homes of white people to prepare their food, wash their clothes, and care for their children.* In so far as these domestic helpers live in unsanitary, disease-breeding slums (as many of them do, not from choice but from necessity), the contagion of the alley will certainly spread to the avenue. Hence, for the protection of all its people, irrespective of race, the wise community will take steps to abolish its slums, provide decent homes amid sanitary surroundings, and guard with equal care the health of all its citizens.

* A committee of prominent women, investigating the living conditions of Negroes in Atlanta, found three small children out on the street in front of their home. One of the children, a baby, was asleep on the ground. The committee learned that the mother, going away every morning to work for white people, locked the children out of the house for fear they might be burned to death. The committee provided a day nursery and turned it over to a group of competent colored women to operate. Now no Negro child in that neighborhood has to sleep in the street while its mother goes to work.

Unfortunately, most communities are not yet awake to the importance of taking these necessary steps. In general, Negro housing in both city and country is notoriously poor, the streets in Negro sections are likely to be unpaved and poorly lighted, the sewers often end where the Negro section begins, water and bath tubs in the houses are the exception rather than the rule. Yet in proportion to the value of the property they occupy, Negroes commonly pay higher rents than any other group. These are problems to which the rising generation of citizens may well give attention, North as well as South. The recent work of the Federal government in slum clearance and the provision of modern housing is an encouraging step in this direction. In view of the magnitude of the need, however, it is only a beginning.

THE PROBLEM OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Another problem of citizenship peculiar to the South is that of public education for Negroes. Our ancestors who established public schools believed that every child was entitled to a reasonable opportunity for education. They realized also that a sound democracy was impossible without an educated citizenship. But there were many children whose parents were not able to pay for private education. So, in harmony with the American ideal, a system of public schools was provided for in which the poorest child should have the same chance as the most fortunate. The law of every Southern state distinctly says that this shall be true, whether the child is white or colored.

In relation to Negro children, however, this law is rarely carried out. The average expenditure of public school money throughout the Southern states is nearly four to one in favor of the white child—$44.31 for each white child enrolled and $12.57 for each colored child. Following are the figures for eleven Southern states for the year 1929-30 as given by Prof. Fred McCuistion, of Arkansas, in a report entitled, "Financing Schools in the South."

PUBLIC SCHOOL EXPENDITURES PER CHILD ENROLLED, 1929-1930

State	White	Colored
Alabama	$36.43	$10.09
Arkansas	38.15	13.02
Florida	57.16	14.45
Georgia	35.42	6.38

* According to the census of 1930 there were 1,576,205 Negroes engaged in domestic service in the United States.

Louisiana	67.47	16.54
Maryland	64.86	43.16
Mississippi	45.34	5.45
North Carolina	40.07	15.71
Oklahoma	43.86	34.25
South Carolina	60.06	7.84
Texas	38.76	16.02

The figures above, of course, are only averages. The extremes found in hundreds of counties run as high as ten, twenty or even thirty to one in favor of the white child. The student can probably find many of them in the report of his own State Department of Education.

In many counties less is spent on the Negro schools than the amounts the state has given those counties on account of their Negro school children. In such cases, the white schools get their full share of state funds, all the school funds raised within the county, and also a considerable share of the state funds sent down for the Negro child. One state superintendent reported recently that more than four-fifths of the counties in that state were thus diverting to white schools $1,200,000 of funds sent down to them on account of Negro children. In another state the amount thus diverted in a recent year appears to have been more than $600,000. Thus it comes about that in counties with many Negro children their schools are often neglected and the white schools are generously provided for, largely from funds the county received because of its Negro children.

Some of the states, happily, have recently enacted laws to curb this practice, but it is still widely prevalent in others.

Buildings and equipment for Negro schools are usually inferior. Many thousands of Negro children go to school in buildings unfit for use—tumble down churches and lodge rooms, log cabins, abandoned tenant houses, with roofs leaking, windows broken out or closed only with solid shutters, benches without backs, no desks or tables, stoves rotting with rust, and walls too flimsy and open to keep out the cold.* Shorter school terms for Negro schools are not uncommon; consolidated schools for Negroes are practically unknown in most states. Some counties expend solely on bus transportation of white children more than they expend for all purposes on their Negro schools.

These conditions illustrate the heavy disadvantage under which the Negro child labors to get an education. Evidently such an unequal distribution of school funds violates the fundamental theory of the public school system.* One may question also whether it is not poor policy from the standpoint of the general welfare. Can people with little or no education be as efficient, as productive, and as law-abiding as if they had received greater advantages? Does not the whole community suffer as a result of their neglect? It is obvious, of course, that these conditions cannot be changed in a day, but the question is so serious as to challenge the conscientious attention of every citizen interested in the general welfare and in justice to a minority group.

PARKS AND PLAYGROUNDS

The same problem of the equitable distribution of public benefits and services between the two population groups appears also in many other forms. The cities provide public parks and playgrounds to afford opportunity for normal recreation. These are especially necessary for city children, most of whom live in sections so crowded that normal opportunities for play are impossible. Of all the population, Negro children are worst off in this respect; hence of all the children in the community, they are most in need of public recreation grounds.

Yet, strange to say, most cities and towns make little or no provision for this need on the part of colored children. Here, for example, is a big Southern city, with 90,000 Negroes making up a third of its population. For white people it has 1,300 acres of parks valued at more than three million dollars. For the exclusive use of its 90,000 Negroes it has only one park of fourteen acres, valued at $41,000.

This again is not a matter which concerns the Negro alone. It affects also the whole community, for the child without opportunities for wholesome play is much less likely to grow up into good citizenship; much more likely to become a problem and a menace to society. Leaving aside the question of justice to the Negro children, would it not also be good policy for every community to see that they are provided with ample opportunities for normal recreation? Would it not pay in better citizenship, better health, greater efficiency, and higher moral standards on the part of the Negro population?

Similar problems are found in relation to nearly all other public services—public libraries (often wholly inaccessible to Negroes), sewers which frequently end where the Negro section begins, street paving and lights, public health activities of city and county, clinics in the schools, etc.

* Discrimination against the Negro child in the expenditure of public money is sometimes defended on the ground that Negroes do not pay a great amount of taxes. But there are also a great many white people who pay little or no taxes; yet nobody would think of giving their children poorer schools on that account, while providing excellent schools for the children of the well-to-do. Furthermore, one may ask whose labor really pays the tax, that of the landlord, or that of the people who work his land and rent his houses?

 Apparently there is a close connection between ignorance and crime. Some time ago the University of North Carolina made a study of 1036 Negro convicts in 33 prison camps. More than a third of these convicts were found to be totally illiterate and eighty-three per cent were unable to read newspapers. Not one of them had gone to high school.

THE ATTITUDE OF OFFICERS

In many communities a serious problem is found in the attitude of officers of the law toward Negroes. Vested with considerable authority and with guns to enforce it, officers are not always as courteous and considerate as they might be in dealing with the public in general. Negroes, being largely without influence and political power, are the chief sufferers. They are often arrested and thrown into jail for insignificant offenses and on the barest suspicion. They may be threatened and tortured to extort a confession or testimony against others. Then they may be convicted and sentenced to prison or to death solely on evidence thus secured.* In court people are assumed to be innocent till they are proved guilty, but with Negroes it often works the other way.

Not infrequently, in the process of arrest, Negroes are beaten and sometimes shot and killed. In a Southern city a dozen Negroes were thus killed by police in a recent year. None of these killings was thoroughly investigated and none of the officers who committed them was reprimanded. A Negro discovered prowling in a used car lot was shot to death by police as he ran to escape arrest; a blind Negro was shot to death in his home by two officers who went to arrest him; a Negro of excellent reputation was taken from his home by police at three o'clock in the morning on a trumped-up charge and at four was delivered by the officers to the hospital severely beaten and practically dead of three pistol shots—these are some of the cases that have recently come to light in that particular city.

Such things are so common that Negroes in many places look upon white policemen as their natural enemies and expect no justice at their hands. It would seem that mayors, police committees, and grand juries should watch keenly for police injustice and promptly and properly punish any officers found guilty of it. In the effort to improve this condition more than a dozen Southern cities have tried the appointment of colored detectives and police to serve in the Negro sections. Officials of these cities report that the plan has been found helpful in keeping order and in retaining the confidence and cooperation of the Negro community. This is another of the problems which boys and girls in school today will be called upon to face as citizens a few years hence.

* As this is written, (November, 1936), a former governor of Mississippi is fighting for the lives of three Negroes sentenced to death on evidence said to have been secured in this way. In setting aside this verdict the United States Supreme Court said: "The rack and torture chamber may not be substituted for the witness chair."

 Among Southern or border cities reported as using Negro police are Baltimore, Washington, Louisville, Knoxville, Memphis, Tampa, St. Louis, Kansas City, Austin, Beaumont, Houston, Galveston, Muskogee, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, and a number of smaller places. Several larger Southern cities have Negro probation officers to work with the juvenile courts, and a few have colored policewomen.

MURDER AT THE HANDS OF THE MOB

A problem peculiar to America ("peculiar" in the sense that it is found in no other part of the world) is that of lynching—the murder of people by mobs. Among right-minded people there is no difference of opinion about this practice; everybody condemns it—ministers, educators, editors, statesmen, intelligent, thoughtful men and women in all walks of life. In a recent address the Southern Methodist bishops said: "We especially urge that everything possible be done to prevent lynchings, which are no less a disgrace to those who engage in them than they are an outrage upon the helpless victim." Every year the Southern Baptist Convention pronounces a severe indictment of this crime, and from time to time the other great churches do likewise. Recently more than 40,000 white women have enrolled in the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. Each of these women has personally signed a repudiation of lynching for any cause whatever and a pledge to do everything in her power to abolish it.

Happily all this is having its effect and the lynching habit is slowly passing out. Lynchings are still frequent enough, however, to be recognized around the world as a characteristic American custom, marking us as excitable, brutal, and only partly civilized. Though nearly everybody condemns lynching, there are still people here and there who think it sometimes necessary. These people need to be informed. They should know such facts as the following, which were revealed by careful investigation of the eighty-four lynchings that took place in the five years ending with 1935:

1. Eleven per cent of the eighty-four persons lynched were not even accused of crime.

2. Many others equally innocent were lynched because of unfounded suspicion, false accusation, and mistaken identity.

3. Another large proportion of mob victims were accused only of minor offenses, some of them even trivial.

4. Numbers of those lynched for homicide were found to have killed in self-defense. If they had been white men, they would have been held guiltless.

5. Crimes against women, actual or attempted, were charged in only one-fourth of the lynchings of the past five years, and in these cases a number of those lynched were found to have been falsely accused.

But even if all mob victims were worthy of death, lynching would still be wrong. It exalts anarchy above law, and thus strikes at the very foundations of ordered society. "Every lyncher," said the great Mississippian, Bishop Charles B. Galloway, "becomes a law-despiser, and every law-despiser is a betrayer of his country."

In America there is no issue of greater importance than that of abolishing lynching. Every good citizen should exercise his utmost influence to that end.

PEONAGE

Another occasional practice for which there can be no defense is that of "peonage," or debt slavery. This means that Negroes who get in debt to landlords and employers are sometimes held in servitude by force and intimidation, on the pretext of working out their debt. Some years ago a prominent Georgia planter, under suspicion of holding Negroes in peonage, was convicted of killing or causing the death of eleven Negro farm hands to keep them from testifying against him. In November, 1936, a city marshal in Arkansas was fined $3,500 for holding eight Negroes in enforced slavery.* About the same time four men were arrested in Florida, charged with holding Negroes in peonage in a turpentine camp. A Louisiana planter convicted recently on a similar charge defended himself by saying that he was only doing what everybody else did. This, of course, was not true, but it indicates that in some sections the practice is not uncommon. It is very difficult for the courts to break it up, because the victims of peonage are usually afraid to testify.

THE BALLOT

No study of this kind would be complete without a consideration of the problem of Negro suffrage. The Fifteenth Amendment, ratified March 30, 1870, provides that "the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." This amendment does not mean that every person must be allowed to vote, irrespective of his fitness to do so; it leaves each state free to decide what qualifications for suffrage shall be required. It does mean, however, that these qualifications should apply equally to all citizens, and that no one who can meet them should be denied the ballot merely because of his race.

Nevertheless, in many sections Negroes, even when intelligent and well educated, are kept from voting by one means or another. Most of the Southern states, for example, provide that voters must be able to read and "interpret" the constitution of state or nation to the satisfaction of the election officers. If they see fit to do so, these officers can refuse to accept the most intelligent interpretation. Thus the best educated Negro in the community may be denied the ballot.

In many sections it is sufficient merely to let Negroes understand that they are not supposed to vote and that it may make trouble for them if they try to do so. Actual intimidation and violence are sometimes resorted to. The one-party system, based on the primary in which only white persons may vote, is another means by which Negroes are excluded, particularly in state and local elections. Thus, in some states and in certain sections of others, it comes about that few Negroes have any part whatever in the governments under which they live. Consequently, they have little or no political influence and no power to protect their interests.

* The Arkansas Gazette, leading daily paper, said of this case: "It was as grave an offense as could be committed in America against fundamental human rights."

A great many people are beginning to wonder whether a wiser way may not be found. Not everybody is competent to exercise the ballot, to be sure. It must be protected, of course, by suffrage limitations. But should not such limitations be applied equally to both races? Would good government be endangered by such a course, or would it be made stronger and more secure through increased loyalty on the part of the Negro group?

Dr. R. R. Moton, former president of Tuskegee Institute, expressed the Negro's view of this matter in the following words in a recent address at Peabody College, Nashville:

"Negroes would like to share in the government only in proportion to their merit, their ability, and their fitness. They have no desire for dominance. There are many Negroes who own property. They have something at stake in every state and county and town in the South. They are as anxious as any other citizen that their property be protected, and they are concerned for the best interests of the community. Therefore, they want to get the best man available to govern the community or the state or the nation. Here in Tennessee you might pick out the best colored man in the state as a candidate for governor and you could not get the Negroes of Tennessee to vote for him. They wouldn't want a Negro as governor. That is not lack of respect for their race, either. They would want as governor the man with the most experience and the best background, the man who is most representative of all the people. So you see after all, there is really nothing to fear from the Negro in politics."*

This problem of the suffrage is not simple, of course. In some sections it is much more difficult than in others. It cannot be solved overnight. However, it is one of the most important problems of our section, and those who are coming into citizenship must work it out in harmony with the public interest and the best traditions of our democracy.

JURIES AND COURTS

Similar to the question of the ballot is that of jury service for Negroes. In a case that was carried up from the Alabama courts in 1935 the Supreme Court of the United States set aside a verdict against a Negro on the ground that Negroes were systematically excluded from jury service on account of race. Governor Bibb Graves, of Alabama, immediately issued a statement in which he said: "Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land. . . . This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county in the State. Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America." He then advised the officials of every county to include in the jury rolls the names of Negroes who were qualified for jury service by intelligence and character. In cases involving Negroes, courts in many sections of the South are beginning to call one or more qualified Negroes for jury service. No unfavorable results have been observed. Negroes naturally feel that in this way their interests in the courts are better protected, and the white people concerned seem to recognize the fairness of this procedure.*

* The part taken by Negro voters in the last presidential election (November 3, 1936) tends to confirm Dr. Moton's statement. Though the Communists nominated a Negro for vice president, very few Negroes voted for him. Some stuck by their traditional loyalty to the Republican party, but the great majority voted for Roosevelt. In the last three elections the populous Negro district of Chicago has elected a Negro Democrat to Congress, defeating the Republican candidate who was also a Negro.

THE REAL QUESTION

In essence, all these civic problems reduce down to just two: (1) That of doing justice to a minority group, and (2) that of serving the best interests of all. The American people would like to do both, of course. Is it possible to do both at the same time, or must we sacrifice one to accomplish the other? That is the real question that future citizens must face.

There are some who think it necessary to deny the rights of the minority, to limit their opportunities, and "keep them down," in order to advance the welfare of the majority.

There are others who feel sure that no good can come from injustice, that in keeping others down we degrade ourselves, and that the best interests of all will be served by the highest welfare of each.

The former view is the theory of autocracy against which our Revolutionary forefathers revolted.

The latter is the theory of the American democracy which they established.

Which shall we follow in reference to 11,000,000 colored Americans?

---

* As a matter of fact Negroes are often at a disadvantage in the courts. Their guilt is more likely to be taken for granted, and they are sometimes convicted on insufficient evidence, merely because of this presumption of guilt. They are likely to get heavier sentences than white men convicted of similar offenses, and far more likely to be sent to the electric chair. A white man who steals a hundred thousand dollars has a much better chance of escaping punishment than a Negro who steals a hog. This is a well known weakness of American courts that ought certainly to be corrected.

MATERIALS FOR STUDY OF SOUTH'S POPULATION PROBLEMS

For several years a large number of representative Southern educators, meeting annually as the Conference on Education and Race Relations, have been emphasizing the need of a sound educational approach to the peculiar problems incident to the South's biracial population.

Since preparation for intelligent citizenship is an essential function of education, and since the most serious problems of citizenship in the South are connected with the interracial situation, they are convinced that schools and colleges can render the South a vastly important service by preparing future citizens to understand these problems and to solve them in wisdom and justice.

Of late, official curriculum study groups in many of the Southern states are recommending that units of teaching based on this problem be prepared for use in classes in American history, literature, education, civics, and sociology, and be made available for all the schools.

"Population Problems in the South" has been prepared in response to that suggestion, for use in classes in civics and American problems. It is available in quantity at thirty cents per dozen, or $2.00 per hundred. Other material available for the development of such a unit are:

"America's Tenth Man," a sixteen-page survey of the Negro's contribution to American civilization. More than 150,000 copies have been used in clases in American history. Samples free on request; $1.50 per hundred.

"Singers in the Dawn," a brief anthology of American Negro poetry. Sketches of forty poets, with selections from their work. 24 pages and attractive cover. Ten cents per copy. Quantity price to schools quoted on request.

"Southland Spirituals," sixty-four of the best known Negro melodies, words and music. All the old-time favorites. 64 pages and cover. Twenty-five cents.

"Songs of the South," an abridged edition of the above, containing seventeen of the most popular spirituals, words and music. Good paper, substantial cover. Ten cents per copy, $1.00 per dozen.

Envelope assortment, ten pamphlets, all different, four to sixteen pages each. The entire assortment, 86 pages, 10 cents.

Dear Sir:

During World War I Negroes made some substantial gains in things social and economic. Many of these gains were lost during the twenty years that followed. During the current war Negroes are registering gains that can be conserved only through struggle and some careful planning. Judging from the interracial tension that is everywhere manifest, opposition to Negro advance demands serious attention. So pronounced is this opposition becoming that An Interested White Southerner writes, "I want Negroes to get as much recognition as citizens-full fledged-as possible; I want them to hold as much of the gains made in this field as possible after the war. It is at the latter point that my concern arises. Unless Southern white people agree that this gain must be preserved, I am afraid for the future of Southern Negroes. Now and for the duration is our opportunity to convince the white South that the obvious minima of citizenship must be accorded during peace as well as for successful war. White and Negro leaders of the South should agree on ultimate goals, immediate objectives and strategy. When we have done this, we can work jointly and separately in carrying out our objectives."

This "Interested White Southerner" has suggested that a meeting of a few Negroes be called say, in Atlanta, where they could formulate proposals stating in concrete terms just what they desire of the White South. After Negroes themselves had agreed, a meeting of Southern white men and women could be called the next day to consider and discuss the proposals which we submit. The meetings of both whites and Negroes are to be "All Southern".

This letter of inquiry revolves around three important questions namely, are you interested in such a meeting? Would you attend, if possible? Do you look with favor on such a meeting. This "feeling out" letter is going to only one other prominent Negro in your state besides yourself. In case sentiment favors such a meeting, we would issue the call to two other prominent Negroes of your state whose names please submit in your favorable reply. Will you let me hear from you by return mail?

Dr. P. B. Young of The Journal and Guide has been the only person contacted on the matter to date, and he was favorable towards it. He and I thought that this "sounding out" letter should precede any further efforts along this line. This letter goes to about twenty prominent Negroes of the South and upon their estimates of the possibilities the whole matter rests.

Very truly yours,

Gordon B. Hancock

GBH:m

P. S. Our Interested Southerner adds, "The initiative should be taken by Southern Negroes. I can promise you cooperation from Southern white people."

Over 41,000 white women have repudiated lynching for any cause and have pledged themselves to educate against lynching in their communities. They come from the 13 Southern States and Missouri and West Virginia they live in 2,996 towns and small rural communities; they work in church societies and small clubs; they have secured the cooperation of 1,318 peace officers. Their number is steadily increasing.

Statement of Purpose

By

GORDON B. HANCOCK

Director

If as has been said, there are some hours of more than sixty minutes and some minutes of more than sixty seconds, surely we have come upon such a great moment in the history of our race and nation. It is a moment of great possibilities and not a little surcharged with drama. Many things have been spoken for him and against him, to him and about him; but the Southern Negro is today speaking for himself. His laudable attempt should be a source of pride to the Negro and white South, and to the Negro and white North, East, and West. Oftimes the little we do for ourselves proves more meaningful than the great things others do for us, however praiseworthy what others do, may be.

The Inception Of The Conference

The inception of this conference hinges about the tragedy that took place at the close of World War I, when returning Negro soldiers were met not with expressions and evidences of the democracy for which they had fought and for which thousands of their fellow race-men had died. Instead there was a sweeping surge of bitterness and rebuff that in retrospect constitutes one of the ugliest scars on the fair face of our nation. Interracial matters were left adrift and tragic was our experience and distressing was our disillusionment. Today the nations are locked in mortal combat and the situation is desperate and dangerous, with the scales of fortune so delicately poised that we dare not predict what a day may bring forth; but this we know, that the Negro is again taking the field in defense of his nation. Quite significant also is the fact that whereas the pronounced anti-Negro movement followed the last war, it is getting under way even before the issues of war have been decided. In an hour of national peril, efforts are being made to defeat the Negro first and the Axis powers later. Already the dire threat to throw again the Negro question into the politics of the South is becoming more and more dangerous. This is a direct challenge to the Negroes of the South, who have most to gain if this threat is throttled and most to lose if it is fulfilled.

The Purpose Of The Conference

The purpose then of this conference is to try to do something about this developing situation. We are proposing to set forth in certain "Articles of Cooperation" just what the Negro wants and is expecting of the post-war South and nation. Instead of letting the demagogues guess what we want, we are proposing to make our wants and aspirations a matter of record, so clear that he who runs may read. We are hoping in this way to challenge the constructive cooperation of that element of the white South who express themselves as desirous of a New Deal for the Negroes of the South.

In our Articles of Cooperation we are seeking for a common denominator of constructive actions for Negroes and this group of whites who are doing many of the things we want done, and cannot do ourselves. In other words we are proposing to draft a New Charter of Race Relations in the South. The old charter is paternalistic and traditional; we want a new Charter that is fraternalistic and scientific; for the old charter is not campatible with the manhood and security of the Negro, neither is it compatible with the dignity and self-respect of the South. It ever leaves the South morally on the defensive! The Negro has paid the full price of citizenship in the South and nation, and the Negro wants to enjoy the full exercise of this citizenship, no more and no less.

No Cleavage Desired

The purpose of this conference then is not secessionist. We of the South know full well that any attempt of the Southern Negro to secede from Negroes of other regions will be even more fatal and abortive than the attempt in the 1860's. Our major objective is accession not secession. This conference is not isolationist. Science, religion and education have doomed isolation and isolationism forever. If the Nations separated by the seven seas cannot be isolated how much less can the Negroes of the South. We know that the Negro question of the South is a part of the great question throughout the nation and world. We know that before the question is settled anywhere it must be settled everywhere. But we also know that constitutional ailments may often be helped by local measures. This conference is not seditionist. We are not meeting clandestinely in bundist fashion; but rather as citizens of the South and nation and well within our Constitutional rights and prerogatives. We therfeore need not cringe and crawl, tremble or truckle or even tip-toe, as we deliberate on a possible way to relieve a pressure that is already becoming critical.

Task Delicate, But Not Impossible

To be sure, our task is a delicate one, but delicate tasks are never impossible, if performed by men who are not themselves delicate in spirit. More often the firm handling of delicate issues proves the wiser course. The matter handled in Fanuel Hall was delicate, but it was firmly handled and the world thereby was blessed. So in this historic meeting today, whatever advance step we may make in race relations will rebound to the advantage of the South and nation no less than to the advancement of the Negro race. Let us bear ever in mind that the soul of the South and nation are at stake no less than the fortunes of the Negro race. The greater tragedy of critical situations lies not in the impairment of circumstances and fortunes, but of spirits. Should our just demands be denied by the white South, we can still appeal to the conscience of the nation; and failing here, we can appeal to the Supreme Court of History, before the Great White Throne of the Future. Oppressed groups of whatever persuasion have always the assurance that in their struggles for deliverance they have Time and Right and God on their side. As we enter upon our deliberations let us remember that not only is our manhood being weighed in the balance, but our statesmanship also.

The sponsors of this conference may not have fashioned the most well-wrought conference imaginable, but what they did was at a tremendous sacrifice; for none of them had the time and means to give as the cause demanded; but they did the best they could. We have brought to you a conference that is absolutely unfettered and unintimidated. There are no secret commitments, no secret understanding, no dotted lines, no secret financial underwritings. May God help us on this historic occasion to quit ourselves like men.

A Basis for Inter-Racial Cooperation and Development in the South

A Statement by Southern Negroes

—Issued December 15th, 1942, by a Sub-Committee of the Southern Conference on Race Relations

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status, and the welfare of the country as a whole.

With these problems in mind, we, a group of southern Negroes, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, and in the belief that we voice the sentiments of many of the Negroes of the Nation as well as the South, take this means of recording our considered views of the issues before us.

(1) Our Nation is engaged in a world-wide struggle, the success of which, both in arms and ideals, is paramount and demands our first loyalty.

(2) Our loyalty does not, in our view, preclude consideration now of problems and situations that handicap the working out of internal improvements in race relations essential to our full contribution to the war effort, and of the inevitable problems of post-war reconstruction, especially in the South where we reside.

(3) The South, with its twenty-five million people, one-third of whom are Negroes, presents a unique situation, not only because of the size of the Negro population but because of the legal and customary patterns of race relations which are invariably and universally associated with racial discriminations. We recognize the strength and age of these patterns.

We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races or classes or creeds, however, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework.

(4) We regard it as unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life.

(5) We have the courage and faith to believe, however, that it is possible to evolve in the South a way of life, consistent with the principles for which we as a Nation are fighting throughout the world, that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fears.

POLITICAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS

1. We regard the ballot as a safeguard of democracy. Any discrimination against citizens in the exercise of the voting privilege, on account of race or poverty, is detrimental to the freedom of these citizens and to the integrity of the State. We therefore record ourselves as urging now:

a. The abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting.

b. The abolition of the white primary.

c. The abolition of all forms of discriminatory practices, evasions of the law, and intimidations of citizens seeking to exercise their right of franchise.

2. Exclusion of Negroes from jury service because of race has been repeatedly declared unconstitutional. This practice we believe can and should be discontinued now.

3. a. Civil rights include personal security against abuses of police power by white officers of the law. These abuses, which include wanton killings, and almost routine beatings of Negroes, whether they be guilty or innocent of an offense, should be stopped now, not only out of regard for the safety of Negroes, but of common respect for the dignity and fundamental purpose of the law.

b. It is the opinion of this group that the employment of Negro police will enlist the full support of Negro citizens in control of lawless elements of their own group.

4. In the public carriers and terminals, where segregation of the races is currently made mandatory by law as well as by established custom, it is the duty of Negro and white citizens to insist that these provisions be equal in kind and quality and in character of maintenance.

5. Although there has been, over the years, a decline in lynchings, the practice is still current in some areas of the South, and substantially, even if indirectly, defended by resistance to Federal legislation designed to discourage the practice. We ask that the States discourage this fascistic expression by effective enforcement of present or of new laws against this crime by apprehending and punishing parties participating in this lawlessness.

If the States are unable, or unwilling to do this, we urge the support of all American citizens who believe in law and order in securing Federal legislation against lynching.

6. The interests and securities of Negroes are involved directly in many programs of social planning and administration; in the emergency rationing, wage and rent control programs. We urge the use of qualified Negroes on these boards, both as a means of intelligent representation and a realistic aid to the functioning of these bodies.

INDUSTRY AND LABOR

Continuing opposition to the employment of Negroes in certain industries appears to proceed from (1) the outdated notions of an economy of scarcity, inherited from an industrial age when participation in the productive enterprises was a highly competitive privilege; (2) the effects of enemy propaganda designed to immobilize a large number of potentially productive workers in the American war effort; (3) the age-old prejudices from an era when the economic system required a labor surplus which competed bitterly within its own ranks for the privilege of work; (4) the established custom of reserving technical processes to certain racial groups; and (5) craft monopolies which have restricted many technical skills to a few workers.

Our collective judgment regarding industrial opportunities for Negroes may be summarized as follows:

1. The only tenable basis of economic survival and development for Negroes is inclusion in unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled branches of work in the industries or occupations of the region to the extent that they are equally capable. Circumstances will vary so as to make impossible and impracticable any exact numerical balance, but the principles enunciated by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee are regarded by us as sound and economically essential.
2. There should be the same pay for the same work.
3. Negro workers should seek opportunities for collective bargaining and security through membership in labor organizations. Since there can be no security for white workers if Negroes are unorganized and vice versa, labor unions of white workers should seek the organization of Negro workers, on a fair and equal basis.
4. We deplore the practice of those labor unions which bar

Negroes from membership, or otherwise discriminate against them, since such unions are working against the best interest of the labor movement. We hold that only those labor unions which admit Negroes to membership and participation on a fair and democratic basis should be eligible for the benefits of the National Labor Relations Board, Railway Labor Act, State Labor Relations Acts and other protective labor legislation.

5. It is the duty of local, state and federal agencies to insist upon and enforce provisions for the industrial training of Negroes equal in quality and kind with that of other citizens. We believe, further, that Negroes should have equal opportunity in training programs carried on by industries and by labor organizations.

6. We urge Negro representation on regional organizations concerned with the welfare of workers.

7. We regard the wage-and-job-freezing order of the War Manpower Commission as holding the seeds of a distinct disadvantage to Negroes and other marginal workers. Most of these workers are now employed in the lowest-income job brackets. The "freeze" order can remove the opportunity for economic advancement. There is as yet no assurance that under existing circumstances the War Manpower Commission can deal more equitably by the Negro in the future than it has in the past.

8. We are convinced that the South's economic and cultural development can be accelerated by increasing the purchasing power and skills of Negro workers.

SERVICE OCCUPATIONS

Any realistic estimate of the occupational situation of Negroes supports the view that Negroes will be employed in greatest proportions for a long time in service occupations. We see, however, possibilities of making of these fields scientifically guided areas in which training and organization will play a greater part in bringing about results mutually beneficial to employer and employee. We believe that greater service will be rendered and greater good will be engendered in the service fields if the following principles are observed:

1. More thorough training should be provided workers who plan to enter the service field, but the reward of the job and treatment on the job should be such as to make the workers feel that their training is justified. Opportunity should be given the service worker to advance through the opening up of additional opportunities.

2. A wholesome environment, living accommodations, food, uniforms and rest rooms, all of an approved standard, should be provided service workers.

3. Opportunity should be given the service worker to live, after his stipulated hours of work, as an individual undisturbed in his private life by the whims and caprices of his employers.

4. In view of the strides made by labor in general, while the service worker's lot has remained about the same, service workers should be organized into unions with recognized affiliations.*

5. Service workers should be included in the provisions for old age insurance, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, the wage and hour act, and other benefits of Social Security legally provided to workers of other categories

We believe that these provisions will help to insure some intelligent service and wholesome loyalty (which will improve both the quality of labor and personal relations) in service occupations.

EDUCATION

As equal opportunity for all citizens is the very foundation of the democratic faith, and of the Christian ethic which gave birth to the ideal of democratic living, it is imperative that every measure possible be taken to insure an equality of education to Negroes, and, indeed to all underprivileged peoples.

1. Basic to improvement in Negro education is better schools, which involves expenditures by States of considerably more funds for the Negro schools. This group believes that a minimum requirement now is (a) equalization of salaries of white and Negro teachers on the basis of equal preparation and experience; (b) an expanded school building program for Negro schools designed to overcome the present racial disparity in physical facilities; this program to begin as soon as building materials are available; (c) revision of the school program in terms of the social setting, vocational needs and marginal cultural characteristics of the Negro children; and (d) the same length of school term for all children in local communities. Our growing knowledge of the effect of environment upon the intelligence and social adjustment of children, in fact leads us to believe that to insure equality of educational opportunity it is not enough to provide for the under-privileged child, of whatever race, the same opportunities provided for those on superior levels of familial, social, and economic life. We feel it a function of Government to assure equalization far beyond the mere expenditure of equivalent funds for salaries and the like.

2. The education of Negroes in the South has reached the point at which there is increased demand for graduate and professional training. This group believes that this training should be made available equally for white and Negro eligible students in terms defined by the United States Supreme Court in the decision on the case of Gaines versus the University of Missouri.

3. Where it is established that States cannot sustain the added cost of equalization, Federal funds should be made available to overcome the differentials between white and Negro facilities and between southern and national standards.

4. It is the belief of this group that the special problems of Negro education make demands for intelligent and sympathetic representation of these problems on school boards by qualified persons of the Negro race.

*In the present hysteria of many housewives who are losing poorly paid servants to better paying war industries, it seems desirable to emphasize that this proposal bears no relation to the fantastic and probably Axis inspired rumors of so-called "Eleanor Clubs."

5. The education of Negro youth can be measurably aided by the use of Negro enforcement officers of truancy and compulsory education laws.

AGRICULTURE

The South is the most rural section of the Nation, and Negroes, who constitute 33 per cent of its population, are responsible for an important share of the agricultural production on southern farms.

We recognize that the South is economically handicapped and that many of its disabilities are deeply rooted in agricultural maladjustments. To win the war, there is need for increased production of food, fibre and fats. In the present organization of agriculture, Negroes are a large part of the sharecropper and tenant group and a great majority of the rural Negro workers are in this class. Circumstances deny the Negro farmer sufficient opportunity to make his full contribution as a citizen. We suggest the following measures as means of increasing the production of the area, raising the status and spirits of Negro farmers, and of improving the region's contribution to the total war effort.

1. Establishment of sufficient safeguards in the system of tenancy to promote the development of land and home ownership and more security on the land, by:
   a. Written contracts
   b. Longer lease terms
   c. Higher farm wages for day laborers
   d. Balanced farm programs, including food and feed crops for present tenants and day laborers.
2. Adequate Federal assistance to Negro farmers should be provided on an equitable basis. The war effort can be materially aided if adequate provisions are made now for the interpretation of governmental policies to rural Negroes.
3. The equitable distribution of funds for teaching agriculture in the Negro land grant colleges to provide agricultural research and experimentation for Negro farmers.
4. The appointment of qualified Negroes to governmental planning and policy making bodies concerned with the common farmer, and the membership of Negro farmers in general farmers' organizations and economic cooperatives, to provide appropriate representation and to secure maximum benefits to our common wealth.

MILITARY SERVICE

We recognize and welcome the obligation of every citizen to share in the military defense of the nation and we seek, along with the privilege of offering our lives, the opportunity of other citizens of full participation in all branches of the military service, and of advancement in responsibility and rank according to ability

Negro soldiers, in line of military duty and in training in the South, encounter particularly acute racial problems in transportation and in recreation and leave areas. They are frequently mistreated by the police. We regard these problems as unnecessary and destructive to morale.

SOCIAL WELFARE AND HEALTH

1. We believe that some of the more acute problems of Negro health, family and personal disorganization are a reflection of deficiencies in economic opportunity, but that social and health services for Negroes will continue to be necessary in considerable amounts even with improvement of their economic status As a means of reducing the mortality and public contagion resulting from inadequacies of medical attention and health knowledge, this group believes that minimum health measures for Ngroes would include the following:

a. Mandatory provisions that a proportion of the facilities in all public hospitals be available for Negro patients;

b. That Negro doctors be either included on the staff for services to Negro patients, according to their special qualifications, or permitted as practitioners the same privilege and courtesy as other practitioners in the public hospitals;

c. That Negro public health nurses and social workers be more extensively used in both public and private organizations.

2. We advocate the extension of slum clearance and erection of low-cost housing as a general as well as special group advantage The Federal government has set an excellent precedent here with results that offer much promise for the future.

It is a wicked notion that the struggle of the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the Nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government.

The effect of the war has been to make the Negro, in a sense, the symbol and protagonist of every other minority in America and in the world at large. Local issues in the South, while admittedly holding many practical difficulties, must be met wisely and courageously if this Nation is to become a significant political entity in a new international world. The correction of these problems is not only a moral matter, but a practical necessity in winning the war and in winning the peace. Herein rests the chance to reveal our greatest weakness or our greatest strength.

Comments on the Conference Statement

DR. MORDECAI W. JOHNSON, President Howard University, Washington, D. C.

I am impressed at once with the fact that the statement is a judiciously worded address from southerners to southerners; that it includes representatives of labor, the press and many secular organizations, as well as the schools and the churches; and that the statement is designed to address itself to matters of immediate concern in which it is felt that substantial progress is possible now.

* * * *

DR. GUY B. JOHNSON, Research Professor, University of North Carolina.

I feel that this is a remarkable and a reasonable statement of aims upon which all intelligent people in the south should be willing to unite.

* * * *

DR. FLORENCE M. READ, President, Spelman College, Atlanta, Ga.

It is a statement that I think should have wide circulation.

* * * *

DR. W. A. FOUNTAIN, President, Morris Brown College, Atlanta, Georgia.

There is a great need for our taking steps to bring about improved relations between the races, and I am happy to have the privilege of serving in whatever capacity I can.

* * * *

JUDGE WILLIAM H. HASTIE, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War; Dean Howard University Law School.

I am impressed most of all with the fact that your detailed and carefully worked-out statement shows the fundamental agreement of Negroes throughout the country upon the next steps which must be taken toward complete emancipation.

* * * *

DR. SAMUEL C. MITCHELL, University of Richmond.

That is a statesmanlike paper. It is able, candid and effective. It should mark an epoch in the cause of good-will between the races in the South.

* * * *

CLAUDE A. BARNETT, Director, Associated Negro Press, Chicago, Illinois.

I am profoundly impressed by the statement which has been issued by the Southern Race Relations Conference. It is forceful, sane, practical and realistic.

* * * *

DR. BELLE BOONE BEARD, Department of Economics and Sociology, Sweet Briar College.

I have read every word of the statement with the greatest interest and want to congratulate the conference upon its action.

* * * *

LEWIS L. SCOTT, Attorney-At-Law, Columbia, Tennessee.

I wish to congratulate you and your associates on the very fine effort you have made in this movement to bring about an improvement in the much discussed race question. What you have said will not only contribute to the war effort but also to the making of a just peace.

* * * *

CARTER W. WESLEY, Editor-Publisher The Informer, Houston, Austin and Beaumont, Tex., Dallas Express and New Orleans Sentinel, and Fort Worth, (Tex.) Mind.

I think the conference statement is a historical achievement destined to play a large part in bringing about adjustments, and I believe it is a charter of Negro rights which all Negroes in the South can adhere to.

* * * *

FURMAN L. TEMPLETON, Racial Relations Adviser, Office of Civilian Defense, 3rd Civilian Defense Area, Baltimore, Md.

Although it was not my privilege to attend the conference in Durham, everything I have read about it leads me to believe that the work initiated there gives every promise of developing into an effective force for good. If there was ever a time when the country needed a clear-cut intelligent and objective statement of the problem of race relations, that time is now. It appears to me that the conference findings supply that need.

* * * *

DR. FRED M. ALEXANDER, Supervisor of Negro Education, State Board of Education, Richmond, Virginia.

I have read this pamphlet with great interest and feel that you have done an outstanding job.

WM. E. TAYLOR, Dean, School of Law, Lincoln University, St. Louis, Missouri.

The suggestions, proposals and recommendations seem to me unusually sound and forward looking. For quite a while now I have been convinced that unless some of the sensible leaders of our race step to the front and take a statesmanlike stand based upon realities and conditions as they exist rather than the Utophian possibilities of which we dream our race will suffer irreparable injury before the close of the present conflict.

• • • •

DR. JACKSON DAVIS, General Education Board, New York.

The report is straightforward and factual and the restraint of its phrases carries conviction. It reveals an understanding of the historical background of Southern life, as well as the social and economic processes through which the desired changes must be realized. To my mind it is one of the most constructive steps ever taken for better race relations in the South. I hope it will meet with the support that it deserves.

• • • •

DR. W. E. B. DuBOIS, Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga.

The planning of programs to guide the future of the Negro in America has not been in vain. On the whole the Durham program is a pretty good document. I should have written it a little differently myself, but I would not be unwilling to sign it.

Press Comments

Richmond News-Leader

With at least 75 per cent of the declaration, every reasonable white man probably will find himself in complete accord. The plea for humanity and for economic justice, which is the basis of the statement, is the one that will produce more of agreement than ever has existed between races in the South.

• • • •

Newport News Daily Press

We commend to both whites and Negroes for careful consideration the Durham manifesto. It contains little that is not fundamentally sound—things which American citizens have a right to expect.

• • • •

Atlanta Constitution

It will be unfortunate if the South does not discuss calmly and intelligently the basis for inter-racial cooperation advanced recently by a group of southern Negroes.

If the southern Negro leaders, asking for the cooperation of the majority race, do not receive encouragement, then the South will have failed the first effort by southern Negro leadership along realistic lines.

Atlanta Daily World

We commend the work of the Conference. It is the result of serious study by able and yet conservative Negro leaders, whose sincerity of purpose and racial earnestness can hardly be questioned.

• • • •

Christian Science Monitor

Above the clamor of current racial discussion in America, a quiet, reasoned voice is now heard in behalf of interracial cooperation in the South, through a statement by the committee speaking for the recently founded Southern Conference on Race Relations.

Advancement in responsibility and rank in military service according to ability; equal salaries for Negro and white teachers on the basis of preparation and experience; additional education facilities; inclusion of Negro doctors on public hospital staffs to treat Negro patients; organization of Negro service workers into unions with recognized affiliations; abolition of the poll tax; effective enforcement of anti-lynch laws—these and other proposals seem to furnish a reasonable basis for consideration and action.

• • • •

Norfolk Virginian-Pilot

Out of the Southern Conference on Race Relations that was held at Durham on October 20 has come a manifesto of historic importance. It is offered, on behalf of this conference by a drafting committee representative of the South's most responsible Negro leadership as a 'basis for interracial cooperation" with especial reference to the problems this cooperation presents in the Southern States. Its publication yesterday supersedes, as a declaration of principles and objectives in this field, the many diverse statements, Negro in authorship, by means of which the country has been made aware of the dimensions this problem has assumed during the last two years of war and preparations for war.

Almost without exception, the remedial, corrective and protective reforms that the present manifesto indorses, are reforms generally acknowledged as just in principle, or validated by our highest court, or actually in incipient application.

• • • •

Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch

There has come to the Ledger-Dispatch, along with many other newspapers, a report entitled A Basis for Inter-Racial Cooperation and Development in the South: a Statement by Southern Negroes. If our colleagues of the Southern press are affected by it as we are, they are profoundly disquieted.

For this report, let it be noted, is prepared by Southern Negroes, not by Northern Negroes . . . . The Ledger-Dispatch knows some of the men who prepared or collaborated on the preparation of this report, knows them to be men of quiet ability and of a natural conservatism, and it has no doubt that many of its colleagues knows a number of others.

It deserves, if it does not demand, reflection and study on the part of the White South—far more of both than is possible in an hour or two.

August 6, 1943

To the Members of the Collaboration Committee
Atlanta Conference

Summer vacations have temporarily depleted our office force and instead of the personal letter I would like to write each of you I am sending you a report in this mimeograph form. The action of the continuing committee has been carried rather fully in the press. You may have missed it so I am giving you the high points of our meeting here in Atlanta.

There were sixteen of our group out of the twenty-four who were here and fifteen out of the nineteen of the Negro group. The statement made by us is enclosed.

You will notice especially the last paragraphs which embody the action taken.

The sub-committees on agriculture, work opportunities, education, and civil and political rights, health and public welfare, military status and post war planning met separately and drafted recommendations for action. Their reports were read to the committee of the whole and referred to the temporary officers, Dr. Charles S. Johnson and Dr. Howard Odum, for consideration after organization is perfected. The personnel of these committees is enclosed.

The question of the relation of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation to the Southern Regional Council will doubtless be answered by the Commission at its annual meeting this fall. We have had the three statements, Durham, Atlanta and Richmond, printed in one pamphlet, a copy of which I am enclosing. You may have other copies for five cents apiece if you would like them.

Sincerely yours,

Jessie Daniel Ames

Mr. Gordon B. Hancock
Dean, Virginia Union University
Richmond, Virginia

My dear Mr. Hancock:

Thank you for your editorial. I took you at you word and revised it enough to fit the subheads which I always use to break an article. I have learned that more people read a "broken" article than one of solid print.

The suggestion you make in the end appealed to me at the time. Now, since Dr. Patterson and Walter White have tangled, I am impelled to make a suggestion to you which I want you to consider. But, first, I must explain both my position on and my concern in the racial situation: I want Negroes to get as much recognition as citizens - full fledged as possible; I want them to hold as much of the gain made in this field as possible after the war.

It is at this latter point that my concern arises. Unless Southern white people agree that this gain must be preserved, I am afraid of the future for Southern Negroes. This side of a dictatorship, thoroughly sympathetic with minority groups, I can see no great hope in holding gains against stubborn opposition on the part of the white South. Now and for the duration is our opportunity to convince the white South that the obvious minima of citizenship must be accorded for enduring peace, as well as for successful war.

White and Negro leaders of the South should agree on ultimate goals, immediate objectives and strategy. When we have done this, we can work both jointly and separately in carrying out our purposes. We should include in our program the economic field in industry, agriculture and domestic service; in the educational field in salaries, equipment, free and equal educational advantages on all levels; in the field of civil rights, in unrestricted franchise, equality before the courts, petty and state; in the social field, in health and hospitalization, parks, playgrounds, generally, and housing. These four divisions can be added to and all sub-divided even more than I have stated. If we would hold war won gains, and we must, without violence and bloodshed then we must look ahead and plan now.

This is my suggestion. Could you and two or three other Negro leaders from the Deep South invite into conference a dozen others not dependent upon the Federal Government for their living and discuss the problems as you see them and come to some general working agreement on what you want white people to do to help. Then or later invite a small number of Southern white persons, men and women, to join with you in working out the strategy to be followed.

You may think that we ought or would want to sit in at the first conference. If you do, I would say that in my judgment we should not. There could be a few conferences with a few white people before your large meeting is called if the conveners desired. Any other procedure would in my opinion leave the whole plan open to attack by members of your race on the grounds that "Bourbon" white people of the South were already planning to re-enslave Negroes. An additional advantage would accrue by excluding white people until you had worked out your program: The white South would know what Southern Negroes want and what they would expect to get in cooperation with the white South. We do respond more spontaneously to our colored fellow citizens.

I need not say to you that no publicity should be given to this if it is carried. What, if any, publicity should be given after the meeting would be one of the items decided by the strategy adopted.

I think there is value in this idea. It is unimportant whether or not you accept the plan as it is outlined here. But it is important that something be planned and begun now. The initiative should be taken by Southern Negroes. I can promise you cooperation from Southern white people.

Very sincerely yours,

Jessie Daniel Ames

White Women In A Biracial Society

By Edwin L. Clarke

Most of us are religious people. We hold in reverence the Book in which appear the clear words of the prophet Micah, "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Too frequently, as we hear these words, they slip lightly from our minds. On the other hand, we may think of those words with an uneasy conscience. "To do justly." Are we doing justly, when our state spends perhaps twice as much on the education of the white child as of the Negro child? "To love kindness." Is it kindness that moves us to augment the weekly low wage we pay our full-time maid by the gift of a skirt or a pair of shoes we no longer want; that makes us say, "Well, a Negro doesn't need as much to live on as a white person does"? "And to walk humbly with God." Is it humility which makes us think and say, "The white race is the greatest race on earth. This is a white man's country"?

Most of us bear the name and sign of Jesus. It was our Master who said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor." How much? "As thyself." Whatever you want for yourself, that you must want equally for your neighbor. "And who is my neighbor?" "He that fell among thieves." He that is in distress. So, if we stand for the principles of our Lord, we must want for our handicapped brethren, black, red, yellow, brown, a chance to attain such things as we ourselves enjoy. Good homes, schools, medical care, jobs at good pay, all the other advantages that make life worth living.

Of course, we can explain Jesus away, but if we do then dare we continue to claim the name of Christian and pray in the name of Christ? Well, all philosophy and religion aside, what difference does it make how we Americans treat our minorities? It makes a great difference in important ways.

First, in personal security. Criminals come from slums far more than from good homes. We can better protect our homes from burglars, our purses and our persons from bandits, our bodies from contagious disease, by working for the abolition of slums—Negro slums, white slums, Mexican slums—than we can by adding men to the police force.

Second, in national security. On December 9, 1941, the President of the United States said, "We are now in this war. We are all in it—all the way. Every single man, woman and child is a partner in the most tremendous undertaking in our American history." Mr. Roosevelt did not say, "every white man, woman and child." Black people are partners in the war effort, just as much as are whites.

Still some folks in America think that our Negroes are not good enough to be enlisted as fighting men in the army and navy. They believe that skilled Negro mechanics are not good enough to work at making ships, tanks and planes, even though industry is crying desperately for trained men. Whether they know it or not, such folks are slowing up our war effort and are giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

Before the war some of our Negroes often likened the treatment which they received to the treatment given to Jews in Germany. We should give the Negro no occasion for any such feeling now.

America will be strong as it has the enthusiastic support of a full hundred per cent of its people. How will that come to pass? "To make us love our country we must have a lovely country." Today, in the face of the Nazi threat, every prejudice that stands in the way of making an America that looks lovely to every man, woman, and child, black as well as white, should be swept aside for the sake of total national defense.

Third, in economic power. Tomorrow our country will compete for the markets of the world with the producers of other continents. Success will depend upon our efficiency in turning out goods more cheaply than other nations can. We cannot hope to get cheap production by cutting wages. We do not want our workers to descend to the biting poverty of India, China and Japan. Low wage countries are wretched countries. We can get cheap production by increasing to the full the skill of every one of our workers. That means vocational training and opportunity to use that education for every one of our youth, Negro and white alike. At this point we may well quote the query which James Weldon Johnson addressed

TO AMERICA

How would you have us, as we are?
  Or sinking 'neath the load we bear?
Our eyes fixed forward on a star?
  Or gazing empty at despair?

Rising or falling? Men or things?
  With dragging pace or footsteps fleet?
Strong, willing sinews in your wings?
  Or tightening chains about your feet?

Fourth, in national recognition. America aspires to be a leader at the council tables of the world, to help the nations find the way to a new era. We have fair words of leadership. Alas, our brave words count for little in the face of our actions. Peoples in other countries receive our suggestions coldly. Men in backward lands are well acquainted with our lynchings and our discriminations. Our enemies take pains to let them be known, in the interior of China, in the heart of Africa. Often humble folks say quietly to our missionaries, "We think you had better put your own country in order before you come to preach to us." By our conduct at home we support or block the work of men and women we have sent abroad to teach the Gospel.

Fifth, in new experience. Those persons who undertake to work for justice, kindness and humility often have rare adventures. They have the thrill of meeting and working with representatives of the handicapped peoples in exciting ways. They discover intelligent minds, generous spirits and brave hearts, in the persons of fellow workers of other races. A whole new realm of interesting living is opened to them, as they strive for better schools, housing, hospitals, jobs for the underprivileged peoples of America.

Sixth, in affection. Workers for justice receive the generous and warm affection of many of their colored associates. These men and women have too few champions among the privileged. They are profoundly thankful for all help that is given them in their efforts for advancement. One can hardly have too many friends, especially grateful friends.

Why Is This Woman's Work?

But why, one may ask, is this matter put up to women, rather than men? For four good reasons:

First, more than men, many women have an abundant leisure which they can devote to work for social betterment. A large body of women in the business and professional class have enough time and influence at their disposal to put a lever under the mass of tradition which blocks the path of our minorities, and to move it from their path.

Second, women are primarily responsible for the education of the young children, both in school and in the home. Women have opportunity to condition children in favor of justice, kindness and humility. They can set boys and girls high on the solid rock of fact and principle, safe from the waves of prejudice.

Third, when women stand for justice between races they meet less opposition than men do. They are less likely to be attacked and condemned as seditious persons, bent on upsetting the social order. They are almost completely safe from the personal violence which at times is visited upon those men who dare to speak for the handicapped.

Finally, women are themselves the excuse for some major wrongs. Men drive hard wage bargains, that their wives and children may live in luxury. Men in mobs take the lives of wretched people who are merely charged with crime, denying to them the elementary American right of a fair trial in a court of law. When such men are confronted with the savagery of their offense their last word is that it is necessary for the protection of Southern womanhood. Only women can most effectively answer this fiction by repudiating the chivalrous defense of the mob. As a matter of fact, less than one in four of the victims of lynchings are even charged with offenses against women.

What can women do to help with race relations? What can they not do! We have space to suggest only a few elementary things.

As employers they can treat their maids, their yardmen, their other employees, as they themselves would like to be treated. Thereby they not only do justice, they also teach their children in the most effective way possible, by force of example.

As parents they can teach their girls and boys that we are all children of one Father. "God hath made of one blood all nations of men." We should treat each other as brothers and sisters. Mothers can make plain that this is no idle figure of speech. It is the very heart of religion.

As voters women can support for office those who have generous principles regarding minorities, and can oppose others who are indifferent or hostile to the welfare of Negro people.

As citizens they can speak a good word for the handicapped. They can commend the mayor, city council, school superintendent, police, who do their work without race discrimination. They can make plain to those who fail in their duty that they must mend their ways or feel the indignation of liberal citizens at the next election.

There are in America some 15,000,000 people, black, red, yellow, and brown,—men and women like ourselves,—but still our nation's stepchildren. Of this host only a small minority are educated and prosperous. The great majority are ignorant and poor, handicapped by lack of opportunity. Many are hungry. They suffer from malnutrition, the result of poverty and ignorance. Many are ill and lack suitable medical care. Clinics are not available for them. They cannot afford to call a physician. Many are in prison, such prisons as you would be shocked to see, because they grew up in slums that make criminals as surely as good homes make good children.

In an ancient Book we read of One who said, "I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick and in prison, and ye visited me not. Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." For the people of America, and most of all for ourselves, let us pray that for the future such words may never be said. Rather may the judgment be, when our years are as a tale that is told, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

THE ROLE OF THE COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION IN WAR AND PEACE

WILLIAM E. COLE
University of Tennessee

I. APPRAISAL

AN APPRAISAL of the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation is not an easy task. There are no similar agencies with which comparisons of accomplishments might be made. Much of the work of the Commission has been done through other organizations. Many of its efforts have been in the field of education, specifically functioning in the attempt to change traditional racial attitudes, to improve interracial cooperation, and to increase understanding between races. These areas of knowledge and endeavor do not lend themselves readily to scientific measurement or objective appraisal. The entire culture of a people ties in so closely in shaping attitudes and in influencing action patterns that it is very difficult to segregate and to examine the influence of any single agency or institution from that of other institutions or the mass impact of the total culture.

Method of Appraisal. Irrespective of these limitations, it is worth while to appraise as carefully as possible the work of the Commission. This has been done through interviews and correspondence with some 300 persons (1942), most of whom have observed or participated in the work of the Commission, have served on state or local interracial committees, or have shown an interest one way or another in race problems or southern problems. In addition, there has been consultation with Commission personnel and a somewhat detailed scrutiny of the publications and official minutes of the Commission.

From these collective sources, there is evidence and testimony to the following accomplishments of the Commission:

1. THROUGH THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION, THE INTERRACIAL ORGANIZATION AND MEETING HAVE BECOME STANDARD TECHNIQUES DESIGNED FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF INTERRACIAL COOPERATION IN THE SOUTH

One of the difficulties of the racial situation in the past has been that there was almost no contact between white and colored leaders in the South. The annual meeting of the Commission, itself, the more frequent meetings of its Board of Directors, and the state and local interracial groups which have grown out of the efforts of the staff and the members of the Commission have built up points of contact between the leaders of the two races in the South which did not exist prior to the inception of the Commission. From these meetings have been discovered ways through which misunderstanding could be removed and by which cooperation could be secured.

Cooperation of Leaders. Through the interracial organization, responsible white and Negro leaders have been brought together in such a way as not only to become an example for other interracial groups but to provide a natural exchange of ideas. These meetings have had a normalizing effect upon interaction between white and Negro groups. Out of this interracial exchange has certainly come a furthering of the understanding and a broadening of the sympathies between the Negro and the white races, as well as the formulation of action programs designed to be of service to one or both of the races.

The Commission Born Out of Conflict and Suspicion. At the time that the Commission was conceived (April, 1919), the Nation, and more especially the South, faced widespread racial suspicion, distrust, and overt racial conflict. The founders of the Commission felt that there could be brought into being organizations in which problems between the two races could be fully discussed and action programs formulated. This was done and early took the form of "about 800" state and local interracial committees or "commissions." Not only was the racial crisis of the post-war period of the first World War passed with less friction and conflict than was anticipated, but over the years the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and state and local interracial organizations have constituted perhaps the greatest single technique for preserving interracial peace, for discussing interracial problems, for increasing racial understanding, and for instituting action programs on behalf of the southern Negro.

2. THE COMMISSION HAS IMPROVED RACIAL UNDERSTANDING AND HAS BEEN AN IMPORTANT SOURCE OF BI-RACIAL EDUCATION

To this end, the Commission has been instrumental in formulating, synthesizing, and distributing information on the status and conditions of Negro life in the South and upon problems such as tenancy, education, enforcement of justice, and the like, which affect directly the welfare of both whites and Negroes.

Race Relations Kept before the Public. Certainly in the South the Commission has done more than any other agency to keep the issue of race relations before the public mind. As the president of one of the southern State colleges phrases it, "The Commission has done much to capitalize sentiment in favor of a square deal for Negroes in the South." Another outstanding southerner remarks,

> The studies that have been published, the publications that have been issued and sent out, the conferences which have been held, the point of view and attitude which have been maintained, the steady but quiet pressure that has been exerted on law enforcement officers and upon newspapers—all these things have given the Commission a place not filled by any other agency.

Widening the Scope of Racial Understanding. Able pieces of research on race problems and conditions have been sponsored by the Commission. Some of the research has been the product of field studies which provided original information on race problems or other problems of the South.

For years the Commission has maintained contacts with the leading editors of the South through conferences, personal visitation, and a news service which has reached 2,000 secular and religious newspapers and periodicals. Its own news letter, The Southern Frontier, is widely read and widely quoted. Clippings of the Commission press releases are on file from approximately 1,000 newspapers and magazines which have an aggregate circulation of about twenty million.

On the basis of recent interviews with leading editors of the South, it is apparent that newspaper editors and publishers have become increasingly sympathetic and intelligent in matters involving Negroes. Both their news and their editorial policies have changed definitely for the better in the last twenty years. The majority of editors can now be depended upon for constructive and intelligent cooperation in the field of racial adjustment. This change has come about to a considerable degree because of the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation.

The Commission has distributed more than five million pages of literature for classroom use and for study groups. About eighty colleges now offer courses in race relations, while some 400 other colleges and around 1,000 high schools integrate race relations topics into courses in sociology, ethics, civics, history, literature, journalism, and other subjects.

Race Relations Included in State Education Programs. Most of the southern State departments of education have put into their suggested State programs of studies units for the study of race problems, some of these being rather elaborate. While these have not functioned as the Commission staff members would like to see them, they do indicate that a more or less official stamp of approval has been placed upon studies and curriculum content which a few years ago would have been taboo and which the state of public opinion then in existence would not have stood for.

Cooperation with the Church. In its work toward improved education and toward creating a more wholesome public opinion between the two races, the Commission has worked very closely with the church. In the first place, the church has been liberally recognized on the membership of the Commission and in the composition of state and local interracial groups. From the inception of the Commission, its staff members have presented their work at church conferences, conventions, synods, to schools of religion, and through publications of religious bodies. The interest of hundreds of church leaders in the racial problem has been enlisted. This, in turn, has led to much local church leadership in interracial matters, to more liberal church declarations on race problems, to local attacks upon race problems, and to the inclusion of race relations topics in church literature and the curricula of training school programs for church leaders. It was, in the main, church women who refuted the traditional idea that lynching was necessary for the protection of southern womanhood.

Through the leadership of the Commission, the Woman's Missionary Council of the M. E. Church, South, set up in 1920 a Commission on Race Relations and provided for the organization of a subsidiary committee on each of its 6,000 auxiliaries. About the same time, the Federal Council of Churches created an interracial Commission on the Church and Race Relations, which in turn has organized numerous interracial committees in the East, the North, and the Middle West. In the early twenties, Dr. Thomas Jesse Jones, Director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, carried the story of the Commission to South Africa, with the result that able leaders there inaugurated a similar movement with excellent results.

3. THE COMMISSION HAS CONSTITUTED A CONSULTATION CENTER IN RACIAL PROBLEMS FOR THE SOUTH AND FOR THE NATION

Certainly the great over-all southern source to which individuals and organizations might turn for information on racial problems and for aid in organizing interracial organizations and study groups has been the Commission. This consultation service has, of course, been ably supplemented by the great Negro universities and colleges of the South and the divisions of Negro education in the State departments of education. Likewise, the Urban League and the NAACP have been sources of aid, the latter especially of legal aid, to Negro groups where problems of discrimination, injustice, etc., have been involved. Perhaps none of the agencies mentioned has shown as wide a scope of services as has the Commission.

4. THROUGH PERFORMANCE AND SPONSORSHIP, THE COMMISSION HAS MADE A WORTHWHILE CONTRIBUTION TO RESEARCH ON RACE PROBLEMS IN THE SOUTH AND TO THE CREATION OF MORE COMPREHENSIVE LITERATURE ON THE SUBJECT

Mention might be made of the publications treating the status of the Negro in American society,[1] which have been very valuable in giving a general picture of the Negro in the Nation. The subject of lynching has been well covered by the Commission in its research publications[2] and in more general popular documents.[3] Certainly these publications constitute the best collection of materials on lynching which are available. They have been widely used by study groups, students of race problems, and editors.

Woofter's early comprehensive study of Negro Problems in Cities[4] was inspired and financed by the Commission.

The compilations and analysis of data on the comparative status of Negro and white educational facilities, finances, and opportunities have been regularly issued by the Commission's staff,[5] and have no doubt done much toward lessening the gap between educational differentials in the South.

Problems of Agriculture and Labor. The recent outstanding work on sharecroppers by Raper and Reid[6] was financed largely by the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and Atlanta University. At this point, mention should be made of earlier studies on farm tenancy sponsored by the Commission, summary of which was published in The Collapse of Cotton Tenancy, by Charles S. Johnson, Edwin R. Embree, and W. W. Alexander, University of North Carolina Press, 1935. Somewhat later, a study was made of the Negro in the iron, steel, meat-packing, and railroad car industries. This study, sponsored by the Commission, was made by Horace R. Cayton and George S. Mitchell, and their findings are reported in Black Workers and the New Unions, published by the University of North Carolina Press in 1939.

The above publications are only a few of the research documents prepared either by staff members of the Commission or by non-staff persons chosen especially to do the studies.

The Commission has never posed as a research organization, but has operated first of all as an educational, and secondarily as an action, agency, giving such attention to pieces of research as would contribute to these ends or to the mitigation of critical problems affecting southern Negroes and southern whites.

Mention should be made at this point of the effective assembling of information on state race problems by some of the state interracial committees. The committees of Georgia,[7] Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Virginia have done effective work in giving the people of their respective states sound information on interracial problems within these States.

5. THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION HAS CONTRIBUTED MUCH TO THE MITIGATION OF LYNCHING AND TO THE REDUCTION OF OTHER FORMS OF RACIAL VIOLENCE IN THE SOUTH

The president of one of the great southern universities for Negroes is strong in his conviction > that much of the advancement which has been made in race relations, including the drastic reduction in lynching, interracial violence, and ill feeling, has been due to the patient and persistent efforts which the Commission has made.

This expresses the opinion of many other persons questioned in connection with the study.

Conflict Prevented Through Contact. Numerous examples have been encountered where the work of staff members of the Commission or of State Councils of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching,[8] or local committees have been instrumental in preventing lynchings or other forms of violence. This has been accomplished largely through direct contact with law enforcement officers, or through getting influential citizens in the conflict area to get in touch with local law enforcement officials. Under such pressure, even when feeling runs high, local officials usually make an attempt to enforce the law. Of course, the speed with which a lynching may occur sometimes makes it impossible for the conflict situation to be known to the members of the State Council before it takes place.

Effective Leadership in Preventing Lynching. An important part of the Commission's program to reduce lynching has been the publication of statistics, cases, and other data on lynching.[9] These have produced some degree of embarrassment among public officials and have been instrumental in achieving improved enforcement of the law. One of the most encouraging aspects of the anti-lynching campaign has been the wholehearted cooperation of leading southern newspapers.

Lynching has been justified in the past on the ground that it was necessary for the protection of white women. The work of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching has helped to undermine and discredit this supposition. Through the Association, nearly 45,000 women and 1,318 peace officers pledged themselves to work for the eradication of lynching and to impress upon the South that lynching is unnecessary for the protection of southern women.

Since the period 1916–1920, when the Commission was organized (1919), lynchings decreased from 300 to 189 in 1920–1925; to 88 during the period 1925–1930; to 84 from 1930 to 1935; to 30 from 1935 to 1940; to 4 in 1941; and to 5 in 1942.[10]

Reduction of Lynching a Cooperative Achievement. No thesis is presented bearing the claim that the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation or the work of local and State interracial organizations has been entirely responsible for the great decrease in lynching. The New Deal, with its sympathetic attitude toward minorities, the growth of State highway patrols; better communication, such as radio; the far-reaching influence of the churches; the activities of Tuskegee Institute; the work of the NAACP and the Urban League, all have made their contribution to an effective reduction in lynching.[11] Above the efforts of any single agency operating in the South to reduce lynching, the work of the Commission seems to emerge as singularly significant.

Legal Aid and Court Action. From time to time the Commission on Interracial Cooperation has inspired court action or has cooperated in court action where there was violence, miscarriage of justice, or where the people were aroused over a racial situation.[12] An important, appropriate illustration was the recent appeal of the case of Ira Taylor of Hancock County, Georgia, financed by the Commission to test the "peonage laws" of Georgia. After going through the state courts, the case was carried to the United States Supreme Court by two Georgia lawyers, one of whom served without compensation, and on January 12, 1942, the law was declared unconstitutional. Another illustration, some years back, was the celebrated "Williams Case," involving peonage on a plantation in Jasper County, Georgia, where eleven of the important witnesses were murdered in order to cover up evidence. The Commission pushed this case and obtained convictions for the principals involved. Other less spectacular instances of court action might be cited.

6. THE COMMISSION HAS INFLUENCED LEGISLATION AND MOVEMENTS DESIGNED TO ALLEVIATE SOUTHERN PROBLEMS, ESPECIALLY THE PROBLEMS OF NEGROES, AND TO IMPROVE THE STANDARDS OF LIVING IN THE SOUTH

In its early studies of lynching, the Commission found that lynching was closely tied in with submarginal areas and with substandard conditions of people. This pointed the way to the possibilities which might be inherent in preventing lynching and in improving race relations by improving social, economic, and educational conditions of the people. As a result of these observations, the vision of the Commission's approach to race problems was greatly enlarged.

Leadership in Legislation. The President and Director of the Commission were active in obtaining a grant to study the effect of the AAA program upon the Negro. The results of this study, presented to the public in a number of releases and reports, were embodied in The Collapse of Cotton Tenancy, which was drawn upon extensively in developing the program of the Farm Security Administration. Leaders of the Commission played an important part in shaping the legislation which established this agency. The Commission, with State and local interracial committees, was an effective influence in the passage of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, the development of a non-discriminatory federal policy on the employment of Negroes in war industries, and the broadening of the principles governing the mobilization of Negroes in the armed forces. Numerous instances are reported where state and local interracial groups have been influential in getting public funds for improved edicational programs, in breaking down teacher-salary differentials, and in getting better facilities for education.

7. THE COMMISSION IS CONTRIBUTING TO THE MITIGATION OF RACIAL PROBLEMS ARISING OUT OF PRESENT WAR CONDITIONS

A definite step was taken in this direction in the late spring of 1942, when State interracial workers were assembled in Atlanta to discuss race problems arising out of the mobilization of manpower and industry in the war effort.

Definite Plans Developed. At this conference definite steps were taken toward getting at least one semipermanent Negro chaplain[13] and recreational director in each camp housing Negro military units of any size. Through these, the interracial committees would work with the military police and with civil authorities in handling local interracial problems. Steps were taken also toward organizing interracial committees in towns near camps in which Negro soldiers were quartered and in towns where defense industries were creating problems of population pressures, either of white upon Negro communities or of Negro upon white communities.

At the Atlanta conference, pamphlet material on racial good will and national unity was outlined. Plans were also made to exchange information on successful techniques in the handling of local biracial problems during the emergency and to [12] The Commission has had only limited funds for this work and has confined itself to cases involving changes in the fundamental law or those particularly significant because of their effect on public opinion. There is a very great need for some form of legal aid for the masses of both white and colored people who are, as a rule, too poor and too ignorant to avail themselves of protection under the law. Into this general field the limited finances of the Commission have never permitted it to go.

Two very important documents on the legal status of Negroes have been financed by the Commission: J. H. Chadburn, Lynching and the Law (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1933); and Charles S. Mangum, Jr., The Legal Status of the Negro (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1940).

[13] The plan called for keeping at least one chaplain in a camp on a semipermanent basis as a means of giving some continuity to the religious, recreational, and social program.

publicize the progress of Negroes in the armed forces and in defense industries. Programs have been worked out for the use of local groups which are faced with problems of transportation, administration of justice, employment, and the spread of rumors which cause tensions during the war and post-war periods.[14] In certain problem areas "listening posts" have been established to record the pulse of the community on racial attitudes, and in others interracial groups have been organized.[15] In some camps, away from centers of population, recreational "day rooms" have been provided for Negro soldiers. Some of these have been sponsored by State and local interracial bodies. Local organizations, especially in the Norfolk, Virginia, and Jacksonville, Florida, areas, have been able to arrange for special transportation facilities for Negro soldiers and defense workers.

Work Unfinished. While this work of the Commission, designed to soften the impact of war and post-war conditions upon race relations, is not in its finished stages, it bids fair to reach considerable proportions and to be accompanied by some success. With many agencies concerned about such problems and with the scene of the problems shifting rapidly, the extent of the success of the work is difficult to estimate at this stage. It is sufficient to say that it is wise to perfect machinery and organizations now to deal with whatever racial problems may arise out of the war and post-war conditions.

II. THE CASE FOR THE CONTINUATION OF A SOUTHERN INTERRACIAL ORGANIZATION[16]

It is clear that the arguments for the continuation of a privately operated interracial commission not only must present a background appraisal of the work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation to date (Part I of this report), but also must consider the work which the Commission performs, or may perform, against an appraisal of the work of other agencies now concerned with race problems and with the condition and status of minority elements in the population.

Private Initiative and Governmental Endeavor. One of the most difficult problems which might be tackled first is the question of whether there is need for a private agency, such as the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, in a social picture so dominated by government as the present one.

It is, of course, true that almost from the beginning of the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt (1933) a great interest in the problem of minority groups has been shown by many leaders of the Federal government. Numerous commissions, agencies, and pieces of legislation have been created, and statements of policy have been issued which have had a bearing upon racial status, interracial relationships, improvement of economic conditions of minorities, and the utilization of minorities in the total war effort.

Toward achieving a greater security for American minorities and to the end of improving the relationship between races, mention might be made of the enactment into law of the Farm Security Administration; the passage of the Jones-Bankhead tenancy bill; the establishment of the Committee on Fair Employment Practices (established by Executive Order 8802 on June 25, 1941);[17] a more liberal policy on the part of the Army and Navy toward the acceptance and recruitment of Negroes; the employment of staff members with the Special Service Division of the War Department to work with Army staff officials in the area of race relations; and the setting up of a Division of Special Service to Minority Groups as part of the program of mobilizing human resources toward the prosecution of the total war effort.

Dependence Upon Government. There are those who believe that government can deal with all

[14] These study outlines are prepared under the title What About It? The one referred to here bears the subtitle, "National Unity and Civilian Morale."

[15] For instance, in the South Carolina counties bordering Georgia.

[16] For purposes of definition, the South, as used in this article, refers to the States of Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. Limited assistance is given to a few States outside this area.

[17] Two paragraphs of Executive Order 8802 indicate the present position of the Federal government toward the full participation of all races in the defense program, to wit:

"1. All departments and agencies of the Government of the United States concerned with vocational and training programs for defense production shall take special measures appropriate to assure that such programs are administered without discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin;

"2. All contracting agencies of the Government of the United States shall include in all defense contracts hereafter negotiated by them a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color, or national origin."

aspects of the racial problem and who visualize that the pressure which Negroes and interested white prople exert upon government will be ample to force Federal governmental action at all times. There is no guarantee, it seems, that this is true. On the other hand, however, there is no immediate visible guarantee that the present interest of the Federal government in minorities will greatly decrease; on the contrary, it is likely to increase. However, a more conservative and reactionary national administration like the one at the end of the first World War might not only wreck what has been done to date, but might also fail to provide effective substitutes. The recent national elections (1942) indicate a trend in this direction. In short, we must place our confidence partially in faith when we say that the great American racial issues and problems will be taken care of by the Federal government. The reaction of government to pressure makes it difficult to legislate in favor of minorities when they do not represent more than 10 percent of the population, and where, in composition, they are below the majority in political and economic strength.

Developing Danger Signals. At the end of the first year of this Nation in the second World War, there still creeps out in this country evidence of a rather strong element of isolationism. This was given concrete expression in the recent national elections. There are some who believe that this could easily develop into a form of racialism involving not only Negroes but other minorities, especially Jews. Should this develop, there would be a critical need, if national security and international safety are to be preserved, for effective private agencies to develop a counter-attack to minimize the effect of such a movement.

Visualized at its best, a pattern of relations between two or more races held together by governmental pressure, by Federal statute, and by police powers would be far less satisfactory to the races concerned than one in which mutual respect, regard, and equality of opportunity were, in part at least, the products of an enlightened opinion and cooperative will, aside from whatever laws might be necessary to maintain such rights or opportunities. Patterns of race relations which are not, in part, the result of the cooperative will of the folk and which are held together by governmental pressures are likely to develop powerful counter results at any time.

Methods of Government and the Commission Complementary. Methods likely to be used by government in improving the patterns of racial relationship in this country will, doubtless, include subsidies, legislation, or governmental pressure of one type or another. There is little assurance that the government may undertake the task of educating groups in racial understanding and in the peaceful arbitration of differences. The exceedingly important task of organizing interracial groups to consider problems which affect both races is likely to continue to remain the problem of private endeavor for many years to come. In spite of all that government might do, there appears to be a definite place for the voluntary agency doing the type of work which the Commission on Intraracial Cooperation has been doing in the past or may do in the future.

Post-War Tendency to Decentralize. Following World War II, there is likely to be the usual movement to decentralize many powers of the Federal government delegated to it from necessity during the period of the war, and to abolish some of these powers and return others to the States and local communities. The prospect of decentralization of Federal power holds poor possibilities for greatly improved race relations via the route of the Federal government. Then, too, whatever the role of the Federal government in race relations, we must remember that it is a long way from Washington to racial conflict situations in central Georgia, western Mississippi, western Louisiana, or eastern Texas.

Whatever the implications for democracy, efforts of the Federal government to aid minorities through its various service programs have been most effective where the Federal government has carried these services directly to the people. Where the aid has been channeled through local and State governmental bodies, it has not been difficult for these units and local communities to divert such aid away from Negroes and other minorities. Thus, there is indicated a need for agencies to work in the changing of local attitudes and practices. Then, too, many of the problems in race relations are those involving local police; local health conditions and resources; local educational and welfare systems; local farm labor and industrial practices; and local attitudes—things local, which the Federal government can not touch, or can touch only remotely.

Numerous individuals have suggested that the governors of the various states be prevailed upon to appoint State interracial commissions, which might function within the States. In view of the attitude which certain southern governors have recently shown toward racial issues, it seems clear that any State action which some of the States would undertake could not possibly be satisfactory and would likely suffer political infanticide, and that it is perhaps better that a private agency take the lead in the organization of such groups.

Still a Need for Private Initiative. The consensus seems to be that there does not exist in the Federal and State governments a program of racial welfare and interracial cooperation adequate to cope with the racial issues and problems of this country, and that the work which government performs in this field does not constitute an adequate substitute for what the Commission has been doing in the past or may do in the near future. In spite of all that the governmental units are likely to accomplish, there will still be a job for private agencies to do.

A group of Southern Negroes, acting as individuals but holding positions of influence in their race, held a conference in Durham, N. C., October 20, 1942. They met to discuss the Southern Negroes' status and the changes which, in their opinion, would benefit not only Negroes themselves but the South and the Nation. In December, the results of this meeting were given to the public in a statement which has become known as the "Durham Statement."

Since only Southern Negroes had participated in the conference and in the drafting of the statement, Southern white people could not ignore it. Whether or not there was agreement on their part with what the statement contained, they were impelled to make some formal reply. This reply, signed by more than three hundred Southern white people, was prepared at a conference in Atlanta, April 8, by a hundred and fifteen citizens of ten states. Like the Negroes, they spoke only as individuals, though each held some position of influence in Southern life. Their reply is known as the "Atlanta Statement."

Out of these two conferences grew a third. This one differed from its predecessors in that it was bi-racial in character and composed of delegated individuals. The "Richmond Statement" was made by the Collaboration Committee of Negro and white delegates of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences meeting in Richmond, Virginia, June 16, 1943.

The demand for these statements has become so great that for the convenience of the public, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, Inc., with the permission of the drafting Conferences has brought them together in this single pamphlet. They may be obtained, singly or in quantity, for five cents a copy.

A BASIS FOR INTERRACIAL COOPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT IN THE SOUTH*

A STATEMENT BY SOUTHERN NEGROES

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status, and the welfare of the country as a whole.

With these problems in mind, we, a group of southern Negroes, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, and in the belief that we voice the sentiments of many of the Negroes of the Nation as well as the South, take this means of recording our considered views of the issues before us.

(1) Our Nation is engaged in a world-wide struggle, the success of which, both in arms and ideals, is paramount and demands our first loyalty.

(2) Our loyalty does not, in our view, preclude consideration now of problems and situations that handicap the working out of internal improvements in race relations essential to our full contribution to the war effort, and of the inevitable problems of post-war reconstruction, especially in the South where we reside.

(3) The South, with its twenty-five million people, one-third of whom are Negroes, presents a unique situation, not only because of the size of the Negro population but because of the legal and customary patterns of race relations which are invariably and universally associated with racial discriminations. We recognize the strength and age of these patterns.

We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races or classes or creeds, however, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework.

(4) We regard it as unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life.

(5) We have the courage and faith to believe, however, that it is possible to evolve in the South a way of life, consistent with the principles for which we as a Nation are fighting throughout the world, that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fears.

POLITICAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS

"1. We regard the ballot as a safeguard of democracy. Any discrimination against citizens in the exercise of the voting privilege, on account of race or poverty, is detrimental to the freedom of these citizens and to the integrity of the State. We therefore record ourselves as urging now:

a. The abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting.

---

*Statement of Negro leaders attending Southern Conference on Race Relations, Durham, N. C., October 20, 1942.

b. The abolition of the white primary.

c. The abolition of all forms of discriminatory practices, evasions of the law, and intimidations of citizens seeking to exercise their right of franchise.

2. Exclusion of Negroes from jury service because of race has been repeatedly declared unconstitutional. This practice we believe can and should be discontinued now.

3. a. Civil rights include personal security against abuses of police power by white officers of the law. These abuses, which include wanton killings, and almost routine beatings of Negroes, whether they be guilty or innocent of an offense, should be stopped now, not only out of regard for the safety of Negroes, but of common respect for the dignity and fundamental purpose of the law.

b. It is the opinion of this group that the employment of Negro police will enlist the full support of Negro citizens in control of lawless elements of their own group.

4. In the public carriers and terminals, where segregation of the races is currently made mandatory by law as well as by established custom, it is the duty of Negro and white citizens to insist that these provisions be equal in kind and quality and in character of maintenance.

5. Although there has been, over the years, a decline in lynchings, the practice is still current in some areas of the South, and substantially, even if indirectly, defended by resistance to Federal legislation designed to discourage the practice. We ask that the States discourage this fascistic expression by effective enforcement of present or of new laws against this crime by apprehending and punishing parties participating in this lawlessness.

If the States are unable, or unwilling to do this, we urge the support of all American citizens who believe in law and order in securing Federal legislation against lynching.

6. The interests and securities of Negroes are involved directly in many programs of social planning and administration; in the emergency rationing, wage and rent control programs. We urge the use of qualified Negroes on these boards, both as a means of intelligent representation and a realistic aid to the functioning of these bodies.

INDUSTRY AND LABOR

"Continuing opposition to the employment of Negroes in certain industries appears to proceed from (1) the outdated notions of an economy of scarcity, inherited from an industrial age when participation in the productive enterprises was a highly competitive privilege; (2) the effects of enemy propaganda designed to immobilize a large number of potentially productive workers in the American war effort; (3) the age-old prejudices from an era when the economic system required a labor surplus which competed bitterly within its own ranks for the privilege of work; (4) the established custom of reserving technical processes to certain racial groups; and (5) craft monopolies which have restricted many technical skills to a few workers.

Our collective judgment regarding industrial opportunities for Negroes may be summarized as follows:

1. The only tenable basis of economic survival and development for Negroes is inclusion in unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled branches of work in the industries or occupations of the region to the extent that they are equally capable. Circumstances will vary so as to make impossible and impracticable any exact numerical balance, but the principles enunciated by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee are regarded by us as sound and economically essential.
2. There should be the same pay for the same work.
3. Negro workers should seek opportunities for collective bargaining and security through membership in labor organizations. Since there can be no security for white workers if Negroes are unorganized and vice versa, labor unions of white workers should seek the organization of Negro workers, on a fair and equal basis.

4. We deplore the practice of those labor unions which bar Negroes from membership, or otherwise discriminate against them, since such unions are working against the best interest of the labor movement. We hold that only those labor unions which admit Negroes to membership and participation on a fair and democratic basis should be eligible for the benefits of the National Labor Relations Board, Railway Labor Act, State Labor Relations Acts and other protective labor legislation.
5. It is the duty of local, state and federal agencies to insist upon and enforce provisions for the industrial training of Negroes equal in quality and kind with that of other citizens. We believe, further, that Negroes should have equal opportunity in training programs carried on by industries and by labor organizations.
6. We urge Negro representation on regional organizations concerned with the welfare of workers.
7. We regard the wage-and-job-freezing order of the War Manpower Commission as holding the seeds of a distinct disadvantage to Negroes and other marginal workers. Most of these workers are now employed in the lowest-income job brackets. The "freeze" order can remove the opportunity for economic advancement. There is as yet no assurance that under existing circumstances the War Manpower Commission can deal more equitably by the Negro in the future than it has in the past.
8. We are convinced that the South's economic and cultural development can be accelerated by increasing the purchasing power and skills of Negro workers.

SERVICE OCCUPATIONS

"Any realistic estimate of the occupational situation of Negroes supports the view that Negroes will be employed in greatest proportions for a long time in service occupations. We see, however, possibilities of making of these fields scientifically guided areas in which training and organization will play a greater part in bringing about results mutually beneficial to employer and employee. We believe that greater service will be rendered and greater good will be engendered in the service fields if the following principles are observed:

1. More thorough training should be provided workers who plan to enter the service field, but the reward of the job and treatment on the job should be such as to make the workers feel that their training is justified. Opportunity should be given the service worker to advance through the opening up of additional opportunities.
2. A wholesome environment, living accommodations, food, uniforms and rest rooms, all of an approved standard, should be provided service workers.
3. Opportunity should be given the service worker to live, after his stipulated hours of work, as an individual undisturbed in his private life by the whims and caprices of his employers.
4. In view of the strides made by labor in general, while the service worker's lot has remained about the same, service workers should be organized into unions with recognized affiliations.*
5. Service workers should be included in the provisions for old age insurance, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, the wage and hour act, and other benefits of Social Security legally provided to workers of other categories.

We believe that these provisions will help to insure some intelligent service and wholesome loyalty (which will improve both the quality of labor and personal relations) in service occupations.

EDUCATION

"As equal opportunity for all citizens is the very foundation of the democratic faith, and of the Christian ethic which gave birth to the ideal of democratic living, it is imperative that every measure possible be taken to insure an equality of education to Negroes, and, indeed to all underprivileged peoples.

*In the present hysteria of many housewives who are losing poorly paid servants to better paying war industries, it seems desirable to emphasize that this proposal bears no relation to the fantastic and probably Axis inspired rumors of so-called "Eleanor Clubs."

1. Basic to improvement in Negro education is better schools, which involves expenditures by States of considerably more funds for the Negro schools. This group believes that a minimum requirement now is (a) equalization of salaries of white and Negro teachers on the basis of equal preparation and experience; (b) an expanded school building program for Negro schools designed to overcome the present racial disparity in physical facilities; this program to begin as soon as building materials are available; (c) revision of the school program in terms of the social setting, vocational needs and marginal cultural characteristics of the Negro children; and (d) the same length of school term for all children in local communities. Our growing knowledge of the effect of environment upon the intelligence and social adjustment of children, in fact leads us to believe that to insure equality of educational opportunity it is not enough to provide for the under-privileged child, of whatever race, the same opportunities provided for those on superior levels of familial, social, and economic life. We feel it a function of Government to assure equalization far beyond the mere expenditure of equivalent funds for salaries and the like.

2. The education of Negroes in the South has reached the point at which there is increased demand for graduate and professional training. This group believes that this training should be made available equally for white and Negro eligible students in terms defined by the United States Supreme Court in the decision on the case of Gaines versus the University of Missouri.

3. Where it is established that States cannot sustain the added cost of equalization, Federal funds should be made available to overcome the differentials between white and Negro facilities and between southern and national standards.

4. It is the belief of this group that the special problems of Negro education make demands for intelligent and sympathetic representation of these problems on school boards by qualified persons of the Negro race.

5. The education of Negro youth can be measurably aided by the use of Negro enforcement officers of truancy and compulsory education laws.

AGRICULTURE

"The South is the most rural section of the Nation, and Negroes, who constitute 33 per cent of its population, are responsible for an important share of the agricultural production on southern farms.

We recognize that the South is economically handicapped and that many of its disabilities are deeply rooted in agricultural maladjustments. To win the war, there is need for increased production of food, fibre and fats. In the present organization of agriculture, Negroes are a large part of the sharecropper and tenant group and a great majority of the rural Negro workers are in this class. Circumstances deny the Negro farmer sufficient opportunity to make his full contribution as a citizen. We suggest the following measures as means of increasing the production of the area, raising the status and spirits of Negro farmers, and of improving the region's contribution to the total war effort.

1. Establishment of sufficient safeguards in the system of tenancy to promote the development of land and home ownership and more security on the land, by:
   a. Written contracts
   b. Longer lease terms
   c. Higher farm wages for day laborers
   d. Balanced farm programs, including food and feed crops for present tenants and day laborers.
2. Adequate Federal assistance to Negro farmers should be provided on an equitable basis. The war effort can be materially aided if adequate provisions are made now for the interpretation of governmental policies to rural Negroes.
3. The equitable distribution of funds for teaching agriculture in the Negro land grant colleges to provide agricultural research and experimentation for Negro farmers.

4. The appointment of qualified Negroes to governmental planning and policy making bodies concerned with the common farmer, and the membership of Negro farmers in general farmers' organizations and economic cooperatives, to provide appropriate representation and to secure maximum benefits to our common wealth.

MILITARY SERVICE

"We recognize and welcome the obligation of every citizen to share in the military defense of the nation and we seek, along with the privilege of offering our lives, the opportunity of other citizens of full participation in all branches of the military service, and of advancement in responsibility and rank according to ability.

Negro soldiers, in line of military duty and in training in the South, encounter particularly acute racial problems in transportation and in recreation and leave areas. They are frequently mistreated by the police. We regard these problems as unnecessary and destructive to morale.

SOCIAL WELFARE AND HEALTH

"1. We believe that some of the more acute problems of Negro health, family and personal disorganization are a reflection of deficiencies in economic opportunity, but that social and health services for Negroes will continue to be necessary in considerable amounts even with improvement of their economic status. As a means of reducing the mortality and public contagion resulting from inadequacies of medical attention and health knowledge, this group believes that minimum health measures for Negroes would include the following:

a. Mandatory provisions that a proportion of the facilities in all public hospitals be available for Negro patients;
b. That Negro doctors be either included on the staff for services to Negro patients, according to their special qualifications, or permitted as practitioners the same privilege and courtesy as other practitioners in the public hospitals;
c. That Negro public health nurses and social workers be more extensively used in both public and private organizations.

2. We advocate the extension of slum clearance and erection of low-cost housing as a general as well as special group advantage. The Federal government has set an excellent precedent here with results that offer much promise for the future.

It is a wicked notion that the struggle of the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the Nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government.

The effect of the war has been to make the Negro, in a sense, the symbol and protagonist of every other minority in America and in the world at large. Local issues in the South, while admittedly holding many practical difficulties, must be met wisely and courageously if this Nation is to become a significant political entity in a new international world. The correction of these problems is not only a moral matter, but a practical necessity in winning the war and in winning the peace. Herein rests the chance to reveal our greatest weakness or our greatest strength."

STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE OF WHITE SOUTHERNERS ON RACE RELATIONS*

Atlanta, Georgia
April 8, 1943

In October, 1942, a representative group of Southern Negro leaders met in Durham, N. C., and issued a statement in which they addressed themselves "to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations, within the democratic framework."

Their statement is so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and at the same time shows such good will, that we gladly agree to cooperate.

We do not attempt to make here anything like a complete reply to the questions raised nor to offer solutions for all the vexing problems. We hope, however, to point the pathway for future cooperative efforts and to give assurance of our sincere good will and desire to cooperate in any sound program aimed at the improvement of race relations.

These Negro leaders rightly placed emphasis in their statement on discrimination in the administration of our laws on purely racial grounds. We are sensitive to this charge and admit that it is essentially just. From the Potomac to the Rio Grande there are some ten million Negroes. While all citizens are governed by the same laws, it is recognized that Negroes have little voice in the making and enforcement of the laws under which they must live. They are largely dependent upon the will of the majority group for the safety of life and property, education and health, and their general economic condition. This is a violation of the spirit of democracy. No Southerner can logically dispute the fact that the Negro, as an American citizen, is entitled to his civil rights and economic opportunities.

The race problem in any Southern community is complicated by our economic limitations. The factors which have kept the South a tributary section have also kept it poor and lacking in sufficient industry to develop and to provide enough jobs and enough public funds for every public need. Yet the only justification offered for those laws which have for their purpose the separation of the races is that they are intended to minister to the welfare and integrity of both races. There has been widespread and inexcusable discrimination in the administration of these laws. The white Southerner has an obligation to interest himself in the legitimate aspirations of the Negro. This means correcting the discrimination between the races in the allocation of school funds; in the number and quality of schools, and in the salaries of teachers. In public travel where the law demands a separation of the races, primary justice and a simple sense of fair play demand the facilities for safety, comfort and health should be equal. The distribution of public utilities and public benefits, such as sewers, water, housing, street and sidewalk paving, playgrounds, public health and hospital facilities should come to the Negro upon the basis of population and need.

It is recognized that there is often practical discrimination by some peace officers and in some courts in the treatment of Negro prisoners and in the abrogation of their civil rights. There is no such discrimination incorporated in the laws of any of the Southern states. False arrests, brutal beatings and other evils must be stopped.

In the economic field, unquestionably procedures should be undertaken to establish fully the right to receive equal pay for equal work. To do otherwise works a wrong to our entire economic life and to our self respect. With so large a proportion of our wage-earning population belonging to the minority race, if we cannot plan for a well-trained, well-employed and prosperous Negro population, the economic future of the South is hopeless.

*Conference of White Southerners on Race Relations, Atlanta, Georgia, April 8, 1943.

Most of the Negroes in the South are on farms and in rural communities. Failure to provide for them all the facilities for improving agricultural practices through schools, county agents, and supervision holds back all of the South. Fair wages, longer tenures of leases and increased opportunities for farm ownership are also necessary

All men who believe in justice, who love peace and who believe in the meaning of this country are under the necessity of working together to draw off from the body of human society the poison of racial antagonism. This is one of the disruptive forces which unless checked will ultimately disturb and threaten the stability of the nation. Either to deny or to ignore the increased tension between the white and the colored races would be a gesture of insincerity.

That there are acute and intricate problems associated with two races living side by side in the South cannot be denied. But these problems can be solved and will ultimately disappear if they are brought out into an atmosphere of justice and good will. If we approach them with contempt in one group and with resentment in the other group, then we work on hopeless terms. The solution of these problems can be found only in men of both races who are known to be men of determined good will. The ultimate solution will be found in evolutionary methods and not in ill-founded revolutionary movements which promise immediate solutions.

We agree with the Durham Conference that it is "unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life." We agree also that "it is a wicked notion that the struggle by the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity, and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government."

It is futile to imagine or to assert that the problem will solve itself. The need is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation and a mutual respect.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE COLLABORATION COMMITTEE*

Richmond, Virginia

June 16, 1943

This is a day of great differences, strong feelings, and epochal conflicts throughout the world. Yet the world's greatest need and hope is to find common ground for universal action and balanced harmony among all peoples. Manifestly, such a goal must be reached through cooperative approximation to the largest measure of agreement in line with the largest number of values and the largest number of people.

We face, therefore, the double crisis of standing firm for the conservation and preservation of human rights; yet to seek these ends by the way of peace and planning rather than by conflict and revolution.

In America, and particularly in the South, we face the problem of readjustments to meet the demands of present and post-war conditions with reference to the Negro and the future development of a great region of the Nation. This, exclusive of the war, is the great crisis of the South and Nation.

This is the problem of two great peoples caught up in the midst of transition between the powerful heritage of the past and the mighty pull of the future. For here is the white South, a great people often doing little things and good people often doing bad things. And here is the Negro South, caught as always between the upper and nether millstones of conflicting forces and also paying the price of extraordinary transition from level to level of cultural achievement, and needing plenty of understanding and cooperation. And here is the white South inexorably conditioned by cultural complexes, suffering terribly, too, and needing sympathy and help as few peoples have ever needed in the annals of man. And, even more important, the two, white South and black South, are part and parcel of the Nation, whose people need scarcely less than the two regional peoples the sense of time and wisdom.

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status and the welfare of the country as a whole.

This is a rare challenge to the leadership of the South: to the white leadership to find new ways of cooperation and to justify increased confidence of the Negro leadership in the white South; to the Negro leadership, to sense the difficulties involved and to meet increasing demands, without slowing down their essential efforts.

As evidence of the promise of this leadership, two recent Southern conferences on race relations, one at Durham, under the auspices of Negro leadership, and one in Atlanta under the auspices of white leadership, have blazed new trails. As a follow-up of these and with the above problems and backgrounds in mind, we, a group of Southern whites and Negroes, representing both the Durham and Atlanta groups, meeting as a collaboration committee at Richmond, Virginia, June 16, 1943, and following the general trend of the Atlanta group, urge the general adaptation of the Durham statement entitled "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South," which has had extraordinary nation-wide endorsement.

*Joint committee of representatives of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences.

The framers of this covenant, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, have included adequate and searching analysis of the principal issues involved, duly interpreted in their proper perspective. The problems so featured include political and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, social welfare and health.

In the area of political and civil rights: the essential problems featured were those of franchise and the ballot, jury service, personal security, services in public carriers, the elimination of violence, within and without the law, the elimination of lynching, and the employment of an increasingly larger number of Negroes in the public service.

In the area of work opportunities: the increased training for all skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled labor, and opportunity for employment; the readaptation of labor union policies both for the best interests of Negroes and labor unions; the problems of dual standards of pay; support of, but guarding against discrimination in, local, state, and federal procedures; special problems of service workers and standards of living.

In the area of education: equalized opportunities in all aspects but especially including institutions of higher learning, professional training, and equal salaries.

In the area of agriculture: adequate opportunity for the Negro farmer, including a sound system of tenancy, adequate state and federal assistance, increased opportunity for farm ownership, fair farm wages, and the wider employment of Negro farm and home agents.

In the area of military service: along with the obligation to serve, the opportunity for full participation and advancement in the war activities and a continuing better adjustment of unsatisfactory situations.

In the area of social welfare and health: adequate provisions for safeguarding the public health, for training physicians and nurses, and for their employment. Also, the erection of low-cost housing and other facilities for improving community life.

We recognize now the importance of affirmative action, without which we shall fall far short of our hopes and possibilities. To this end, we direct that the continuing committee, as appointed by the two groups now consolidated in this larger collaboration committee, be charged with the responsibility for working out methods and practical means of approach. We urge especially that efforts be begun to prepare the post-war world for a wise and successful reception of our returning soldiers and to prepare both our soldiers and the people for attitudes and procedures adequate to carry the great load of post-war needs. In all these, we urge the public to a new sense of the meaning of these needs as they accord with our professed principles of Christianity and democracy.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL IS ORGANIZED

. . . Outgrowth of Durham-Atlanta-Richmond Conferences

A group of Southern Negroes, acting as individuals but holding positions of influence in their race, held a conference in Durham, N. C., October 20, 1942. They met to discuss the Southern Negroes' status and the changes which, in their opinion, would benefit not only Negroes themselves but the South and the Nation. In December, the results of this meeting were given to the public in a statement which has become known as the "Durham Statement."

Since only Southern Negroes had participated in the conference and in the drafting of the statement, Southern white people could not ignore it. Whether or not there was agreement on their part with what the statement contained, they were impelled to make some formal reply. This reply, signed by more than three hundred Southern white people, was prepared at a conference in Atlanta, April 8, by a hundred and fifteen citizens of ten states. Like the Negroes, they spoke only as individuals, though each held some position of influence in Southern life. Their reply is known as the "Atlanta Statement."

Out of these two conferences grew a third. This one differed from its predecessors in that it was bi-racial in character and composed of delegated individuals. The "Richmond Statement" was made by the Collaboration Committee of Negro and white delegates of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences meeting in Richmond, Virginia, June 16, 1943.*

The Collaboration Committee appointed twenty-two white persons and nineteen Negroes to act for them in deciding the next step to be taken. This committee meeting in Atlanta, August 4, recognizing that conditions growing out of the war called for a new approach to the problems of the South's bi-racial society, resolved itself into the Southern Regional Council and instructed the Co-Chairmen, Dr. Charles S. Johnson and Dr. Howard W. Odum, to proceed immediately to perfect the organization. Something of the policy and the philosophy of the Southern Regional Council is found in the resolution adopted unanimously by the committee.

*These three statements printed in one pamphlet may be procured for five cents by writing to the Southern Frontier.

Resolution Launching the Southern Regional Council

We are gathered together here in solemn assembly, conscious of our heritage and opportunity. In the name and spirit of America and all her resources and institutions we covenant together in harmony and unanimity to make this day, or what this day should bring to pass, epochal in a new purpose, a new understanding, and a new fellowship.

In the name and spirit of America's science and education we seek to find and to tell the truth. In the name and spirit of America's democracy we seek the way of equal opportunity. In the name of America's patriotism, we strive for loyalty to the American dream, for leadership to guide, and for statesmanship adequate to carry the burden of the new America. In the name and spirit of America's Christianity, we search for the new faith of fellowship. In the name of humanity, we propose to substitute the measures of the good society for the old biological struggle for physical survival. In the name and spirit of all these and the living reality of a complex world, we dedicate ourselves to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

Four ways there are, and perhaps more, of approaching these laudable and attainable ends. First, we agree upon a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better ordering of our society. We recognize fully that in the present crisis this covenant is as important as the earlier compacts of the forefathers, and that the framework within which we covenant together must comprehend a concept and a charter which guarantees equality of opportunity for all peoples. This means more specifically as bearing upon the burden of our present counseling that the Negro in the United States and in every region is entitled to and should have every guarantee of equal opportunity that every other citizen of the United States has within the framework of the American democratic system of government.

Second, we dedicate ourselves unswervingly to the successful achievement of this task. Since in the order of all nature and creations and of the growth and development of the people and society there are always certain features peculiar to each society; since in the order of democracy there are certain elemental principles of self-government that are inherent in each folk and regional society; and since in both the physical and cultural heritage of the South there are certain cumulative and tragic handicaps that represent powerful factors in the situation, we appeal to the Nation, in covenant with the South, to exercise a wisdom and maturity through which methods, procedures, and rates of change may be worked out in the spirit of, and in conformity with, the principles of our American democracy.

Third, to the end that there will be actual realistic accomplishments rather than mere words and that there may be possible ways and means of actually insuring progress in all approaches to these goals of equal opportunity, we urge the South to pool its efforts and set up a strong, unified, Southern Regional Council, constituted of representatives of both races and of private and public groups. Such a council, in subscribing to the new declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all other available agencies and individuals in private and in public life and especially with a similar national group when established.

Fourth, since the crisis is not only southern but national, not only for whites but for Negroes and other races as well, and since the central purpose of the new council is cooperation and the building of active good will, we urge the formation of a National Committee on race and regional development, constituted of representatives of all races and of public and private groups. Such a committee, subscribing to the declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all available agencies and individuals in private and public life.

We recognize the sweep and power of the emotions in time of war and crisis and the rights and tendencies in the democratic way of life for thousands of individuals and groups to agitate, organize, and promote their own peculiar programs. This is and must be the essence of a democracy. But it is also the way of democracy to focus upon fundamentals and to give opportunity to responsible leadership through the orderly agencies of government and of private citizens. To this end no greater service can be rendered to the Nation than to covenant together in responsible organizations, to provide leadership and clearing house, and to avoid conflicts, waste and overlapping, on the one hand, and, on the other, to minimize the harmful influence of irresponsible forces in this great hour of need for good will and for effective ways of doing what is needed. We feel that in these councils may be approximated needs more nearly than in any other ways that now appear.

The Nation is committed now to what is generally called, both in private business and in public life, post-war planning to the end that we may be ready for the demobilization and reintegration of our millions of returning soldiers into the best possible American way of life. Recognizing that the problems of the folk and of race constitute a more difficult problem than that of physical planning, by the same token we urge all the more the obligation to apply to this great area of our democracy the best the sciences, social sciences, the humanities, and religion can do in the realistic working out of next steps.

To this end, the present membership of the Continuation Committees of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences is hereby constituted the nucleus of the new Council; and the officers are authorized (1) to take immediate steps for the legal incorporation of the Council; (2) to appoint immediately the necessary staff personnel to implement this program, and (3) to enlarge the present membership in order to make it fully representative of all the interests encompassed by this program.

It is also respectfully urged that the President of the United States appoint a National Committee such as is suggested above.

A GROUP OF SOUTHERNERS

representing both races, many occupations, all faiths and denominations got together in 1943 . . .

and decided . . .

IT'S UP TO US, as Southerners, to join together, face up to the South's problems honestly, and work to solve them . . .

That's how the SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL was born

SRC belongs to its members. It is non-profit, non-denominational, non-political. It is Southern in its make-up and its work.

SRC is not, however, an "isolationist" movement to separate the South's problems from the Nation's. It welcomes support and understanding from all sincere people, wherever they are. But voting membership is limited to persons living in the South.

SRC members include people from all walks of life — white and Negro, city and country, men and women, church people, businessmen, educators, labor men, and plain everyday citizens.

SRC BELIEVES that the South can be prosperous and healthy, freed of poverty, prejudice, and fear . . .

It believes in the ideals of democracy for which this Nation was founded . . .

It believes — in the name of democracy, Christianity, and common decency — that the Negro must have equal opportunity in the schoolroom, on the job, and at the polls . . .

SRC BELIEVES THAT DEMOCRACY IS SAFE ONLY WHEN EVERYBODY CONTRIBUTES TO IT AND EVERYBODY SHARES IN IT.

TO ACCOMPLISH ITS AIMS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL WORKS THROUGH - - -

★ Its local groups. SRC has State Divisions and affiliated committees in eleven Southern States, and smaller groups in communities over the South . . .

★ Its Regional Office. SRC's headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia, guides the work of the local groups, advises private and official agencies, issues timely statements and publications . . .

★ A monthly bulletin. NEW SOUTH keeps members and friends of SRC informed about Southern problems and progress . . .

★ Special pamphlets. These give the facts, based on careful study of the region, in simple, illustrated form . . .

★ Public opinion. SRC helps create a better climate of opinion through newspapers, radio, speakers . . .

★ Cooperating groups. SRC works with civic clubs, church groups, labor organizations, and other groups to bring about wholesome improvements . . .

★ Home Town Self-Surveys. SRC helps local groups organize to collect the facts about their communities—and to follow through with corrective action.

TO ACCOMPLISH ITS AIMS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL WORKS FOR - - -

★ Better understanding between the races. SRC helps lessen the violence that has plagued the South by providing a meeting ground where people of good will, white and colored, can come together, air their common problems, achieve honest solutions . . . When trouble brews, SRC members know whom to reach and what to do . . .

★ Equal justice. SRC watches the courts . . . points out injustices . . . works for fair police practices . . . has successfully urged the hiring of Negro policemen in towns and cities throughout the South . . .

★ Equal public services. SRC works to get a square break for ALL our people in —

HOSPITALS AND MEDICAL CARE

SCHOOLS

JOBS

FARMING OPPORTUNITIES

VETERANS SERVICES

HOUSING

★ Full citizenship for everyone in

VOTING

JURY SERVICE

REPRESENTATION ON OFFICIAL BODIES

★ State government for ALL the people. SRC works for the day when our States will serve all citizens equally.

SOME ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL - - -

Supplied the basic facts in successful campaigns to secure Negro policemen in Atlanta, Memphis, Nashville, Conway (S.C.), and other cities.

During 1945-1947 helped smooth the path for the returning veteran by a widespread field program. Nine World War II veterans — eight of them Negroes — made personal visits to veterans servicing officials in over a third of the counties in the South . . . acquainted them with the needs of Negro veterans . . . taught veterans the full range of services they could get . . . spent $75,000 on this project alone.

Sponsored the 1948 Southwide Meeting on Human and Civil Rights at which four hundred community leaders, representing both races and every Southern State, devised ways to strengthen basic rights at the local level.

At strategic times during the past year, vigorously urged upon each Southern governor a positive program to assure the civil rights of the Southern people.

Persistently advocated the same course for newspapers, church bodies, and other influential groups in the region.

Got the facts into newspapers over the South about health, housing, education, voting, law-enforcement.

THROUGH STATE DIVISIONS AND AFFILIATES - - -

Aroused public opinion against the Ku Klux Klan and played an active part in getting local ordinances passed curbing the activities of such terroristic groups.

Persuaded numerous white churches throughout Georgia to be hosts to interracial meetings.

Served as technical consultant to the steering committee of the Jacksonville, Fla., Self-Survey, which has brought about more than seventy concrete improvements in the Negro community.

Played a leading part in bringing about the establishment of the State Training School for Negro Girls in Texas.

Was largely responsible for the creation of Negro community centers in Macon, Savannah, and other Georgia cities . . . Helped secure a modern, well-equipped Negro Boys' Club for Atlanta.

Aided the Florida Citizens Committee on Education in drawing up recommendations to the General Assembly which would provide equal education for ALL children.

Took the lead in getting Kentucky's Day Law amended to permit Negroes to receive medical and nursing education in institutions formerly open to white students only.

TO DO THESE THINGS

and more, the Southern Regional Council needs YOUR support. Here are three things you can do to help:

1 Join SRC and work actively with other members in your community

2 Contribute to SRC's operating funds

3 Get your friends to work with you and SRC

THE SOUTH'S PROBLEMS ARE Our PROBLEMS — YOURS and MINE
TOGETHER WE CAN BUILD A MORE PROSPEROUS, DEMOCRATIC FUTURE

Meeting Setting up SRC

At the request of the Chairman, Msgr. McNamara offered the opening prayer.

Dr. Odum proposed that Dr. Alexander and the two Executive Directors be asked to select a National Advisory Committee, composed of representatives of national organizations and interests, whose advice the Council might seek whenever it seemed advisable, and that not more than 100 honorary Fellows (men and women between the ages of 25 and 50, who would subscribe to the program of the Council and would agree to undertake special work for the Council in the states when needed) be elected.

Dr. William E. Cole and Dr. Ira DeA. Reid presented statements outlining a suggested program for the Council. Dr. Cole explained that they had tried not only to conserve as much as possible of the good which was in the program of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, but to go beyond that.

Messages were read from the following who were unable to be present: Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, Mr. Ernest Delpit, Dr. Edgard G. McDowell, and Dr. F. D. Patterson.

The Chairman requested Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, who was instrumental in calling the Durham Conference, to give his views on the plan of organization suggested for the Council. Dr. Hancock assured the group that the statements read by Dr. Cole and Dr. Reid included what he had in mind - that the Council be composed of committees on agriculture, industry, etc., and that state and county committees be set up.

In discussing the suggested program, Dr. Alexander said that he would like to have emphasis put on the police and law enforcement officials, as it was his opinion that improvement in the whole police set-up in our society is an immediate need. Some cities, he said, are already at work on this. Dr. Washington said that we must get life and objectivity into the Council, and to do this it will be necessary to select as members men and women who are not interested in race per se, but in the whole problem of Southern development.

Mr. Shulhafer asked whether this group would compose the Board of Directors of the Council, or whether a new Board would be elected. Dr. Odum replied that this is an ex officio Board, but that the authorization of the Council is official, since the Commission had voted that the officers and Executive Committee should set up the new Council as soon as they were ready to do so.

Dr. Johnson requested Dr. Odum to report for the informal committee which had been working with some of the sources of funds. Dr. Odum said that a minimum of $35,000 had been secured on which to begin, with the prospect of a larger amount as the program develops.

Dr. Alexander said he felt that a vigorous effort should be made to get an additional $15,000, or a total of $50,000, with which to begin to operate the first year, and that the finance committee should continue to explore areas of special interest.

The meeting rose for lunch, to reconvene at 2:30 P. M.

Afternoon Session - 2:30 P. M.

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman, Dr. Johnson.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the governing body of the Council be composed of not exceeding 75 members, entitled Board of Directors, and that approximately one-third of those be selected from the fields of business, industry, labor, agriculture, public service, and the professions of law and medicine.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the Continuation Committee meeting in Atlanta on August 4 and November 27, including Ralph McGill, Chairman of the Atlanta Conference, be named as the Board of Directors of the Council and that they be empowered as the temporary governing board to take such action as may be necessary to inaugurate the Council's work.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that this Board as at present constituted recommend the election of Dr. William E. Cole as Executive Director and Dr. Ira DeA. Reid as Associate Executive Director of the Council; that after they are elected by the pro forma Executive Committee, or Steering Committee, they be authorized, together with the Executive Committee, to set up the organization as rapidly as possible.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that a temporary Steering Committee be appointed, composed of the Atlanta members together with Doctors Alexander, Odum, and Johnson, who will serve also as a temporary Executive Committee upon incorporation, and that counsel for the Council be asked to give advice as to the proper method of handling this so as to do away with the necessity for a Board meeting in order to attend to the formalities of incorporation.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the directors and the Steering Committee be authorized to explore the advisability of nominating a National Advisory Committee, and that they be requested to bring to the full meeting, to be held in February, recommendations and nominations.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the Steering Committee and the Executive Directors be requested to explore the desirability of this Board's recommending the election of not more than 100 honorary Fellows in the South, and to report back to the main Board meeting in February both the advisability of this and names to be considered.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that temporarily we define the South as the following states, within which the Council will operate: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the Executive Directors be requested to bring in recommendations as to membership of the Council.

The Directors were asked, also, to bring to the February meeting recommendations as to what will be expected of members of the Council in their local communities - whether there will be local groups and, if so, whether these groups will have the same general objectives as the Council.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the purpose of the Southern Regional Council be described in the charter as: "A regional council for the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South," with such changes as Mr. Leonard Haas, the attorney who is preparing the charter, may deem it necessary to make to conform with Georgia law.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the Co-Chairmen of the Council be constituted Co-Chairmen of the Steering or Executive Committee.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the Executive Committee be authorized to do any and all things necessary to incorporate the organization.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that Dr. Alexander be elected a member of the Council and of this temporary governing Board.

Dr. Johnson remarked that he was very much impressed with the importance of labor in this whole field and asked Mr. Gillman whether he had any general observations which he would like to make that would be helpful to the Council.

Mr. Gillman replied that the CIO is very much interested in bettering the economic standards of the people, and the members realize, he said, that this can be done only by improving the standards of underprivileged people, regardless of race. He further stated that, if given an opportunity to function with this Council, labor can be of tremendous help in the various states. He was convinced that most of the CIO members would be more than willing to do everything they possibly can to advance the program outlined at this meeting.

Dr. Alexander referred again to the $35,000 budget, which he was sure was inadequate. Dr. Reid remarked that he and Dr. Cole had recommended a minimum budget of $47,500. Dr. Alexander said that he thought those who had been working on finances should now be instructed to endeavor to find an additional $15,000 before February 1, so as to provide for a budget of $50,000 this first year.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the committee which has been working on finances be instructed to find additional money for the initial budget.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the cooperation of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation be requested in such steps as are necessary in achieving the ends suggested at this meeting.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

IT WAS VOTED that the Steering Committee be instructed to secure quarters for the Council as soon as they are legally qualified to do so.

Dr. Klement said that Atlanta University would be glad to be host for meetings of the Council. The committee expressed appreciation of his offer, and it was agreed that a two-day meeting of the full membership should be held at Atlanta University in February 1944.

Dr. Mays asked that, as the Council membership is built up, we keep in mind the fact that more able women in the South should be added.

Mrs. Tilly expressed the fear that there will be some loss to the work unless the proper announcement is made of the fact that the Commission on Interracial Cooperation is merging into something bigger. She urged that carefully planned publicity be given out at the proper time.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned.

THE DURHAM CONFERENCE STATEMENT

(On October 20, 1942, a group of Negro Southerners met in Durham, North Carolina, to discuss their problems and the changes which, in their opinion, would benefit not only Negroes themselves but the South and the Nation. A committee was instructed to prepare a statement embodying the thinking of the Conference. In December, 1942, the following document was given to the public. It was entitled: "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South; a Statement by Southern Negroes.")

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common-sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status, and the welfare of the country as a whole.

With these problems in mind, we, a group of Southern Negroes, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, and in the belief that we voice the sentiments of many of the Negroes of the Nation as well as the South, take this means of recording our considered views of the issues before us.

1. Our Nation is engaged in a world-wide struggle, the success of which, both in arms and ideals, is paramount and demands our first loyalty.

2. Our loyalty does not, in our view, preclude consideration now of problems and situations that handicap the working out of internal improvements in race relations essential to our full contribution to the war effort, and of the inevitable problems of post-war reconstruction, especially in the South where we reside.

3. The South, with its twenty-five million people, one-third of whom are Negroes, presents a unique situation, not only because of the size of the Negro population but because of the legal and customary patterns of race relations which are invariably and universally associated with racial discriminations. We recognize the strength and age of these patterns. We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races or classes or creeds; however, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework.

4. We regard it as unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life.

5. We have the courage and faith to believe, however, that it is possible to evolve in the South a way of life, consistent with the principles for which we as a Nation are fighting throughout the world, that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fears.

Political and Civil Rights

1. We regard the ballot as a safeguard of democracy. Any discrimination against citizens in the exercise of the voting privilege, on account of race or poverty, is detrimental to the freedom of these citizens and to the integrity of the State. We therefore record ourselves as urging now:

a. The abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting
b. The abolition of the white primary
c. The abolition of all forms of discriminatory practices, evasions of the law, and intimidations of citizens seeking to exercise their right of franchise

2. Exclusion of Negroes from jury service because of race has been repeatedly declared unconstitutional. This practice, we believe, can and should be discontinued now.

3. (a) Civil rights include personal security against abuses of police power by white officers of the law. These abuses, which include wanton killings, and almost routine beatings of Negroes, whether they be guilty or innocent of an offense, should be stopped now, not only out of regard for the safety of Negroes, but of common respect for the dignity and fundamental purpose of the law.

(b) It is the opinion of this group that the employment of Negro police will enlist the full support of Negro citizens in control of lawless elements of their own group.

4. In the public carriers and terminals, where segregation of the races is currently made mandatory by law as well as by established custom, it is the duty of Negro and white citizens to insist that these provisions be equal in kind and quality and in character of maintenance.

5. Although there has been, over the years, a decline in lynchings, the practice is still current in some areas of the South, and substantially, even if indirectly, defended by resistance to Federal legislation designed to discourage the practice. We ask that the States discourage this fascistic expression by effective enforcement of present or of new laws against this crime by apprehending and punishing parties participating in this lawlessness.

If the States are unable, or unwilling, to do this, we urge the support of all American citizens who believe in law and order in securing Federal legislation against lynching.

6. The interests and securities of Negroes are involved directly in many programs of social planning and administration; in the emergency rationing, wage and rent control programs. We urge the use of qualified Negroes on these boards, both as a means of intelligent representation and a realistic aid to the functioning of these bodies.

Industry and Labor

Continuing opposition to the employment of Negroes in certain industries appears to proceed from (1) the outdated notions of an economy of scarcity, inherited from an industrial age when participation in the productive enterprises was a highly competitive privilege; (2) the effects of enemy propaganda designed to immobilize a large number of potentially productive workers in the American war effort; (3) the age-old prejudices from an era when the economic system required a labor surplus which competed bitterly within its own ranks for the privilege of work; (4) the established custom of reserving technical processes to certain racial groups; and (5) craft monopolies which have restricted many technical skills to a few workers.

Our collective judgment regarding industrial opportunities for Negroes may be summarized as follows:

1. The only tenable basis of economic survival and development for Negroes is inclusion in unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled branches of work in the industries or occupations of the region to the extent that they are equally capable. Circumstances will vary so as to make impossible and impracticable any exact numerical balance, but the principles enunciated by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee are regarded by us as sound and economically essential.

2. There should be the same pay for the same work.

3. Negro workers should seek opportunities for collective bargaining and security through membership in labor organizations. Since there can be no security for white workers if Negroes are unorganized, and vice versa, labor unions of white workers should seek the organization of Negro workers on a fair and equal basis.

4. We deplore the practice of those labor unions which bar Negroes from membership, or otherwise discriminate against them, since such unions are working against the best interest of the labor movement. We hold that only those labor unions which admit Negroes to membership and participation on a fair and democratic basis should be eligible for the benefits of the National Labor Relations Board, Railway Labor Act, State Labor Relations Acts and other protective labor legislation.

5. It is the duty of local, State, and Federal agencies to insist upon and enforce provisions for the industrial training of Negroes equal in quality and kind with that of other citizens. We believe, further, that Negroes should have equal opportunity in training programs carried on by industries and by labor organizations.

6. We urge Negro representation on regional organizations concerned with the welfare of workers.

7. We regard the wage-and-job freezing order of the War Manpower Commission as holding the seeds of a distinct disadvantage to Negroes and other marginal workers. Most of these workers are now employed in the lowest-income brackets. The "freeze" order can remove the opportunity for economic advancement. There is as yet no assurance that under existing circumstances the War Manpower Commission can deal more equitably by the Negro in the future than it has in the past.

8. We are convinced that the South's economic and cultural development can be accelerated by increasing the purchasing power and skills of Negro workers.

Service Occupations

Any realistic estimate of the occupational situation of Negroes supports the view that Negroes will be employed in greatest proportions for a long time in service occupations. We see, however, possibilities of making of these fields scientifically guided areas in which training and organization will play a greater part in bringing about results mutually beneficial to employer and employee. We believe that greater service will be rendered and greater good will be engendered in the service fields if the following principles are observed:

1. More thorough training should be provided workers who plan to enter the service field, but the reward of the job and treatment on the job should be such as to make the workers feel that their training is justified. Opportunity should be given the service worker to advance through the opening up of additional opportunities.

2. A wholesome environment, living accommodations, food, uniforms and rest rooms, all of an approved standard, should be provided service workers.

3. Opportunity should be given the service worker to live, after his stipulated hours of work, as an individual undisturbed in his private life by the whims and caprices of his employers.

4. In view of the strides made by labor in general, while the service worker's lot has remained about the same, service workers should be organized into unions with recognized affiliations.

5. Service workers should be included in the provisions for old age insurance, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, the wage and hour act, and other benefits of Social Security legally provided to workers of other categories.

We believe that these provisions will help to insure more intelligent service and wholesome loyalty (which will improve the quality of labor and personal relations) in service occupations.

Education

As equal opportunity for all citizens is the very foundation of the democratic faith, and of the Christian ethic which gave birth to the ideal of democratic living, it is imperative that every measure possible be taken to insure an equality of education to Negroes and, indeed, to all underprivileged peoples.

1. Basic to improvement in Negro education is better schools, which involves expenditures by States of considerably more funds for the Negro schools. This group believes that a minimum requirement now is (a) equalization of salaries of white and Negro teachers on the basis of equal preparation and experience; (b) an expanded school building program for Negro schools designed to overcome the present racial disparity in physical facilities; this program to begin as soon as building materials are available; (c) revision of the school program in terms of the social setting, vocational needs and marginal cultural characteristics of the Negro children; and (d) the same length of school term for all children in local communities. Our growing knowledge of the effect of environment upon the intelligence and social adjustment of children, in fact leads us to believe that to insure equality of educational opportunity it is not enough to provide for the underprivileged child, of whatever race, the same opportunities provided for those on superior levels of familial, social, and economic life. We feel it a function of Government to assure equalization far beyond the mere expenditure of equivalent funds for salaries and the like.

2. The education of Negroes in the South has reached the point at which there is increased demand for graduate and professional training. This group believes that this training should be made available equally for white and Negro eligible students in terms defined by the United States Supreme Court in the decision on the case of Gaines versus the University of Missouri.

3. Where it is established that States cannot sustain the added cost of equalization, Federal funds should be made available to overcome the differentials between white and Negro facilities and between Southern and national standards.

4. It is the belief of this group that the special problems of Negro education make demands for intelligent and sympathetic representation of these problems on school boards by qualified persons of the Negro race.

5. The education of Negro youth can be measurably aided by the use of Negro enforcement officers of truancy and compulsory education laws.

Agriculture

The South is the most rural section of the Nation, and Negroes, who constitute 33 per cent of its population, are responsible for an important share of the agricultural production on Southern farms.

We recognize that the South is economically handicapped and that many of its disabilities are deeply rooted in agricultural maladjustments. To win the war, there is need for increased production of food, fibre and fats. In the present organization of agriculture, Negroes are a large part of the sharecropper and tenant group, and a great majority of the rural Negro workers are in this class. Circumstances deny the Negro farmer sufficient opportunity to make his full contribution as a citizen. We suggest the following measures as means of increasing the production of the area, raising the status and spirits of Negro farmers, and of improving the region's contribution to the total war effort.

1. Establishment of sufficient safeguards in the system of tenancy to promote the development of land and home ownership and more security on the land, by:

a. Written contracts
b. Longer lease terms
c. Higher farm wages for day laborers
d. Balanced farm programs, including food and feed crops for present tenants and day laborers.

2. Adequate Federal assistance to Negro farmers should be provided on an equitable basis. The war effort can be materially aided if adequate provisions are made now for the interpretation of governmental policies to rural Negroes.

3. The equitable distribution of funds for teaching agriculture in the Negro land grant colleges to provide agricultural research and experimentation for Negro farmers.

4. The appointment of qualified Negroes to governmental planning and policy-making bodies concerned with the common farmer, and the membership of Negro farmers in general farmers' organizations and economic cooperatives, to provide appropriate representation and to secure maximum benefits to our common wealth.

Military Service

We recognize and welcome the obligation of every citizen to share in the military defense of the nation, and we seek, along with the privilege of offering our lives, the opportunity of other citizens of full participation in all branches of the military service, and of advancement in responsibility and rank according to ability.

Negro soldiers, in line of military duty and in training in the South, encounter particularly acute racial problems in transportation and in recreation and leave areas. They are frequently mistreated by the police. We regard these problems as unnecessary and destructive to morale.

Social Welfare and Health

1. We believe that some of the more acute problems of Negro health, family, and personal disorganization are a reflection of deficiencies in economic opportunity, but that social and health services for Negroes will continue to be necessary in considerable amounts, even with improvement of their economic status. As a means of reducing the mortality and public contagion resulting from inadequacies of medical attention and health knowledge, this group believes that minimum health measures for Negroes would include the following:

a. Mandatory provisions that a proportion of the facilities in all public hospitals be available for Negro patients
b. That Negro doctors be either included on the staff for services to Negro patients, according to their special qualifications, or permitted as practicioners the same privilege and courtesy as other practitioners in the public hospitals
c. That Negro public health nurses and social workers be more extensively used in both public and private organizations.

2. We advocate the extension of slum clearance and erection of low-cost housing as a general, as well as a special, group advantage. The Federal Government has set an excellent precedent here with results that offer much promise for the future.

* * * * *

It is a wicked notion that the struggle of the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the Nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government.

The effect of the war has been to make the Negro, in a sense, the symbol and protagonist of every other minority in America and in the world at large. Local issues in the South, while admittedly holding many practical difficulties, must be met wisely and courageously if this Nation is to become a significant political entity in a new international world. The correction of these problems is not only a moral matter, but a practical necessity in winning the war and in winning the peace. Herein rests the chance to reveal our greatest weakness or our greatest strength.

THE ATLANTA CONFERENCE STATEMENT

(On April 8, 1943, a group of white Southerners met in Atlanta, Georgia, to consider the statement which had been issued by the Durham Conference. The results of their deliberations were made public in the following document.)

In October, 1942, a representative group of Southern Negro leaders met in Durham, N. C., and issued a statement in which they addressed themselves "to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations, within the democratic framework."

Their statement is so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and at the same time shows such good will that we gladly agree to cooperate.

We do not attempt to make here anything like a complete reply to the questions raised nor to offer solutions for all the vexing problems. We hope, however, to point the pathway for future cooperative efforts and to give assurance of our sincere good will and desire to cooperate in any sound program aimed at the improvement of race relations.

These Negro leaders rightly placed emphasis in their statement on discrimination in the administration of our laws on purely racial grounds. We are sensitive to this charge and admit that it is essentially just. From the Potomac to the Rio Grande there are some ten million Negroes. While all citizens are governed by the same laws, it is recognized that Negroes have little voice in the making and enforcement of the laws under which they must live. They are largely dependent upon the will of the majority group for the safety of life and property, education and health, and their general economic condition. This is a violation of the spirit of democracy. No Southerner can logically dispute the fact that the Negro, as an American citizen, is entitled to his civil rights and economic opportunities.

The race problem in any Southern community is complicated by our economic limitations. The factors which have kept the South a tributary section have also kept it poor and lacking in sufficient industry to develop and to provide enough jobs and enough public funds for every public need. Yet the only justification offered for those laws which have for their purpose the separation of the races is that they are intended to minister to the welfare and integrity of both races. There has been widespread and inexcusable discrimination in the administration of these laws. The white Southerner has an obligation to interest himself in the legitimate aspirations of the Negro. This means correcting the discrimination between the races in the allocation of school funds, in the number and quality of schools, and in the salaries of teachers. In public travel, where the law demands a separation of the races, primary justice and a simple sense of fair play demand the facilities for safety, comfort and health should be equal. The distribution of public utilities and public benefits, such as sewers, water, housing, street and sidewalk paving, playgrounds, public health and hospital facilities should come to the Negro upon the basis of population and need.

It is recognized that there is often practical discrimination by some peace officers and in some courts in the treatment of Negro prisoners and in the abrogation of their civil rights. There is no such discrimination incorporated in the laws of any of the Southern States. False arrests, brutal beatings and other evils must be stopped.

In the economic field, unquestionably, procedures should be undertaken to establish fully the right to receive equal pay for equal work. To do otherwise works a wrong to our entire economic life and to our self-respect. With so large a proportion of our wage-earning population belonging to the minority race, if we cannot plan for a well-trained, well-employed and prosperous Negro population, the economic future of the South is hopeless.

Most of the Negroes in the South are on farms and in rural communities. Failure to provide for them all the facilities for improving agricultural practices through schools, county agents, and supervision holds back all of the South. Fair wages, longer tenures of leases and increased opportunities for farm ownership are also necessary.

All men who believe in justice, who love peace and who believe in the meaning of this country are under the necessity of working together to draw off from the body of human society the poison of racial antagonism. This is one of the disruptive forces which, unless checked, will ultimately disturb and threaten the stability of the nation. Either to deny or to ignore the increased tension between the white and the colored races would be a gesture of insincerity.

That there are acute and intricate problems associated with two races living side by side in the South cannot be denied. But these problems can be solved and will ultimately disappear if they are brought out into an atmosphere of justice and good will. If we approach them with contempt in one group and with resentment in the other group, then we work on hopeless terms. The solution of these problems can be found only in men of both races who are known to be men of determined good will. The ultimate solution will be found in evolutionary methods and not in ill-founded revolutionary movements which promise immediate solutions.

We agree with the Durham Conference that it is "unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life." We agree also that "it is a wicked notion that the struggle by the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity, and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government."

It is futile to imagine or to assert that the problem will solve itself. The need is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation and a mutual respect.

THE RICHMOND CONFERENCE STATEMENT

(On June 16, 1943, a Collaboration Committee, composed of delegates from the Durham Conference and the Atlanta Conference, met in Richmond, Virginia. The following statement was issued by the Richmond Conference.)

This is a day of great differences, strong feelings, and epochal conflicts throughout the world. Yet the world's greatest need and hope is to find common ground for universal action and balanced harmony among all peoples. Manifestly, such a goal must be reached through cooperative approximation to the largest measure of agreement in line with the largest number of values and the largest number of people.

We face, therefore, the double crisis of standing firm for the conservation and preservation of human rights, yet to seek these ends by the way of peace and planning rather than by conflict and revolution.

In America, and particularly in the South, we face the problem of readjustments to meet the demands of present and post-war conditions with reference to the Negro and the future development of a great region of the Nation. This, exclusive of the war, is the great crisis of the South and Nation.

This is the problem of two great peoples caught up in the midst of transition between the powerful heritage of the past and the mighty pull of the future. For here is the white South, a great people often doing little things and good people often doing bad things. And here is the Negro South, caught, as always, between the upper and nether millstones of conflicting forces and also paying the price of extraordinary transition from level to level of cultural achievement, and needing plenty of understanding and cooperation. And here is the white South, inexorably conditioned by cultural complexes, suffering terribly too, and needing sympathy and help as few people have ever needed in the annals of man. And even more important, the two, white South and black South, are part and parcel of the Nation, whose people need scarcely less than the two regional peoples the sense of time and wisdom.

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negr status and the welfare of the country as a whole.

This is a rare challenge to the leadership of the South; to the white leadership, to find new ways of cooperation and to justify increased confidence of the Negro leadership in the white South; to the Negro leadership, to sense the difficulties involved and to meet increasing demands, without slowing down their essential efforts.

As evidence of the promise of this leadership, two recent Southern conferences on race relations, one at Durham, under the auspices of Negro leadership, and one in Atlanta under the auspices of white leadership, have blazed new trails.

As a follow-up of these and with the above problems and backgrounds in mind, we, a group of Southern whites and Negroes, representing both the Durham and Atlanta groups meeting as a collaboration committee at Richmond, Virginia, June 16, 1943, and following the general trend of the Atlanta group, urge the general adaptation of the Durham statement entitled "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South," which has had extraordinary nation-wide endorsement.

The framers of this covenant, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, have included adequate and searching analysis of the principal issues involved, duly interpreted in their proper perspective. The problems so featured include political and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, social welfare and health.

In the area of political and civil rights, the essential problems featured were those of franchise and the ballot; jury service; personal security; services in public carriers; the elimination of violence, within and without the law; the elimination of lynching; and the employment of an increasingly larger number of Negroes in the public service.

In the area of work opportunities: the increased training for all skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled labor, and opportunity for employment; the readaptation of labor union policies, both for the best interests of Negroes and labor unions; the problems of dual standards of pay; support of, but guarding against discrimination in, local, State, and federal procedures; special problems of service workers and standards of living.

In the area of education: equalized opportunities in all aspects, but especially including institutions of higher learning, professional training, and equal salaries.

In the area of agriculture: adequate opportunity for the Negro farmer, including a sound system of tenancy, adequate State and federal assistance, increased opportunity for farm ownership, fair farm wages, and the wider employment of Negro farm and home agents.

In the area of military service: along with the obligation to serve, the opportunity for full participation and advancement in the war activities and a continuing better adjustment of unsatisfactory situations.

In the area of social welfare and health: adequate provisions for safeguarding the public health, for training physicians and nurses, and for their employment. Also, the erection of low-cost housing and other facilities for improving community life.

We recognize now the importance of affirmative action, without which we shall fall far short of our hopes and possibilities. To this end, we direct that the continuing committee, as appointed by the two groups now consolidated in this larger collaboration committee, be charged with the responsibility for working out methods and practical means of approach. We urge especially that efforts be begun to prepare the post-war world for a wise and successful reception of our returning soldiers and to prepare both our soldiers and the people for attitudes and procedures adequate to carry the great load of post-war needs. In all these, we urge the public to a new sense of the meaning of these needs as they accord with our professed principles of Christianity and democracy.

THE ATLANTA RESOLUTION

(On August 4, 1943, a Continuation Committee, appointed by the Richmond Conference, met in Atlanta to consider ways and means of implementing the recommendations of the preceding Conferences. The Committee resolved itself into the nucleus of the Southern Regional Council and elected Dr. Howard W. Odum and Dr. Charles S. Johnson as Co-Chairmen. The following resolution was adopted unanimously by the Committee.)

We are gathered together here in solemn assembly, conscious of our heritage and opportunity. In the name and spirit of America and all her resources and institutions we covenant together in harmony and unanimity to make this day, or what this day should bring to pass, epochal in a new purpose, a new understanding, and a new fellowship.

In the name and spirit of America's science and education we seek to find and to tell the truth. In the name and spirit of America's democracy we seek the way of equal opportunity. In the name of America's patriotism, we strive for loyalty to the American dream, for leadership to guide, and for statesmanship adequate to carry the burden of the new America. In the name and spirit of America's Christianity, we search for the new faith of fellowship. In the name of humanity, we propose to substitute the measures of the good society for the old biological struggle for physical survival. In the name and spirit of all these and the living reality of a complex world, we dedicate ourselves to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

Four ways there are, and perhaps more, of approaching these laudable and attainable ends. First, we agree upon a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better ordering of our society. We recognize fully that in the present crisis this covenant is as important as the earlier compacts of the forefathers, and that the framework within which we covenant together must comprehend a concept and a charter which guarantees equality of opportunity for all peoples. This means more specifically as bearing upon the burden of our present counseling that the Negro in the United States and in every region is entitled to and should have every guarantee of equal opportunity that every other citizen of the United States has within the framework of the American democratic system of government.

Second, we dedicate ourselves unswervingly to the successful achievement of this task. Since in the order of all nature and creations and of the growth and development of the people and society there are always certain features peculiar to each society; since in the order of democracy there are certain elemental principles of self-government that are inherent in each folk and regional society; and since in both the physical and cultural heritage of the South there are certain cumulative and tragic handicaps that represent powerful factors in the situation, we appeal to the Nation, in covenant with the South, to exercise a wisdom and maturity through which methods, procedures, and rates of change may be worked out in the spirit of, and in conformity with, the principles of our American democracy.

Third, to the end that there will be actual realistic accomplishments rather than mere words and that there may be possible ways and means of actually insuring progress in all approaches to these goals of equal opportunity, we urge the South to pool its efforts and set up a strong, unified, Southern Regional Council, constituted of representatives of both races and of private and public groups. Such a council, in subscribing to the new declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all other available agencies and individuals in private and in public life, and especially with a similar national group, when established.

Fourth, since the crisis is not only Southern, but national, not only for whites, but for Negroes and other races as well, and since the central purpose of the new council is cooperation and the building of active good will, we urge the formation of a National Committee on race and regional development, constituted of representatives of all races and of public and private groups. Such a committee, subscribing to the declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all available agencies and individuals in private and public life.

We recognize the sweep and power of the emotions in time of war and crisis and the rights and tendencies in the democratic way of life for thousands of individuals and groups to agitate, organize, and promote their own peculiar programs. This is and must be the essence of a democracy. But it is also the way of democracy to focus upon fundamentals and to give opportunity to responsible leadership through the orderly agencies of government and of private citizens. To this end no greater service can be rendered to the Nation than to covenant together in responsible organizations, to provide leadership and clearing house, and to avoid conflicts, waste and overlapping, on the one hand, and, on the other, to minimize the harmful influence of irresponsible forces in this great hour of need for good will and for effective ways of doing what is needed. We feel that in these councils may be approximated needs more nearly than in any other ways that now appear.

The Nation is committed now to what is generally called, both in private business and in public life, post-war planning, to the end that we may be ready for the demobilization and reintegration of our millions of returning soldiers into the best possible American way of life. Recognizing that the problems of the folk and of race constitute a more difficult problem than that of physical planning, by the same token, we urge all the more the obligation to apply to this great area of our democracy the best the sciences, social sciences, the humanities, and religion can do in the realistic working out of next steps.

To this end, the present membership of the Continuation Committees of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences is hereby constituted the nucleus of the new Council; and the officers are authorized (1) to take immediate steps for the legal incorporation of the Council; (2) to appoint immediately the necessary staff personnel to implement this program; and (3) to enlarge the present membership in order to make it fully representative of all the interests encompassed by this program.

It is also respectfully urged that the President of the United States appoint a National Committee such as is suggested above.

The meeting was called to order by Dr. Howard W. Odum, who reported that the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, at a meeting held during the morning, had voted to merge with the Southern Regional Council, Inc.

At the request of the Chairman, Dr. M. Ashby Jones offered the opening prayer.

The Secretary was asked to read the resolution voted at the Commission meeting, as follows:

> It being made to appear to the meeting that all of the Commission's obligations and liabilities have been fully discharged, and further that the Southern Regional Council, having been duly incorporated to carry on the work with ideals and program similar to those of this corporation:
> It was, upon motion duly made and seconded-
> RESOLVED that the corporation transfer and convey to the Southern Regional Council, Inc., a corporation of Fulton County, Georgia, all of its property of every nature whatsoever and wherever situated, absolutely and in fee simple.

Dr. Odum addressed the members briefly, saying that in his opinion the Council represents the most united group that has approached the greatest problem America has outside of winning the war - "A problem that has no limit outside ourselves."

At the suggestion of Dr. Odum and on motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

1. IT WAS VOTED that Dr. F. D. Patterson be elected temporary chairman.

After taking the chair, Dr. Patterson said that it seemed appropriate to have a statement from one who had much to do with the development of the Durham Conference. He then introduced Dr. Gordon B. Hancock and invited him to make any statement which he wished to make at this organization meeting.

Dr. Hancock responded, saying that he felt that the time had come "to redeem interracialism, to destroy race prejudice, and to save the soul of this Nation." To do the job right, he said, we must have moral courage.

Dr. Patterson invited Mrs. Ames, General Field Secretary of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, to speak on the transition period between the Commission and the Southern Regional Council.

Mrs. Ames urged the Council to establish democratic processes within its own body and to make a study of Negro-White woman relationships.

Dr. Guy B. Johnson and Dr. Ira DeA. Reid, Executive Director and Associate Executive Director, respectively, spoke with reference to the suggested structure and program of the Council, which eventually will be conducted through five Commissions: Race (Human) Relations, Economic Affairs, Community Life and Welfare, Public Affairs, and Cultural Development. It was agreed that attention should be centered on the Commission on Race (Human) Relations during this first year.

On motion duly seconded and unanimously carried-

2. IT WAS VOTED that Miss Emily H. Clay be elected temporary secretary.

At the request of the Chairman, the Secretary read the minutes of the incorporators' meeting, after which the charter of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., was presented to the members.

The Board of Directors shall provide for an Executive Committee of not more than seven (7) members, with the President, Vice President, and Secretary-Treasurer as ex officio members.

Introductory Statement by Edwin R. Embree in opening
Conference on Race Relations
Chicago, March 21 and 22, 1944

This meeting is called for a very definite reason. We who have called it want help. Mr. Field, as publisher of two liberal newspapers, Doctor Johnson, as student and consultant on social problems, I, as officer of a foundation and chairman of a mayor's committee, are being deluged by questions and calls for help on race relations from cities throughout the North and West, by church groups, labor organizations, individuals and agencies of every sort. Calls on the Rosenwald Fund alone during recent months have taken one or two or three of our officers for periods of from one day to three weeks to city groups in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York, Toledo, Evansville, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Paul, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Church bodies - especially Methodists, Congregationalists, Jews, Catholics, and the Federal Council of Churches - are besieging us for information and guidance. Special calls come from school officials, teachers, labor leaders, and local officials.

Other agencies seem to be feeling the same stress. Urban Leagues, the NAACP, Civil Liberties Committees, social agencies have joined in city after city in calling for new and more effective means of meeting the new levels of interest and action.

Mr. Field, Doctor Johnson and I called this conference as individual citizens. It is true that each of us is connected with one or another foundation, and the calls that have poured in upon us have been in large part because of our institutional connections. But we must make this perfectly clear. If there are questions of financing this or that project, so far as we are concerned those questions must be taken up in regular course with our respective foundations. Our presence here - as yours - is not as delegates of any organization but as citizens deeply concerned with democracy.

We sense a new ferment in the whole matter of harmonious and effective living together. While repressive forces are striving to defeat at home what we are fighting to win abroad, many other forces are eager as never before to create a fully functioning democracy.

We need help in meeting the multitudinous calls, and we feel in these very pressures an opportunity for some fresh advance. So we have called together this representative group, including persons from many important agencies working in this field, to take an over-all view, to discuss the issues, and to plan ways to give cohesion and momentum to all this new interest in race relations.

It is not to be expected that so large and distinguished a group as this will meet for two days without exuding wisdom on various topics, some of them perhaps more important than the subjects we have in mind. We have no desire - and certainly no power - to limit the discussion. But we believe we will accomplish most, both in the discussion itself and in the results that may grow out of it, if we concentrate our major attention on a definite subject.

We have called this conference to discuss what can be done to bring minority groups, especially Negroes, into fuller participation in American democracy, especially in the North and West.

We recognize that there are many fronts to the battle for democracy. And various agencies are making the fight on various sectors: labor, social security, religous freedom. Each of these segments is a part of the whole. Victory on any one front helps toward the common goal. Without discounting the other aspects, we have called to this conference persons who have special knowledge of one phase, who are in a position to plan wisely and act effectively on the specific problem of race relations.

Negroes are the largest of the disadvantaged minorities in America - one tenth of the entire nation. They have suffered the cruelest hurts throughout our history and even today suffer peculiar discriminations. The treatment of Negroes is the most glaring discrepancy between American practice and the American creed. Unless we can bolster democracy at this point, the whole structure is liable to crumble. It may be proper, in our discussions and plans, to keep in mind the whole realm of minority problems. But for effectiveness we suggest concentration on Negro participation in democracy.

Let us be perfectly clear about our motives. We have not come together out of charity for some lowly brethren, but out of a common concern. Every one in this room has an equal stake in this battle. There may be a difference among us in the timing of the penalties. Negroes today are the chief victims of discrimination, along with the Mexicans and Orientals. Jews are already singled out for persecution, if and when the more vulnerable colored groups are attended to. Catholics are not very far behind. And against labor huge forces are eager to go into battle - a battle that will be easier if the labor front can be kept broken by racial and religious schisms. Whether we recognize ourselves as members of any special minority or not, we will all go down if the democratic way of ife is scuttled. No man - and no race - is an island. All are a part of the main. If the bell tolls the knell of the rights of any group, "never send to know for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for thee."

We suggest that we concentrate our discussions and our planning on race relations in the North and West.

Negroes are no longer massed wholly in the South. Today over four million are living in the North and West - one third of the whole group of slightly less than 13 million. New York State, in the 1940 Census, ranked ninth among the states in Negro population, standing just below Virginia and well above Tennessee and Florida and Arkansas. Chicago today has 335,000 Negroes, twice the number in any southern city. Negroes make up fully one tenth of such industrial cities as Philadelphia, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland. Even the new city of Los Angeles reported 64,000 Negroes in the 1940 Census and is estimated to have over 100,000 today. In three swift years war industry has swelled San Francisco's old and well-adjusted Negro colony of 2500 into ten times its number: 25,000 teeming, jostling, far-from-assimilated Brown Americans. With these numbers, northern cities must give attention to race relations.

Not only attention, but a new kind of attention. Too long the racial attitudes of the whole nation have been set by the traditions of a single small section. This conference is called to consider a new Declarationof Independence - independence to build our human relations not on the basis of southern feudalism but of American democracy. All these years certain Southerners have been saying, "Yankees, keep out. This is our problem. We will handle Negroes in our own way." It is now time for the rest of the country to say to the South, "We are going to do our social engineering in our way."

In emphasizing our interest in the problems of the Negroes of the North and West, we do not express or imply any lack of interest in the fate of any American anywhere. Whatever happens to any citizen - in the North, in the West or in the South - must be of concern to all groups who have at heart the welfare and social health of the American democracy. We propose to concentrate on areas outside of the South solely because in the past the mores and traditions and legal limitations which prevail in the South have been used to delay or halt progress in other parts of the country with the consequence that the Southern pattern threatens to become the national pattern. There will be occasions, of course, when the probelms of the South will demand our attention. We believe, however, that a centering of attention on the areas where the social habits have not crystallized to the same extent will better serve not only those areas but eventually the South itself.

In order to make effective use of the wisdom and power of this assembly, I think we will have to submit to some pretty stern regulations and scheduling. I suggest, for example, that we omit certain ceremonies that are often a part of such conferences.

1. Formal resolutions on specific topics. To get anything like unanimity on any resolution by such a body as this would probably require hours of debate and revision, and might fritter energy on specifics that should go into discussion and planning on a broad front.

2. Attempts to formulate explicit details of any proposed procedures. The most such a conference as this can do is to survey the field as thoroughly and accurately as possible and plan the general types of effort that seem wise. Details of operation and personnel will best be left to a small continuation committee of this conference or to some continuous working body.

What we hope to do in these two days is

(1) explore the position f Negroes and of race relations, especially in the North and West,

(2) discuss definite procedures and methods that may be most effective in the years immediately ahead,

(3) plan what instrumentalities can best meet the new demands and the fresh opportunities of this emergency.

Questions presented by Marshall Field at Conference on Race Relations, Chicago,
March 21, 1944

These questions assume that many essential factors in race relations have to do with federal regulations and federal action: such as segregation in the armed forces; full employment of minorities in war industries, government agencies; etc. But this group seems to me in a position to give most useful answers on questions which have a bearing on local problems throughout the North and West.

1. What are the conditions of the 4 million Negroes now living in the North and West? What are the chief bars to their full participation in American democracy? What are the chief tension areas in race relations in the northern cities?

2. What can be done to build up democracy from the grass roots in order to give substance to interracial cooperation throughout the country?

3. Recognizing that there are problems peculiar to the South that require special attention - can a movement be initiated and implemented for building democratic patterns in race relations in the North and West, independent of the traditions of the South?

What can be done specifically to meet the new demands and fresh opportunities of this emergency?

a. What help and guidance can be given to the many city and state committees that have come into being in recent months, in such matters as housing restrictive covenants, civil rights, schools, and other specific problems?

b. What stimulus or assistance can be given to the various church bodies to bring their vast influence to bear on these problems?

c. What can be done through cooperation with labor and industry and through local programs to insure to minorities a fair share of available economic opportunities?

d. What can be done by way of popular education to create appreciation for the diverse contributions to America and to develop a sense of fair play?

e. How can materials be created and methods introduced into the schools to educate future citizens to apply democracy to all racial and cultural groups?

The Southern Regional Council

Its Organization

On October 4, 1940, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, Inc., instructed its Executive Committee "to take whatever steps are necessary to carry out the plans for the development of a council on southern regional development," which would include in its program the work of the Commission and other activities connected with the economic, educational, and social development of the South.

On January 6, 1944, after many months of work, and following the developments and instructions growing out of the conference of Southern Negroes, held in Durham, N. C. October 20, 1942, the conference of Southern whites held in Atlanta, Georgia, April 8, 1943, and the conference of Negroes and whites held in Richmond, Va., June 16, 1943, the Southern Regional Council was incorporated. At the meeting of the incorporators of the Southern Regional Council (Dr. Howard W. Odum, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, Dr. Rufus E. Clement, Bishop A. J. Moore, and Mr. Ralph McGill), held in Atlanta, Georgia, February 11, 1944, charter members of the SRC were designated: all members of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and all active participants in one or more of the conferences leading to the formation of the Southern Regional Council.

On February 16, 1944, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation met in Atlanta at a special meeting and took the following action:

> It being made to appear to the meeting that all of the Commission's obligations and liabilities have been fully discharged, and further that the Southern Regional Council, having been duly incorporated to carry on the work with ideals and program similar to those of this corporation:
> It was, upon motion duly made and seconded—Resolved that the corporation transfer and convey to the Southern Regional Council, Inc., a corporation of Fulton County, Georgia, all of its property of every nature whatsoever and wherever situated, absolutely and in fee simple.

On the same date the charter members of the Southern Regional Council met in Atlanta, adopted by-laws, elected officers, and formulated the initial policy of the organization, stating as their purpose the

Its Program and Methods

The Southern Regional Council will operate in all of the states of the South in an effort to improve the region's economic, civic, social and racial conditions.

It proposes to promote greater unity among people and agencies in all efforts for regional and racial adjustment; to attain through research and action, progress and equal opportunity for all people; to reduce race tensions, misunderstanding, distrust; to develop and integrate leadership in the South on new levels of national, regional and racial development. These are its long-time goals.

For its immediate objectives the SRC proposes to perfect its organization, to conserve and enlarge the scope of work now being done by the local and state interracial bodies; to take the preliminary steps necessary to bring about a realization of the long-time goals mentioned above, and to give immediate attention to war and postwar problems in the South.

The SRC plans to operate through several commissions in the fields of human relations, economic affairs, community welfare, public affairs, and cultural development.

The programs under these commissions will be sponsored with the aid of approximately 100 elected Fellows of the SRC, selected from the several states, and with the cooperation of local and regional religious, social, and economic groups.

One of the chief purposes of the SRC will be the development of new techniques and strategies for meeting constructively the problems of the region. To achieve this end the SRC will encourage the development of action groups at local, state and regional levels; recruit and develop leadership; develop necessary research through the universities and colleges of the region; seek to remold and articulate public opinion through the radio, press, speakers and publications; cooperate with and stimulate action in the region from Federal, state and local governments; conduct special experiments and programs in an effort to effect desirable changes in the South; render such specialized services as may be necessary in this connection; render such emergency services as may be necessary; hold technical conferences to promote fuller participation in [illegible] processes in the South; and [illegible] effec-

Editorial

This is a most opportune time for launching the Southern Regional Council. In a sense, the eyes of the nation are upon the South today. The war has focused a spotlight upon democracy, revealing as never before her strength and her weakness. Here in the South democracy has been leading a double life. It has not yet squared itself with the problem of race and color, and that problem may well be the greatest one of the next century. What we do here in the South, then, has the most intimate kind of connection with the fortunes of democracy and the future of race relations, not only in this nation but in the entire world.

We have dedicated ourselves to the building of a better South, and we must not falter. History does not make itself. It is always made by people and their ideas. It can just as easily be made by people with good ideas as by people with bad ideas, if the people with the good ideas are willing to work hard enough. Somebody has to do more hard thinking and constructive work on this problem of race relations than has ever been done before, and it is up to the white and Negro leaders of the South to do it.

But how shall we define our problem in more specific terms? The very least we can do in order to square our habits with our democratic ideals is to try honestly and courageously to take the inequalities and inequities out of the biracial civilization of the South. If we devote our very best statesmanship and untiring energy for the next twenty years to the realization of this goal, we shall have served our generation well. We should not pretend to believe that this alone will solve the race problem, because we know that this problem is not so easily solved. But we can believe that it covers the next stage in the unfolding process which may lead to the ultimate solution of the race problem.

We in the Southern Regional Council are establishing a blue-print for the shape of things to come. We are building for the future—not one year, not five years, but for all the centuries that may lie ahead. Who knows but that the work we are undertaking here and now represents a turning point in the history of the South? If we, through this Council and its cooperating agencies, can bequeath our children a more democratic, a more abundant South, we shall have done our part toward the fulfillment of the great American dream. But, if we falter and fail, our children must bear a yoke of social handicaps greater than we have ever known.

South Carolina Incident

On February 29 the South Carolina House of Representatives passed a resolution which has attracted a great deal of attention. Introduced by Mr. John Long of Union, a lawyer and one-time private secretary to U. S. Senator Cole Blease, the resolution said, in part:

"We indignantly and vehemently denounce the intentions, utterances and actions of any person or persons and of all organizations seeking the amalgamation of the white and Negro races by a comingling of the races upon any basis of equality, as being destructive to the identity and characteristics and integrity of both races, and as being un-American and hostile to the existence and preservation of the American union of states . . .

"We reaffirm our belief in and our allegiance to established white supremacy as now prevailing in the South, and we solemnly pledge our lives and our sacred honor to maintaining it, whatever the cost, in war and in peace."

"That insofar as racial relations are concerned, we firmly and unequivocally demand that henceforth the damned agitators of the North leave the South alone."

This being the open season for political buncombe, one need not be greatly surprised by such a resolution, and one can take it with the proverbial grain of salt. The time was when such things were allowed to pass unchallenged, but times are changing. The South Carolina resolution was promptly challenged by two groups of South Carolinians, one a group of Negro citizens and the other a group of white citizens. In a letter to Representative Long, the Negro Citizens' Committee of South Carolina said: "Your resolution . . . is astonishing to the Negroes of South Carolina, especially in times like these. . . . Negroes throughout South Carolina disclaim any idea of amalgamation of whites and Negroes. . . . They are asking for full justice in the courts, . . . for the right to exercise their franchise in primaries where candidates are chosen to serve in public offices, and the denial of such rights is un-American and undemocratic. . . . The fight for such rights, whether instituted by an individual or an organization, if such fight is through the courts, state and federal, cannot be blasted as one of agitation and hostile to the existence and preservation of the American union of states."

Twenty influential white South Carolinians also issued a statement. They felt that it was time "to let our colored citizens know that the better element of white people in South Carolina do not think or feel as the House of Representatives," and they called for "a drastic revision in our attitude toward our colored citizens." Their statement went on to point out the following disadvantages which the Negro suffers: (1) denial of equal opportunity; (2) retarded economic status; (3) fixed status as a servant and menial; (4) inferior educational facilities; (5) frequent denial of justice in the courts; (6) discrimination in civic improvements; (7) lack of participation in his own government. Furthermore, the statement pointed out some constructive steps which need to be taken: (1) serious study of the race problem by white groups; (2) inclusion of Negroes on juries and other public bodies administering the laws; (3) better educational opportunities; (4) better mutual understanding between white and Negro workers; (5) fair wages and better working hours for domestic workers; (6) use of the ballot box by all qualified voters.

"Social equality," said these white citizens, "is not a part of the Negro problem in South Carolina," since "social life is of individual making." As for "white supremacy," they express the belief that "The only white supremacy which is worthy of the name is that which exists because of virtue, not of power."

This statement by white South Carolinians might well serve as a model for the citizens of other states who are weary of the agitation of the race issue by our own home-grown variety of demagogues. Lee Morris, in the St. Petersburg Independent, puts the matter this way: "Let's remember that white supremacy is as ugly a phrase as Negro supremacy, and for the same reason. We have a nation of human beings. Let them live together separately, as races, if you wish; let them marry separately, as races; but never let one race deny freedom and justice and opportunity and humanity again to the other."

following directive from the charter of the organization:

> . . . the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South, in the endeavor to promote a greater unity in the South in all efforts toward regional and racial development; to attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region; to reduce race tension, the basis of racial tension, racial misunderstanding, and racial distrust; to develop and integrate leadership in the South on new levels of regional development and fellowship; and to cooperate with local, state, and regional agencies on all levels in the attainment of the desired objectives.

An American Dilemma

Through a grant made by the Carnegie Corporation, Gunnar Myrdal, economic advisor to the Swedish government, and a member of the Swedish Senate, made a comprehensive study of the Negro problem and modern democracy in the United States. No mere review could encompass or interpret the wide range of this significant study designed to contribute to the general "advancement and diffusion of knowledge and understanding." (An American Dilemma, Gunnar Myrdal, New York, Harper and Brothers, 1944. 2 vols. $7.50.)

AN AMERICAN DILEMMA offers a basic challenge to the American people. Speaking of "America's Opportunity," Dr. Myrdal says:

● In the present phase of history this is what the world needs to believe. Mankind is sick of fear and disbelief, of pessimism and cynicism. It needs the youthful moralistic optimism of America. But empty declarations only deepen cynicism. Deeds are called for. If America in actual practice could show the world a progressive trend by which the Negro became finally integrated into modern democracy, all mankind would be given faith again—it would have reason to believe that peace, progress and order are feasible. And America would have a spiritual power many times stronger than all her financial and military reserves—the power of the trust and support of all good people on earth. America is free to choose whether the Negro shall remain her liability or become her opportunity. pp.1021-1022.

The two volumes merit extensive study. Here are a few comments, expositions and challenges pertinent to that section of the United States of which Dr. Myrdal has written:

● The pro-slavery theory of the antebellum South is basic to certain ideas, attitudes, and policies prevalent in all fields of human relations even at the present time . . . churchmen, writers, and statesmen of the South came out against the principle of equality as formulated in the Declaration of Independence. This principle came to be ridiculed as a set of empty generalities and meaningless abstractions. Indeed, it was "exuberantly false, and aborescently fallacious." p. 86-87

● Southern conservatism is a unique phenomenon in Western civilization in being carried to an established pattern of illegality. . . . In the South we have, however, the unmatched political spectacle that the liberals are the party of law and order, while the conservatives are the habitual transgressors. The party which works for change has the established law on its side, or rather, wants to enforce it, but has not the political power; the party which stands for the status quo has the power but not the law. . . . In the South a veritable reversal of the usual order of democracy has established itself. pp. 440-441

● Thus the opportunistic disrespect for law, order and public morals has a complicated causation and a deep-rooted history in the South. The tradition is today still part of the way of life and as such is often patriotically cherished as distinctively Southern. It is certainly one of the most sinister historical heritages of the region. It spells danger for a democratic society and involves serious maladjustments. p. 451

● There is an amazing avoidance of issues in Southern politics. The South votes for men—Democratic men—but rarely ever for issues, unless the issue is defined in black and white. We have to remember that in a measure this is a characteristic of all American politics. But in the South, it is driven to its extreme. p. 453

● . . . Keeping the Negroes disfranchised in the face of the clear-cut constitutional Amendments allows Southern conservatism nothing more than a pretense of respect for the law. On this most crucial point it is doomed to insincerity. p. 446

● It would generally be inexplicable why the South, with all its traditions of inequality and illegality, is so definitely on the way toward social democracy and law observance, and why it is not headed the other way. The conservative Southerner is not so certain as he sometimes sounds. He is a split personality. Part of his heart belongs to the American Creed. And if one argues that this is mere hypocrisy, he is entirely missing the point. The Southern conservative white man's faith in American democracy, which he is certainly not living up to, and the Constitution, which he is circumventing, are living forces of decisive dynamic significance. p. 462

● When attempting to map the political opinions of white Southern liberalism, it must first be recalled that the region is exceptional in Western nonfascist civilization since the Enlightenment in that it lacks nearly ever trace of radical thought. In the South all progressive thinking going farther than mild liberalism has been practically nonexistent for a century. p. 469.

● As far as the cultural and social adjustment of the Negroes is concerned, the Southern police system is undoing much of what Northern philanthropy and Southern state governments are trying to accomplish through education and by other means. p. 450

● The South, particularly, needs a stress on the preventive aims and the peace-working functions of the police. p. 545

● In principle, the average white Southerner is no longer prepared to defend racial inequality of justice. p. 546

● Probably the most effective means of bringing the Southern courts more fully to acquire a fixed pattern of [illegible] and equity would be the setting up of legal aid agencies everywhere in the South which, manned by high class professional lawyers, would be instructed not to work for any new legislation, but to assist poor whites and Negroes to enforce their rights under existing laws in civil and criminal cases. p. 556

● Court decisions are increasingly exposing the Southern statutes backing the system of institutional segregation as unconstitutional. This system is thus gradually losing its legal sanctions and increasingly depending upon extra-legal or illegal sanctions. p. 629

● "Social equality" is still a terribly important matter in the region. But it is not as important as it was a generation ago. p. 662

● The Negro hates the Negro role in American society, and the Negro leader, who acts out this role in public life, becomes the symbol of what the Negro hates. p. 774

● The Interracial Commission has not fulfilled the promises it once gave. . . . The respectability the Commission has built up for interracial work in the South is a form of capital, but as such it is of no use at all if it is not invested, and even risked, in new ventures. p. 849

● The post-war crisis in the South will not be minor. p. 849

● The South is far from having achieved the Commission's aims, and the liberal forces of the region are weak. p. 845

● It seems justifiable to predict a growing tension between the two regions, one which will not be restricted to the Negro issue. There is not going to be civil war, of course. The South has been, and is, changing rapidly, and Southern liberalism has been coming to be a force though it was practically nowhere in political power and today is fearfully timid on the Negro issue. p. 1015

● In planning for future race relations in the South the factor of personal intimacy and friendliness between individual whites and Negroes upon the old patriarchal principle should be left out entirely as lacking in practical importance. p. 649

● The great majority of Southern conservative white people do not see the handwriting on the wall. They do not study the impending changes; they live again in the pathetic illusion that the matter is settled. They do not care to have any constructive policies to meet the trends. They think no adjustments are called for. The chances that the future development will be planned and led intelligently and that, consequently, it will take the form of cautious, forewished reforms instead of unexpected, tumultuous, haphazard breaks, with mounting demands and expectations in its wake—are indeed small. p. 19-20

It Does Happen Here

○ The U. S. Navy announces the appointment of 14 Negroes as Ensigns and Warrant Officers. Negro staff officers in the Navy are expected to be commissioned from civilian life.

○ It was called a "Race Equality Book." It did not matter that there was no discussion of race equality in it. Someone said it was that. We refer to The Races of Mankind by Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish. It is illustrated by Joseph Reinhardt. This is a ten-cent pamphlet, No. 85 in a series issued by the Public Affairs Committee. The USO banned it. The United States Army refused it for the use of our soldiers, who are of all races of mankind. . . . Most of the book contains hard, scientifically valid fact. Some times there is philosophy and social fact. Here is what is said about race prejudice:

> Race prejudice is, after all, a determination to keep a people down, and it misuses the label "inferior" to justify unfairness and injustice. Race prejudice makes people ruthless; it invites violence. It is the opposite of "good character" as it is defined in the Christian religion—or in the Confucian religion, or in the Buddhist religion, or the Hindu religion, for that matter.

○ The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee reports that during the last six months of 1943 there was satisfactory compliance with 359 orders to cease discrimination against employees on account of their race, religion or alien origin. During this period 208 cases were dropped because of insufficient evidence, 250 were dropped for lack of merit, 127 were withdrawn by the complainant; and 36 were dismissed for lack of committee jurisdiction. Race was the basis for most of the discrimination, involving 716 cases. Cases arising out of religious discrimination numbered 127 during the period.

○ The 93rd Air Squadron is the second unit of Negro fliers to see action in the European-African war theatres. The officers are Negroes.

○ In an effort to offset the recent efforts of Negro school teachers to secure equalization of pay in South Carolina, the Charleston News-Courier proposes that one way of handling the matter would be to "classify by state legislation all professors and teachers in the public schools as public officers and elect them in the white primaries."

○ The Twenty-fourth Regiment of the United States Army became the first Negro combat unit to go into action in the South Pacific. The War Department reports that the Regiment "gave a good account of itself in jungle warfare."

Opinion

THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER wants expressions from its readers on how they feel about the approach it plans to make in connection with a social action program in the South. It invites correspondence on matters that are close to the hearts and minds of Southern and Northern people. Through this channel of opinion it may be possible to arrive at a common ground of thinking, from which we can move forward to a higher plane of action.

The following excerpts from a letter written by a retired minister indicate some of the challenges we face:

> It is one thing to believe and proclaim the absolute Right in race relations; it is quite another thing boldly to challenge racial conventions and defy bitter prejudice and to ride roughshod to our goal, regardless.
> I speak from long experience—something painful. In pulpit and press I have declared for a treatment of colored peoples based on recognition of the oneness of the race and the brotherhood of all men, urging the present glaring and dangerous injustice to the Negro, sometimes at the cost of persecution from the whites—and having to conclude that I'd have got farther toward the goal by slowing my pace—and crying, "O Lord, how long!"

tiveness the untapped resources of the region.

Full instructions for interracial bodies wishing to affiliate with the Southern Regional Council will be issued during April. Meanwhile, any agency or organization willing to subscribe to the principles of the Council may apply for affiliated membership with all the rights and privileges granted such membership by the Board of Directors of the Southern Regional Council.

The Southern Regional Council was not initiated to deter, retard, limit or defend the South. Its organization and promotion were contrived in sheer necessity. It welcomes the cooperation of all people, all agencies, everywhere, who are willing to make the sacrifices and take the initiative needed to make democracy a reality in the region.

The Southern Regional Council is opposed to the demagogic handling of the South's problems by Northerners or Southerners, be they white or black. It sees the problems of the South as a special phase of the problems of our democracy. It believes that a more intensive application of the principles of democracy within the region will yield a people better able to apply the principles of democracy extensively throughout the nation and the world. It believes that a quarter of a century's experience in race relations has provided the South with the opportunity to meet the problems of democracy and citizenship in a bigger, more social way than ever before. It dedicates its program to doing those things in the best way possible—here and now.

Books of the Month

Elsewhere in this issue we have presented excerpts from An American Dilemma. No one with a sincere interest in the problems of race and color can afford to be unfamiliar with these volumes, not so much for the facts they present as for the interpretation given these facts.

Characteristics of the American Negro (Otto Klineberg, Editor) is the last volume in the Carnegie Foundation series of studies on the American Negro. This volume contains analyses of some of the more argumentative aspects of race relations—intelligence, personality, race attitudes, intermarriage, and passing. (Harper and Brothers, $4.00.)

Strange Fruit is a novel by Lillian Smith, editor of South Today. We know of no work of fiction that has created such a stir in interracial circles since Carl VanVechten's Nigger Heaven. Many people do not like it; many more are buying it. Nevertheless, the reaction is interesting, for here is the first novel on the South which throws into bold relief, and in an interesting fashion, the five areas of Southern problems—race, religion, politics, sex and economics. Read it as Bacon advised three hundred years ago, "not to contradict and confute; not to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse; but to weigh and consider." (Reynal and Hitchcock, $2.75.)

13 Against The Odds by Julius Rosenwald Fund's President, Edwin R. Embree (Viking, $2.75), and Rising Above Color by Philip Henry Lotz (Association Press, $1.50), both deal with the careers of thirteen outstanding Negro personalities in the United States. If you like success stories of minority personalities you will find these two volumes interesting. Dr. Embree's character analyses are breezy, fresh, human, and up to date.

You might be interested in:

Ben Hecht's A Guide For The Bedeviled (Scribners, $2.50) because it is an exciting book on racial intolerance, particularly as it pertains to the problem of anti-Semitism.

Louis Fischer's Empire (Duell, Sloan and Pearce, $1.00) because he tells us why a large part of the world is tired of being "the white man's burden."

S R C BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETS

Report of Special Meeting

Important business was transacted and the work of the Southern Regional Council was greatly facilitated by a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Council in Atlanta on April 28. The meeting was called by Dr. Howard W. Odum, President of the Council. The Board meeting was preceded by a meeting of the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee formulated a number of recommendations for presentation to the Board. The major actions taken by the Board are summarized below.

Standing Committees

Under the authority granted by Article V, Section 4, of the Council by-laws, the Board created the following standing committees: Committee on Membership, Committee on Finance, Committee on Public Relations, Committee on Publications, and Committee on Fellows. The Chairman was instructed to appoint the committees. The complete personnel of the committees will be published in the next issue of THE SOUTHERN FRONTIER.

Admission of New Members

Since the by-laws provide that members can be elected only by the members or by the Board of Directors, and since the Board of Directors, at its meeting just after the charter meeting in February, did not complete the details of a machinery for admitting new members in the intervals between meetings, the Board passed the following resolution defining the duties of the Committee on Membership: "The Committee on Membership shall have general supervision over questions pertaining to the election of members, shall receive nominations and requests for membership, and shall authorize the Executive Director or the Secretary to extend an invitation to membership to such persons as the Committee may approve, all such elections being subject to confirmation at the next meeting of members or of the Board of Directors." The Council is now able to enlarge its membership by bringing in some of the numerous persons who have been nominated by other members or who have requested the privilege of membership. The Committee on Membership will bring to the annual meeting in October some recommendations on the question of limited versus unlimited membership.

New Directors

The Board elected directors to fill three vacancies occasioned by the election of Dr. Odum to the presidency, the inability of one member to serve, and the death of Dr. J. R. E. Lee. It also voted to enlarge its membership in order to give better representation to several states. New directors who have already accepted election are: Charles W. Anderson, Jr., attorney and member of the Kentucky legislature, Louisville; O. D. Duncan, Department of Sociology and Rural Life, Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, Stillwater; Z. Alexander Looby, attorney, Nashville; Walter J. Matherly, Dean of the School of Business Administration, University of Florida, Gainesville; Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Atlanta; N. C. Newbold, Department of Public Instruction, Raleigh; and Thomas S. Staples, Dean of Hendrix College, Conway, Arkansas.

Proposed Changes in the By-Laws

The Board voted to recommend to the members of the Council that they amend the by-laws so as to permit the Executive Director and the Associate Executive Director to be members of the Executive Committee. At present the executives cannot be members of the Executive Committee. Mr. Leonard Haas pointed out that their presence is essential to the functioning of the Executive Committee and that it is in keeping with common practice and in the interest of efficiency for them to be members of the Committee. He also pointed out that the laws governing corporations prohibit any officer or employee from voting on matters affecting his own personal interests.

At present the Executive Committee has eleven members, seven elected and four ex-officio, and a quorum must consist of four of the seven elected members. Hence it is possible to have seven persons present, three elected and four ex-officio, and

RESOLUTIONS

At its meeting in Atlanta on April 28, 1944, the Board of Directors of the Southern Regional Council unanimously adopted the following resolutions and voted that they be made public immediately.

1. The Race Issue in Politics

In the heat of current political campaigns in various parts of the South, the race issue has been raised by certain candidates or by their promoters. Vicious rumors have been circulated, and the spurious issues of "white supremacy," "social equality," and the like have been dragged forth in an attempt to arouse the passions and prejudices of voters.

We condemn all such tactics as unfair and destructive of the spirit of unity and cooperation which we need now as never before, and we appeal to all good citizens to consider carefully whether those persons who use such tactics are worthy of public trust.

2. The White Primary

The Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that the exclusion of Negroes from the Texas Democratic primaries is a violation of the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution. The Court has simply recognized the fact that primaries are effective instruments of government, and that the exclusion of the Negro voters from Democratic primaries in some of the Southern states is equivalent to denying them the right to vote on account of race.

This decision has far-reaching consequences, and we appeal to the people of the South to make these consequences positive and constructive rather than negative and destructive.

We deplore the statements of political leaders and others indicating a determination to disregard or nullify the decision of the Supreme Court, and we call on all fair-minded citizens of the South to respect the letter and the spirit of the Court's decision. Let us all, white and Negro, be calm and wise. Let us strive to serve the ends of justice and good government for all of the people of the South.

To allow Negro citizens to participate in the government under which they live

To attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region.

Editorial

Most of us have had the experience of dreading a trip to the dentist, or an operation which we know has to come, or an honest coming-to-grips with some personal moral problem. We worry, we procrastinate, we torment ourselves with terrible forebodings. Finally we get the thing over with in one way or another, and when we see that we are going to pull through all right, we say, "It wasn't so bad after all. What was I afraid of?"

Too many white Southerners are still in the worrying stage in their reaction to certain social issues which need to be met. Take the question of Negro voting in Democratic primaries, for example. They postpone it, they evade it, and when they begin to see that perhaps the thing is bound to come they work themselves into a frenzy by imagining that the whole social order is about to crumble. Most likely their fears are groundless, for they are based upon the very shaky assumptions that (1) every Negro of voting age will immediately rush to the ballot box and that (2) Negroes will vote as a solid racial bloc.

There is absolutely no evidence that Negroes will make a mass march on the ballot box. Fortunately or unfortunately, they have that same inertia and indifference toward political participation which white people have. A recent study in Virginia showed that although 32,000 Negroes paid their poll taxes in 1943, about 13,000 of them did not even bother to register. In Atlanta, in spite of the Georgia law which lowered the voting age to 18 (no poll tax is required until the age of 21) and in spite of an intensive campaign by Negro organizations to increase the registration of Negroes, the Fulton County Registrar announced at the close of registration that Negroes made up about 7 per cent of the total number of registered voters. Negroes form 31 per cent of the population of Atlanta. Whatever happens in this matter of Negro voting, we can be quite certain that it is not going to be a sudden "revolution" in the political habits of Negroes in the South.

Neither is there any good evidence that Negroes will vote as a solid bloc. White people are likely to overestimate the extent of Negro unity, perhaps because they feel that if they were in the Negroes' shoes they would stick together. As a matter of fact, Negroes divide upon political and other issues in much the same way as white people do. The Negro banker is likely to have more in common with the white banker than with the Negro janitor. The nearest the Negro will come to a solid race front will be to show a tendency in the long run to support his "friends" and to defeat his "enemies," but, like other voters, he will frequently have difficulty in deciding who is "friend" and who is "enemy."

At any rate, we shall find that after the dust has settled the earth remains. We shall find that the right to vote, whether that right is exercised to the fullest or not, gives a tremendous boost to the morale and civic responsibility of the Negro. We shall find that the surest way to rid the South of demagoguery and to take the "race issue" out of politics is to take the Negro voter into the fold and train him to use the ballot intelligently. And no doubt we shall say—unless we are so enamored of our worries that we refuse to part with them—"It wasn't so bad after all. What were we afraid of?"

The FEPC and Negro Manpower

The Region VII Office of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice has satisfactorily adjusted several cases which involved discrimination in training against Negroes. Two of those cases arose in Jacksonville, Florida, where the training facilities for Negroes were not comparable to those for whites, and these cases were adjusted by an arrangement that a training school for Negroes which will be adequate to accommodate 600 students will be established immediately in that city.

The national policy with respect to training is set forth in Executive Order No. 9346, in part, as follows:

> . . . The Committee (FEPC) shall also recommend to the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission appropriate measures for bringing about the full utilization and training of manpower in and for war production without discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin.

As a result of recommendations made by the committee, on August 2, 1943, an Operating Agreement was entered into between FEPC and WMC. There it is provided:

> Procedures shall be established to assure that equal training facilities and opportunities are available to all trainees and prospective trainees without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin. Special procedures shall be established where, because of State or local laws, special training facilities are required for trainees solely because of race.

Thereafter, on September 3, 1943, the WMC issued an instruction to all its regional offices in which it is provided that such offices "shall take steps to have the discriminatory features" removed from training programs. Since, however, State laws generally require separate facilities for education in this region, it has been necessary for the Regional WMC and Regional FEPC to take this fact into account in devising procedures by which the national policy may be effectuated.

The Regional WMC has agreed that, as a matter of policy, it will "make every effort to provide training courses for qualified Negro applicants in all occupations for which training is being given (to whites)." If such facilities are absent, qualified Negro applicants are to be informed by the United States Employment Service offices to which they apply that immediate efforts will be made to provide training. Moreover, under no conditions are qualified Negro applicants to be regarded or classified as ineligible because of a present lack of training facilities since, upon receiving information from a USES office that training facilities are inadequate in a particular area, the Regional WMC will take immediate steps to provide training courses for all qualified applicants.

The question naturally arises as to what extent facilities must be provided for Negroes in courses similar to those being given to whites, in order to assure that discrimination in training is not present in an area where separate facilities are required by law. The WMC has determined that the minimum facilities which must be provided for Negro trainees shall bear the same ratio to the total number of Negro eligibles. Thus, in an instance where there are 80 white and 30 Negro eligibles for training, and facilities have been provided for 40 whites, or one-half of the total eligibles, at least one-half of the Negro eligibles must be provided with similar training facilities. This is not to be construed, however, as the test by which to determine the maximum number of Negroes to be trained. On the contrary, it is the viewpoint of both the Regional WMC and the Regional FEPC that qualified applicants of all races should be trained to the maximum extent that funds are available and that the above test should serve only as a guide below which the training of Negroes shall not fall.

Negro leaders, teachers, and those in charge of vocational training facilities for Negroes should make sure that eligible Negroes take all necessary steps to receive training for war work. In the event that they are unsuccessful, and feel that they have been discriminated against because of their race in either their efforts to secure training or to secure employment after being trained, they may make their complaints to the Regional FEPC at Rooms 524-7 Ten Forsyth Building, Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Directors' Meeting

still not have a quorum. The Board voted to recommend a change in the by-laws so as to permit any six members of the Committee to constitute a quorum. The by-laws can be amended only by members, and these proposed amendments will be submitted to the annual meeting of members in October.

Two Statements

Feeling that the Supreme Court decision in the Texas primary case and the current efforts of certain political candidates to stir up racial issues presented a challenge to the Council, the Executive Committee approved two resolutions and recommended their passage by the Board. The Board unanimously adopted the statements and voted to give them immediate publicity. The statements are reprinted on the front page of this issue. They were given rather wide publicity in Southern newspapers, were published in the New York Times of April 30, and were mentioned in the May 15 issue of Life.

Cooperating Organizations

The by-laws provide that organizations having aims similar to those of the Council may become affiliates of the Council on such conditions as the Board may prescribe. It was pointed out in the discussion that since the structure of the Council is based on individual membership, affiliation of other organizations in the technical sense would involve legal and structural problems which could be met only by amending the charter of the Council. The Board therefore adopted the following resolution: "That the relation between the Southern Regional Council and all state and local organizations having aims and purposes similar to those of the council be informal and cooperative, the details to be worked out by the two Executive Directors." The Executive Directors have begun to compile a list of cooperating organizations.

The anti-poll tax bill is apparently dead for the present session of Congress. After a move to invoke cloture had been defeated by a vote of 44 to 36, the Senate shelved the bill.

Southern Baptists and the Negro

At the recent meeting of Southern Baptists in Atlanta, the Social Service Commission of the Convention recommended that Baptist preachers and churches work for the "defense and protection of the civil rights" of Negroes.

The recommendations of the Social Service Commission stated:

"In view of the increasing acuteness of the race problem within the nation, and especially in the South, and the danger which crouches at our doors that we shall be guilty of un-Christian attitudes and actions, we recommend that the convention reaffirm and lay upon the hearts of the Baptists of the South the resolutions adopted at the 1941 convention:

"1. That we reaffirm our deep and abiding interest in the welfare of all races of mankind, and particularly our interest in the welfare and advancement of the Negro race, which lives in our midst to the number of some 10 or 11 millions.

"2. That this convention would urge the pastors and churches affiliated with the convention, and all our Baptist people, to cultivate and maintain the finest Christian spirit and attitude toward the Negro race, to do everything possible for the welfare of the race, both economic and religious, and for the defense and protection of all civil rights of the race."

Concerning the Supreme Court decision in the Texas primary case, the Commission's report said: "The issue will be between establishing a qualification for suffrage that will apply to white and colored alike and the invention of some nullifying device that will deprive an otherwise qualified Negro from voting because he is a Negro. What will be the course of Christian men and women? . . . Let it be urged again that we who are Christ's must exercise the utmost care to find the Christian thing to say and the Christian thing to do. We cannot achieve good by injustice."

Dr. J. B. Lawrence, Executive Secretary of the Baptist Home Mission Board, in an address before the Baptist assembly, said: "Southern Baptists have a responsibility to the Negro which can be met only by knowing their needs as a race and meeting these needs with a well devised program. No segmental approach to this task will suffice."

Resolutions

is to give democracy a chance in the South. To deny the vote to qualified Negro citizens is inconsistent with the American ideal of justice and equality before the law. The sooner we recognize these simple facts, the better off we shall be. We can not honestly wage a war for freedom and democracy in foreign lands when we deny to our own Negro citizens the rights and privileges which are justly theirs.

A Southern Business Man's Opinion

Mr. Alexander Fitz Hugh, of Vicksburg, Mississippi, has kindly given his permission to reprint the following excerpts from a letter which he wrote to Dr. Howard W. Odum.—Editors.

I note a growing desire on the part of the people to hear the views of all men who give them the facts.

I think that one trouble in the South has been that the masses of the people have formed their opinions of the economic and social questions that affect the section chiefly from their local and state leaders who are supplicants for votes. Sometimes what they have gotten from such leaders has been good, but often it has not been good, and I think it is an encouraging sign that the people are beginning to want the facts, which as you recall Jefferson said if you will give them the, will make wise decisions, and the truth, which Jesus of Nazareth said will make them free.

The agitation about discrimination in freight rates is exaggerated, and is largely inconsequential. In all of the discussions of the Southern governors about the industrialization of the South, I have never heard them give consideration to the vital problem, namely: What is going to be the position of the Negro in such a movement? Forty-nine per cent of the population of Mississippi are Negroes, and about thirty-five per cent of the population of Alabama and Georgia are Negroes. The highly developed industries of the North and East have had the advantage of labor of European origin which has had generations of industrial background and experience. When we remember that the experience of the Negroes has been almost entirely agricultural or work in the heavy industries, and the experience of the poorer whites little different, I think it is remarkable that Southern industry has made the progress that it has. The paramount problem in all Southern industry is what place the Negro laborer is going to fill in it rather than the question of freight rates. Industries make freight rates rather than freight rates make industries.

I find an awakening interest on the part of the people in the problems of the biracial economy, and this is definitely encouraging.

When, under the aegis of the New Deal, REA came to Georgia in May, 1935, only 6,800 Georgia farms had central station electric service. Today more than 70,000 Georgia farms are electrified.

Miss Margaret Fisher Joins SRC Staff

The Southern Regional Council is happy to announce that Miss Margaret Fisher, of the Atlanta regional office of the War Manpower Commission, is joining the staff of the Council on June 1 as Secretary of Public Relations.

By training, experience, and temperament, Miss Fisher is admirably equipped to make a significant contribution to the program of the Council. Following a period of business experience in the field of insurance, she did personnel and management work for a number of years in the Legal Division of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. She then went to the War Manpower Commission, where she has done industrial relations work since 1942. There her main task was to develop a regional program for the integration of women and minority groups into industrial employment in the South. This work has not only given her a first-hand acquaintance with industrialists but has brought her into contact with various public and civic groups in the South. She has, for example, helped to secure the cooperation of merchants in arranging evening shopping hours for the convenience of war workers, stimulated women's organizations to set up recreational programs for in-migrants, and encouraged labor groups to broaden the participation of women and colored workers in unions. Thus her wide contacts have given her a first-hand picture of what is going on in the Southeast in industrial and civic life.

In addition to this invaluable experience, Miss Fisher has qualities of personal charm, tact, persistence, and a sense of humor. One of her close friends has described her as "a liberal who has her feet on the ground."

Miss Fisher was born in North Carolina and received her college training at Greensboro Women's College. Gifted musically, she specialized in piano and voice and for several years did concert work as a contralto soloist. Then, as she puts it, "My whole pattern of life changed, for I knew that what I really wanted to do was to give my life to the building of a better South." She has retained her musical interests, however, and she will continue as soloist with the choir at St. Luke's Church in Atlanta, where her lovely contralto voice has been an inspiration to the congregation for the past seven years.

Lieutenant-General William S. Knudsen, War Department Production Chief, said in Nashville, Tennessee, recently, "We are capable of great production, but we have not reached top production yet." He added, "The South has demonstrated its industrial power, and there is no limit to what the South and the whole country can do. What we have done has not been miracles, it has been going to work and doing the job." On the question of America's future in the postwar period, General Knudsen commented, "We mustn't sell the hide until we've shot the bear."

In Kentucky

At a recent meeting sponsored by the Union for Democratic Action and the Louisville Committee of the Kentucky Council on Interracial Cooperation, various civic problems were discussed. Among the recommendations growing out of the meeting were the following:

That downtown stores be asked "to adjust their policy toward Negroes" and encourage instead of discourage Negro patronage.

That more Negroes be represented in the war housing units on the basis of need rather than population.

That the Louisville Railway Company be asked to employ Negroes as operators.

That training facilities be provided for Negro doctors and nurses.

That there be a minimum wage and hour law for domestic workers, and a city-wide educational campaign on domestic service problems.

That "some type of assurance against dismissal after the war be given the Negro who adjusts himself to industry."

That a Negro be named to the Louisville Board of Education.

An Institute of Race Relations

An Institute of Race Relations will be held at Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee, July 3-21. The Institute will include the following areas of interest: Race and Racial Theories; Racial Aspects of Social Problems; Methods, Techniques and Community Planning; The Role of Personal Religion in Human Relations. Among the lecturers and consultants will be Will W. Alexander, formerly Director of Farm Security Administration, now Co-Director of the Race Relations Division of the Julius Rosenwald Fund, and member of the Board of Directors of the SRC; Fred L. Brownlee, General Secretary of the American Missionary Association; Edwin R. Embree, President of the Julius Rosenwald Fund; Ellsworth Faris, Emeritus Professor of Sociology, University of Chicago; Lester Granger, Executive Secretary of the National Urban League; Guy B. Johnson, Executive Director of SRC; Otto Klineberg, Professor of Psychology, Columbia University; Z. A. Looby, member of the legal staff of NAACP; Liston Pope, Professor of Social Ethics, Yale University; Arthur Raper, Senior Social Science Analyst, United States Department of Agriculture; Robert Redfield, Dean of Division of Social Science and Professor of Anthropology, University of Chicago; Ira De A. Reid, Associate Director, SRC; T. Lynn Smith, Head of Department of Rural Sociology, Louisiana State University; Charles H. Thompson, Dean of Graduate School of Howard University and editor of the JOURNAL OF NEGRO EDUCATION, and Louis Wirth, Professor of Sociology, University of Chicago.

The Institute is under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, which is a Division of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational and Christian Churches. Anyone wishing further information may write to the Institute of Social Sciences, Fisk University, Nashville 8, Tennessee.

An Alabama Statement

Just before the recent Democratic primary in Alabama, the following statement, which was signed by 400 leading white citizens, was made public. Judge Louise O. Charlton of Birmingham was influential in obtaining signatures endorsing the statement.

Fellow Citizens of Alabama:

We, the undersigned citizens of Alabama, are proud of the traditions of our great state and of the part that all its people are playing in this war. We are proud of the thousands of Alabama's young men and women who serve in all branches of our armed forces. Our industrial leaders, the working men and women of our state, the vast number of our farmers have a record of war service of which the entire nation can be proud.

American armed forces, among them the finest sons of Alabama, now await the signal for the invasion of fascist Europe. Now more than ever have we Alabamans a stake in keeping our war production in farm and factory uninterrupted. For this reason we view with patriotic alarm any effort to stir up racial strife and hatred among the people of Alabama.

We consider it our sacred obligation to Alabamans in the armed forces and to their fathers and mothers at home to protest the actions of those men and those newspapers which seek to disturb the present peaceful relations between the races, and divert the attention of Alabama from the cause of speedy victory.

It is our conviction that all papers, whether Negro or White, which incite race hatred, constitute a serious threat to Alabama's war production.

We especially deplore the injection of the race issue into Alabama's political campaign. We believe that those who resort to such tactics misjudge the people of Alabama and their devotion to the democratic faith and to the ideal of Christian brotherhood.

In the same patriotic "spirit of neighborliness" as the citizens of Dallas County evidenced in their condemnation of the Greensboro Watchman, we call upon patriotic citizens to condemn all efforts now being made by press and radio to arouse or stimulate race and religious hatred and antagonisms among our people, and to strengthen our common effort for a speedy victory and a lasting peace.

The American Council On Race Relations

A new national organization has been formed for the promotion of interracial adjustment and "full democracy." The organization will be known as the American Council on Race Relations, and will seek to develop a well-rounded program of research, popular education, assistance to local community organizations in meeting their interracial problems, and cooperation with other agencies in the interracial field. The officers of the Council will be Clarence E. Pickett, President, Charles H. Houston, Vice-President, Will W. Alexander, Vice-President and Treasurer, and Mrs. Mary Jane Grunsfeld, Secretary. The headquarters of the Council will be in Chicago.

Mr. Stetson Kennedy

Miami 35, Florida

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

Thank you for your letter of June 12. I regret that there has been an unavoidable delay in my reply.

The Atlanta Conference was sponsored by a group of white leaders who were prominent in the fields of religion, education, journalism, and labor. The persons who had most to do with planning the Conference were: Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, Dr. Ashby Jones, Baptist minister; Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution; Dr. Howard W. Odum, University of North Carolina; and Mrs. M. E. Tilly, prominent Methodist church leader, Atlanta. Preliminary letters were sent to various Southern white leaders, asking them to suggest the names of other persons who might be interested in attending a conference which would make a "reply" to the Durham Conference statement. A Committee on Cooperation was set up, and on February 18, 1943 an invitational letter was sent out to about three hundred people. A copy of this letter is enclosed. The signers included: C. H. Gillman, Regional Director, CIO; Dr. Ashby Jones; Rev. Ryland Knight, Baptist Church; Rabbi David Marx; Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Methodist Church; Ralph McGill; Bishop Gerald P. O'Hara, Catholic Church; President J. McDowell Richards, Columbia Theological Seminary; Bishop John Moore Walker, Episcopal Church; President Goodrich C. White, Emory University.

As for the possibility that the words "general adaptation" should be "general adoption," I am trying to check up on this, but so far I do not have a definitive answer. As soon as I find out I shall let you know.

We would be glad to have you as a member of the Council. I shall submit your name to the next meeting of our Committee on Membership.

The general purpose of the Council is to work for a better South by trying to implement the Durham Conference statement. With limited personnel and limited financial resources, we do not expect to make much of a showing for a while, but as we build up our membership, our staff, and our financial support, we hope to have more and more influence upon the course of thinking and action in the South. From time to time the Council will issue official statements on current problems. For example, on April 28 our Board of Directors unanimously passed two resolutions, on the white primary and on the race issue in politics. You will find these in the enclosed copy of the May issue of the SOUTHERN FRONTIER. Our program for the next year includes study, propaganda, and action in the following fields: (1) participation of the Negro in post-war plans; (2) Negro employment in post-war industries; (3) fair standards of wages, hours, et cetera, in household service; and (4) police practices and administration in the South.

Within a week or two we shall have a new pamphlet entitled "The Southern Regional Council - Its Origin and Purpose." I shall send you a copy as soon as it is ready.

Cordially yours,

Guy B. Johnson

HOW THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL BEGAN

The Southern Regional Council, which began its existence as a formally organized body in February, 1944, is the product of many factors, but primarily it is the outgrowth of two parent movements. One of these was the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. The other was the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond series of conferences.

1. The Commission on Interracial Cooperation

In 1919, during the dark days of racial conflict and Ku Kluxism which followed World War I, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation was born. It represented a new idea in race relations—the idea that white people and Negroes should come together and strive to reach a "meeting of minds" on their mutual problems. This idea spread until there were scores of interracial committees operating in the South and elsewhere.

No one contends that the Commission did a perfect job, but no one who has observed the work of the Commission over a period of years can say flatly that it failed. It never claimed that its program would "solve" the race problem. Indeed, its leaders always made it clear that they were trying to take "the next steps" toward greater racial understanding and tolerance. This work has been of inestimable value to the South and to the nation. In its 25 years of operation, the Commission has made interracial conferences respectable almost everywhere in the South, has marshalled thousands of the church women of the South in opposition to lynching and other injustices, has sponsored significant researches on race relations, has issued two million copies of pamphlets and leaflets, and has symbolized the faith of the Southern white people and Negro people in the processes of understanding and cooperation.

In 1939 the Commission leaders, feeling that the educational program which it started out to do had become thoroughly established, and recognizing the need for new blood and new ideas, began to explore the possibility of broadening the scope of the organization and improving its techniques. In October, 1940, the Commission instructed its executive committee to "take whatever steps are necessary to carry out the plans for the formation of a council on Southern regional development," which would include in its program "the work of the Commission and other activities connected with the economic, educational, and social development of the South." Accordingly, an evaluative study of the Commission was made and a plan for expansion was drawn up. In the meantime, the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond conferences matured to a similar purpose, and the outcome was that on the day of the charter meeting of the Southern Regional Council, the Commission met and formally merged its program with, and transferred its assets to, the Southern Regional Council.[1]

The main efforts of the Council in its first few months of existence have been directed toward conserving and stimulating the state and local interracial committees throughout the South, because the Council believes that they must continue to play an important role in race relations and in implementing the program of the Council. The Commission will keep its legal entity for a time, but its program, revitalized and expanded, will be carried on as one phase of the work of the Southern Regional Council.

2. The Durham-Atlanta-Richmond Conferences

The younger parent of the Southern Regional Council was the Durham-Atlanta-Richmond series of conferences. The first chapter in the story of these conferences began with the meeting of a group of Southern Negro leaders at Durham in October, 1942. This conference was an outstanding event in the history of the South. It was a product of the rising tide of racial friction, and it was also in a sense a product of both the successes and the failures of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. These Negro leaders expressed their purpose as follows:

1. See Appendix E.

> We are proposing to set forth in certain "Articles of Cooperation" just what the Negro wants and is expecting of the post-war South and nation. Instead of letting the demagogues guess what we want, we are proposing to make our wants and aspirations a matter of record, so clear that he who runs may read. We are hoping in this way to challenge the constructive cooperation of that element of the white South who express themselves as desirous of a New Deal for the Negroes of the South.

A Committee was appointed to draw up a "Charter" embodying the ideas agreed upon at the Conference, and on December 15, 1942, the Conference issued a document entitled "A Basis for Inter-Racial Cooperation and Development in the South . . . a statement by Southern Negroes."[2] This is a remarkable document. It deserves a place of honor in the annals of American democracy. It tells in plain and dignified language what the Negro wants—not what one or two Negroes want, not what white people say Negroes want, but what a large group of representative Negroes say for themselves. Never before had such a large and distinguished group of American Negro leaders come together and agreed upon something. The statement covers the following areas: Political and Civil Rights, Industry and Labor, Service Occupations, Education, Agriculture, Military Service, and Social Welfare and Health.

The second chapter in this movement was written on April 8, 1943, when a group of Southern white leaders met in Atlanta to consider the statement which had been issued by the Durham Conference. These white leaders said, among other things:

> Their statement is so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and at the same time shows such good will, that we gladly agree to cooperate. All men who believe in justice, who love peace and who believe in the meaning of this country are under the necessity of working together to draw off from the body of human society the poison of racial antagonism.
> It is futile to imagine or to assert that the problem will solve itself. The need is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation and mutual respect.[3]

A third chapter was written on June 16, 1943, when a collaboration committee, composed of representatives from the Durham and Atlanta conferences, met in Richmond to work out further details. This meeting urged "the general adaptation of the Durham statement" and directed that a continuing committee be charged with "the responsibility for working out methods and practical means of approach."[4]

A fourth chapter in this movement was written at Atlanta on August 4, 1943, when a continuing committee of white and Negro delegates again met, this time to draw up specific plans for implementing the Durham statement. The conferees agreed upon "a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better ordering of our society," and the resolution which they passed said:

> We urge the South to pool its efforts and set up a strong, unified, Southern Regional Council, constituted of representatives of both races and of private and public groups. Such a council, in subscribing to the new declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all other available agencies and individuals in private and in public life and especially with a similar national group when established.[5]

3. For the complete text of the Atlanta Statement, see Appendix B.
4. For the complete text of the Richmond Statement, see Appendix C.
5. For the complete text of the Atlanta Resolution, see Appendix D.

As in any movement, there were in these conferences conflicts of personalities and of ideas, there were mistakes and limitations; but, considering the unusual variety of persons and interests represented, there was a remarkable spirit of unanimity. The important thing was that Southern Negro leaders had spoken out courageously, that white leaders had accepted the challenge, and that the two groups had covenanted to take the offensive for constructive social action in the South.

3. Organization of the Council

Following the Atlanta Resolution of August, 1943, there was much necessary committee work on procedure, finance, incorporation, etc. On January 6, 1944, the Southern Regional Council was chartered as a corporation by the State of Georgia "for the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South, . . . to attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region; . . ."[6]

Afterwards the Incorporators met and designated charter members: all persons who had participated in one of the preliminary conferences and all members of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation residing in the Council's area. Of approximately 270 persons thus designated, over 90% accepted charter membership. About 100 were present at the charter meeting in Atlanta on February 16-17, 1944, and they participated wholeheartedly in the meeting. For two days they discussed, they worked over by-laws, they elected officers, Board of Directors, executive directors, and executive committee. When they had finished, they had constructed a thoroughly democratic structure and government for their Council.

II

THE STRUCTURE OF THE COUNCIL

The Southern Regional Council belongs to its members. It has a Board of Directors and an Executive Committee, but all actions of these groups are subject to review by the annual meeting of members. At the annual meetings, which will be held on the second Wednesday in October, every member in good standing is entitled to vote, either in person or by proxy. The membership can be increased indefinitely, if the members desire to do so. The conditions of membership are: (1) an affirmation of belief in the purposes of the Council, (2) residence in the Council area, and (3) payment of annual dues (at present one dollar). All new members must be confirmed by the members or by the Board of Directors.

The By-laws adopted at the charter meeting define the Council's area as the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Voting members must be residents of this area. Persons who live elsewhere and who wish to keep in touch with the work of the Council by receiving its literature regularly, may become Associates of the Council by paying a fee of ~~one dollar~~ a year. $2.00

The Board of Directors is at present composed of 64 persons of whom 58 are elected members and 6 are ex officio members. Every one of the thirteen states in the Council area is represented on the Board. The racial composition of the Board is 27 (42%) Negro members and 37 (58%) white members. The occupational distribution of Board members is as follows: education and related interests, 23; business, law, and medicine, 14; religion, 8; public office and civic work, 9; journalism, 4; labor, 4; miscellaneous, 2. In order to prevent the usual ills of ageing and ingrowing, the By-laws provide that no Board member may serve more than two consecutive terms of four years each.

The Council's By-laws provide for a National Advisory Committee, whose function will be the coordination of the work of the Southern Regional Council with the work of similar organizations in other parts of the nation. There will also be one hundred Honorary Fellows of the Council, drawn from the ranks of young Southerners who show promise of progressive leadership, whose function will be to assist the Council as observers, correspondents, and special investigators.

6. For the Charter of the Council, see Appendix F.

III

PROGRAM AND METHODS

The Southern Regional Council represents the combined efforts of liberal and progressive people of both races to give democracy a chance in the South. Its long-time goal is the improvement of social, civic, economic, and racial conditions in the South. The Council is not exclusively a "race relations" organization, nor does it pretend to believe that it can "solve" the race problem, but it does believe that any sound movement for social progress must be based on the realization that the South cannot go far without democratizing its social order and giving all of its human resources a chance to develop their potentialities.

The Council's functions may be summarized as follows: (1) clearinghouse and coordinating work with numerous agencies working on Southern problems; (2) research and survey to determine the facts and the state of public opinion as a basis for sound social action; (3) educational activities through a monthly paper, The Southern Frontier, and through pamphlets, press, radio, conferences, and personal contacts; (4) consultative services to private or official agencies; (5) constructive action at every possible point on the social, economic, political and racial problems of the South.

The immediate objectives of the Council are: (1) to develop its staff and facilities for effective work, (2) to conserve and revitalize the work of existing state and local interracial groups, (3) to promote a strategy conference of the major agencies working on social problems in the South, and (4) to initiate studies and conferences in the areas of police administration, post-war employment, and household service.

As for specific methods, the Council must rely upon the age-old techniques of propaganda, conference, petition, public appeal, personal influence, and the like. It is a voluntary organization, and it has no more power than the combined will, moral conviction, and integrity of its members. It does not believe in miracles, but it does believe that in spite of obstacles there is a range within which hard work and intelligent strategy can induce constructive social change.

IV

THE REGIONAL APPROACH

It is generally admitted, by Southerners and non-Southerners alike, that the South is "a state of mind," and the researches of distinguished scholars have shown beyond all doubt that there are social, economic, political, and cultural traits which set the South off as different from other American regions.

Every region has a certain amount of pride and self-consciousness, and in the South—a region which has long been the object of sympathy, contempt, ridicule, philanthropy, exploitation, and free advice—there is a particularly sensitive reaction to criticism and reform efforts which stem from the "outside." As a matter of fact, in such a situation "outside influences," however well intentioned, can and sometimes do retard progress by provoking defensive attitudes and providing alibis for inaction and demagoguery.

Critics of the SRC have tried to picture it as a "defensive" organization. It is dangerous, they say, because it is trying to solve, on a regional or sectional basis, problems that are really national. However, there is nothing inherently superior about an organization or reform movement merely because it is "national," and nothing inherently inferior or dangerous about it merely because it is "regional." Many problems are national or even international in their scope, but it does not follow that they will be worked out everywhere at the same time and by the same methods. The test of the value of any movement or strategy is in what it achieves, and the Southern Regional Council believes that the surest and sanest way to achieve social progress in the South is to mobilize the efforts of liberal and progressive people within the region. The statement that "the South must work out its own salvation" is sound common sense and sound psychiatry. Certainly the South cannot achieve its fullest development and share equally with other regions in national affairs until it has taken the lead in working out its own problems.

The Southern Regional Council has posted no "keep out" signs and it has declared its willingness to cooperate with likeminded organizations—state, regional, and national. It has come neither to defend nor defame the South, but to help build a better South in a better nation. It dedicates itself to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

APPENDIX A

THE DURHAM CONFERENCE STATEMENT

On October 20, 1942, a group of Negro Southerners met in Durham, North Carolina, to discuss their problems and the changes which, in their opinion, would benefit not only Negroes themselves but the South and the nation. A committee was instructed to prepare a statement embodying the thinking of the Conference. In December, 1942, the following document was given to the public. It was entitled: "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South: a Statement by Southern Negroes."

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status, and the welfare of the country as a whole.

With these problems in mind, we, a group of southern Negroes, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, and in the belief that we voice the sentiments of many of the Negroes of the Nation as well as the South, take this means of recording our considered views of the issues before us.

(1) Our Nation is engaged in a world-wide struggle, the success of which, both in arms and ideals, is paramount and demands our first loyalty.

(2) Our loyalty does not, in our view, preclude consideration now of problems and situations that handicap the working out of internal improvements in race relations essential to our full contribution to the war effort, and of the inevitable problems of post-war reconstruction, especially in the South where we reside.

(3) The South, with its twenty-five million people, one-third of whom are Negroes, presents a unique situation, not only because of the size of the Negro population but because of the legal and customary patterns of race relations which are invariably and universally associated with racial discriminations. We recognize the strength and age of these patterns.

We are fundamentally opposed to the principle and practice of compulsory segregation in our American society, whether of races or classes or creeds; however, we regard it as both sensible and timely to address ourselves now to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations within the democratic framework.

(4) We regard it as unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life.

(5) We have the courage and faith to believe, however, that it is possible to evolve in the South a way of life, consistent with the principles for which we as a Nation are fighting throughout the world, that will free us all, white and Negro alike, from want, and from throttling fears.

Political and Civil Rights

1. We regard the ballot as a safeguard of democracy. Any discrimination against citizens in the exercise of the voting privilege, on account of race or poverty, is detrimental to the freedom of these citizens and to the integrity of the State. We therefore record ourselves as urging now:

a. The abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting.
b. The abolition of the white primary.
c. The abolition of all forms of discriminatory practices, evasions of the law, and intimidations of citizens seeking to exercise their right of franchise.

2. Exclusion of Negroes from jury service because of race has been repeatedly declared unconstitutional. This practice we believe can and should be discontinued now.

3. (a) Civil rights include personal security against abuses of police power by white officers of the law. These abuses, which include wanton killings, and almost routine beatings of Negroes, whether they be guilty or innocent of an offense, should be stopped now, not only out of regard for the safety of Negroes, but of common respect for the dignity and fundamental purpose of the law.

(b) It is the opinion of this group that the employment of Negro police will enlist the full support of Negro citizens in control of lawless elements of their own group.

4. In the public carriers and terminals, where segregation of the races is currently made mandatory by law as well as by established custom, it is the duty of Negro and white citizens to insist that these provisions be equal in kind and quality and in character of maintenance.

5. Although there has been, over the years, a decline in lynchings, the practice is still current in some areas of the South, and substantially, even if indirectly, defended by resistance to Federal legislation designed to discourage the practice. We ask that the States discourage this fascistic expression by effective enforcement of present or of new laws against this crime by apprehending and punishing parties participating in this lawlessness.

If the States are unable, or unwilling to do this, we urge the support of all American citizens who believe in law and order in securing Federal legislation against lynching.

6. The interests and securities of Negroes are involved directly in many programs of social planning and administration; in the emergency rationing, wage and rent control programs. We urge the use of qualified Negroes on these boards, both as a means of intelligent representation and a realistic aid to the functioning of these bodies.

Industry and Labor

Continuing opposition to the employment of Negroes in certain industries appears to proceed from (1) the outdated notions of an economy of scarcity, inherited from an industrial age when participation in the productive enterprises was a highly competitive privilege; (2) the effects of enemy propaganda designed to immobilize a large number of potentially productive workers in the American war effort; (3) the age-old prejudices from an era when the economic system required a labor surplus which competed bitterly within its own ranks for the privilege of work; (4) the established custom of reserving technical processes to certain racial groups; and (5) craft monopolies which have restricted many technical skills to a few workers.

Our collective judgment regarding industrial opportunities for Negroes may be summarized as follows:

1. The only tenable basis of economic survival and development for Negroes is inclusion in unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled branches of work in the industries or occupations of the region to the extent that they are equally capable. Circumstances will vary so as to make impossible and impracticable any exact numerical balance, but the principles enunciated by the President's Fair Employment Practices Committee are regarded by us as sound and economically essential.

2. There should be the same pay for the same work.

3. Negro workers should seek opportunities for collective bargaining and security through membership in labor organizations. Since there can be no security for white workers if Negroes are unorganized and vice versa, labor unions of white workers should seek the organization of Negro workers on a fair and equal basis.

4. We deplore the practice of those labor unions which bar Negroes from membership, or otherwise discriminate against them, since such unions are working against the best interest of the labor movement. We hold that only those labor unions which admit Negroes to membership and participation on a fair and democratic basis should be eligible for the benefits of the National Labor Relations Board, Railway Labor Act, State Labor Relations Acts and other protective labor legislation.

5. It is the duty of local, state and Federal agencies to insist upon and enforce provisions for the industrial training of Negroes equal in quality and kind with that of other citizens. We believe, further, that Negroes should have equal opportunity in training programs carried on by industries and by labor organizations.

6. We urge Negro representation on regional organizations concerned with the welfare of workers.

7. We regard the wage-and-job-freezing order of the War Manpower Commission as holding the seeds of a distinct disadvantage to Negroes and other marginal workers. Most of these workers are now employed in the lowest-income job brackets. The "freeze" order can remove the opportunity for economic advancement. There is as yet no assurance that under existing circumstances the War Manpower Commission can deal more equitably by the Negro in the future than it has in the past.

8. We are convinced that the South's economic and cultural development can be accelerated by increasing the purchasing power and skills of Negro workers.

Service Occupations

Any realistic estimate of the occupational situation of Negroes supports the view that Negroes will be employed in greatest proportions for a long time in service occupations. We see, however, possibilities of making of these fields scientifically guided areas in which training and organization will play a greater part in bringing about results mutually beneficial to employer and employee. We believe that greater service will be rendered and greater good will be engendered in the service fields if the following principles are observed:

1. More thorough training should be provided workers who plan to enter the service field, but the reward of the job and treatment on the job should be such as to make the workers feel that their training is justified.

Opportunity should be given the service worker to advance through the opening up of additional opportunities.

2. A wholesome environment, living accommodations, food, uniforms and rest rooms, all of an approved standard, should be provided service workers.

3. Opportunity should be given the service worker to live, after his stipulated hours of work, as an individual undisturbed in his private life by the whims and caprices of his employers.

4. In view of the strides made by labor in general, while the service worker's lot has remained about the same, service workers should be organized into unions with recognized affiliations.*

5. Service workers should be included in the provisions for old age insurance, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, the wage and hour act, and other benefits of Social Security legally provided to workers of other categories.

We believe that these provisions will help to insure more intelligent service and wholesome loyalty (which will improve both the quality of labor and personal relations) in service occupations.

Education

As equal opportunity for all citizens is the very foundation of the democratic faith, and of the Christian ethic which gave birth to the ideal of democratic living, it is imperative that every measure possible be taken to insure an equality of education to Negroes and, indeed, to all under-privileged peoples.

1. Basic to improvement in Negro education is better schools, which involves expenditures by States of considerably more funds for the Negro schools. This group believes that a minimum requirement now is (a) equalization of salaries of white and Negro teachers on the basis of equal preparation and experience; (b) an expanded school building program for Negro schools designed to overcome the present racial disparity in physical facilities; this program to begin as soon as building materials are available; (c) revision of the school program in terms of the social setting, vocational needs and marginal cultural characteristics of the Negro children; and (d) the same length of school term for all children in local communities. Our growing knowledge of the effect of environment upon the intelligence and social adjustment of children, in fact leads us to believe that to insure equality of educational opportunity it is not enough to provide for the under-privileged child, of whatever race, the same opportunities provided for those on superior levels of familial, social, and economic life. We feel it a function of Government to assure equalization far beyond the mere expenditure of equivalent funds for salaries and the like.

2. The education of Negroes in the South has reached the point at which there is increased demand for graduate and professional training. This group believes that this training should be made available equally for white and Negro eligible students in terms defined by the United States Supreme Court in the decision on the case of Gaines versus the University of Missouri.

3. Where it is established that States cannot sustain the added cost of equalization, Federal funds should be made available to overcome the differentials between white and Negro facilities and between southern and national standards.

4. It is the belief of this group that the special problems of Negro education make demands for intelligent and sympathetic representation of these problems on school boards by qualified persons of the Negro race.

5. The education of Negro youth can be measurably aided by the use of Negro enforcement officers of truancy and compulsory education laws.

*In the present hysteria of many housewives who are losing poorly paid servants to better paying war industries, it seems desirable to emphasize that this proposal bears no relation to the fantastic and probably Axis inspired rumors of so-called "Eleanor Clubs."

Agriculture

The South is the most rural section of the Nation, and Negroes, who constitute 33 per cent of its population, are responsible for an important share of the agricultural production on southern farms.

We recognize that the South is economically handicapped and that many of its disabilities are deeply rooted in agricultural maladjustments. To win the war, there is need for increased production of food, fibre and fats. In the present organization of agriculture, Negroes are a large part of the sharecropper and tenant group and a great majority of the rural Negro workers are in this class. Circumstances deny the Negro farmer sufficient opportunity to make his full contribution as a citizen. We suggest the following measures as means of increasing the production of the area, raising the status and spirits of Negro farmers, and of improving the region's contribution to the total war effort.

1. Establishment of sufficient safeguards in the system of tenancy to promote the development of land and home ownership and more security on the land, by:
   a. Written contracts
   b. Longer lease terms
   c. Higher farm wages for day laborers
   d. Balanced farm programs, including food and feed crops for present tenants and day laborers.

2. Adequate Federal assistance to Negro farmers should be provided on an equitable basis. The war effort can be materially aided if adequate provisions are made now for the interpretation of governmental policies to rural Negroes.

3. The equitable distribution of funds for teaching agriculture in the Negro land grant colleges to provide agricultural research and experimentation for Negro farmers.

4. The appointment of qualified Negroes to governmental planning and policy making bodies concerned with the common farmer, and the membership of Negro farmers in general farmers' organizations and economic cooperatives, to provide appropriate representation and to secure maximum benefits to our common wealth.

Military Service

We recognize and welcome the obligation of every citizen to share in the military defense of the nation and we seek, along with the privilege of offering our lives, the opportunity of other citizens of full participation in all branches of the military service, and of advancement in responsibility and rank according to ability.

Negro soldiers, in line of military duty and in training in the South, encounter particularly acute racial problems in transportation and in recreation and leave areas. They are frequently mistreated by the police. We regard these problems as unnecessary and destructive to morale.

Social Welfare and Health

1. We believe that some of the more acute problems of Negro health, family and personal disorganization are a reflection of deficiencies in economic opportunity, but that social and health services for Negroes will continue to be necessary in considerable amounts even with improvement of their economic status. As a means of reducing the mortality and public contagion resulting from inadequacies of medical attention and health knowledge, this group believes that minimum health measures for Negroes would include the following:
   a. Mandatory provisions that a proportion of the facilities in all public hospitals be available for Negro patients;
   b. That Negro doctors be either included on the staff for services to Negro patients, according to their special qualifications, or permitted as practitioners the same privilege and courtesy as other practitioners in the public hospitals;

c. That Negro public health nurses and social workers be more extensively used in both public and private organizations.

2. We advocate the extension of slum clearance and erection of low-cost housing as a general as well as special group advantage. The Federal government has set an excellent precedent here with results that offer much promise for the future.

* * * *

It is a wicked notion that the struggle of the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the Nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government.

The effect of the war has been to make the Negro, in a sense, the symbol and protagonist of every other minority in America and in the world at large. Local issues in the South, while admittedly holding many practical difficulties, must be met wisely and courageously if this Nation is to become a significant political entity in a new international world. The correction of these problems is not only a moral matter, but a practical necessity in winning the war and in winning the peace. Herein rests the chance to reveal our greatest weakness or our greatest strength.

APPENDIX B

THE ATLANTA CONFERENCE STATEMENT

On April 8, 1943, a group of white Southerners met in Atlanta, Georgia, to consider the statement which had been issued by the Durham Conference. The results of their deliberations were made public in the following document.

In October, 1942, a representative group of Southern Negro leaders met in Durham, N. C., and issued a statement in which they addressed themselves "to the current problems of racial discrimination and neglect, and to ways in which we may cooperate in the advancement of programs aimed at the sound improvement of race relations, within the democratic framework."

Their statement is so frank and courageous, so free from any suggestion of threat and ultimatum, and at the same time shows such good will, that we gladly agree to cooperate.

We do not attempt to make here anything like a complete reply to the questions raised nor to offer solutions for all the vexing problems. We hope, however, to point the pathway for future cooperative efforts and to give assurance of our sincere good will and desire to cooperate in any sound program aimed at the improvement of race relations.

These Negro leaders rightly placed emphasis in their statement on discrimination in the administration of our laws on purely racial grounds. We are sensitive to this charge and admit that it is essentially just. From the Potomac to the Rio Grande there are some ten million Negroes. While all citizens are governed by the same laws, it is recognized that Negroes have little voice in the making and enforcement of the laws under which they must live. They are largely dependent upon the will of the majority group for the safety of life and property, education and health, and their general economic condition. This is a violation of the spirit of democracy. No Southerner can logically dispute the fact that the Negro, as an American citizen, is entitled to his civil rights and economic opportunities.

The race problem in any Southern community is complicated by our economic limitations. The factors which have kept the South a tributary section have also kept it poor and lacking in sufficient industry to develop and to provide enough jobs and enough public funds for every public need. Yet the only justification offered for those laws which have for their purpose the separation of the races is that they are intended to minister to the welfare and integrity of both races. There has been widespread and inexcusable discrimination in the administration of these laws. The white Southerner has an obligation to interest himself in the legitimate aspirations of the Negro. This means correcting the discrimination between the races in the allocation of school funds; in the number and quality of schools, and in the salaries of teachers. In public travel where the law demands a separation of the races, primary justice and a simple sense of fair play demand the facilities for safety, comfort and health should be equal. The distribution of public utilities and public benefits, such as sewers, water, housing, street and sidewalk paving, playgrounds, public health and hospital facilities should come to the Negro upon the basis of population and need.

It is recognized that there is often practical discrimination by some peace officers and in some courts in the treatment of Negro prisoners and in the abrogation of their civil rights. There is no such discrimination incorporated in the laws of any of the Southern states. False arrests, brutal beatings and other evils must be stopped.

In the economic field, unquestionably procedures should be undertaken to establish fully the right to receive equal pay for equal work. To do otherwise works a wrong to our entire economic life and to our self respect. With so large a proportion of our wage-earning population belonging to the minority race, if we cannot plan for a well-trained, well-employed and prosperous Negro population, the economic future of the South is hopeless.

Most of the Negroes in the South are on farms and in rural communities. Failure to provide for them all the facilities for improving agricultural practices through schools, county agents, and supervision holds back all of the South. Fair wages, longer tenures of leases and increased opportunities for farm ownership are also necessary.

All men who believe in justice, who love peace and who believe in the meaning of this country are under the necessity of working together to draw off from the body of human society the poison of racial antagonism. This is one of the disruptive forces which unless checked will ultimately disturb and threaten the stability of the nation. Either to deny or to ignore the increased tension between the white and the colored races would be a gesture of insincerity.

That there are acute and intricate problems associated with two races living side by side in the South cannot be denied. But these problems can be solved and will ultimately disappear if they are brought out into an atmosphere of justice and good will. If we approach them with contempt in one group and with resentment in the other group, then we work on hopeless terms. The solution of these problems can be found only in men of both races who are known to be men of determined good will. The ultimate solution will be found in evolutionary methods and not in ill-founded revolutionary movements which promise immediate solutions.

We agree with the Durham Conference that it is "unfortunate that the simple efforts to correct obvious social and economic injustices continue, with such considerable popular support, to be interpreted as the predatory ambition of irresponsible Negroes to invade the privacy of family life." We agree also that "it is a wicked notion that the struggle by the Negro for citizenship is a struggle against the best interests of the nation. To urge such a doctrine, as many are doing, is to preach disunity, and to deny the most elementary principles of American life and government."

It is futile to imagine or to assert that the problem will solve itself. The need is for a positive program arrived at in an atmosphere of understanding, cooperation and a mutual respect.

APPENDIX C

THE RICHMOND CONFERENCE STATEMENT

On June 16, 1943, a Collaboration Committee, composed of delegates from the Durham Conference and the Atlanta Conference, met in Richmond, Virginia. The following statement was issued by the Richmond Conference.

This is a day of great differences, strong feelings, and epochal conflicts throughout the world. Yet the world's greatest need and hope is to find common ground for universal action and balanced harmony among all peoples. Manifestly, such a goal must be reached through cooperative approximation to the largest measure of agreement in line with the largest number of values and the largest number of people.

We face, therefore, the double crisis of standing firm for the conservation and preservation of human rights; yet to seek these ends by the way of peace and planning rather than by conflict and revolution.

In America, and particularly in the South, we face the problem of readjustments to meet the demands of present and post-war conditions with reference to the Negro and the future development of a great region of the Nation. This, exclusive of the war, is the great crisis of the South and Nation.

This is the problem of two great peoples caught up in the midst of transition between the powerful heritage of the past and the mighty pull of the future. For here is the white South, a great people often doing little things and good people often doing bad things. And here is the Negro South, caught as always between the upper and nether millstones of conflicting forces and also paying the price of extraordinary transition from level to level of cultural achievement, and needing plenty of understanding and cooperation. And here is the white South inexorably conditioned by cultural complexes, suffering terribly, too, and needing sympathy and help as few peoples have ever needed in the annals of man. And, even more important, the two, white South and black South, are part and parcel of the Nation, whose people need scarcely less than the two regional peoples the sense of time and wisdom.

The war has sharpened the issue of Negro-white relations in the United States, and particularly in the South. A result has been increased racial tensions, fears, and aggressions, and an opening up of the basic questions of racial segregation and discrimination, Negro minority rights, and democratic freedom, as they apply practically in Negro-white relations in the South. These issues are acute and threaten to become even more serious as they increasingly block, through the deeper fears aroused, common sense consideration for even elementary improvements in Negro status and the welfare of the country as a whole.

This is a rare challenge to the leadership of the South: to the white leadership to find new ways of cooperation and to justify increased confidence of the Negro leadership in the white South; to the Negro leadership, to sense the difficulties involved and to meet increasing demands, without slowing down their essential efforts.

As evidence of the promise of this leadership, two recent Southern conferences on race relations, one at Durham, under the auspices of Negro leadership, and one in Atlanta under the auspices of white leadership, have blazed new trails. As a follow-up of these and with the above problems and backgrounds in mind, we, a group of Southern whites and Negroes, representing both the Durham and Atlanta groups, meeting as a collaboration committee at Richmond, Virginia, June 16, 1943, and following the general trend of the Atlanta group, urge the general adaptation of the Durham statement entitled "A Basis for Interracial Cooperation and Development in the South," which has had extraordinary nation-wide endorsement.

The framers of this covenant, realizing that the situation calls for both candor and wisdom, have included adequate and searching analysis of the principal issues involved, duly interpreted in their proper perspective. The problems so featured include political and civil rights, industry and labor, service occupations, education, agriculture, military service, social welfare and health.

In the area of political and civil rights: the essential problems featured were those of franchise and the ballot, jury service, personal security, services in public carriers, the elimination of violence, within and without the law, the elimination of lynching, and the employment of an increasingly larger number of Negroes in the public service.

In the area of work opportunities: the increased training for all skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled labor, and opportunity for employment; the readaptation of labor union policies both for the best interests of Negroes and labor unions; the problems of dual standards of pay; support of, but guarding against discrimination in, local, state, and federal procedures; special problems of service workers and standards of living.

In the area of education: equalized opportunities in all aspects but especially including institutions of higher learning, professional training, and equal salaries.

In the area of agriculture: adequate opportunity for the Negro farmer, including a sound system of tenancy, adequate state and federal assistance, increased opportunity for farm ownership, fair farm wages, and the wider employment of Negro farm and home agents.

In the area of military service: along with the obligation to serve, the opportunity for full participation and advancement in the war activities and a continuing better adjustment of unsatisfactory situations.

In the area of social welfare and health: adequate provisions for safeguarding the public health, for training physicians and nurses, and for their employment. Also, the erection of low-cost housing and other facilities for improving community life.

We recognize now the importance of affirmative action, without which we shall fall far short of our hopes and possibilities. To this end, we direct that the continuing committee, as appointed by the two groups now consolidated in this larger collaboration committee, be charged with the responsibility for working out methods and practical means of approach. We urge especially that efforts be begun to prepare the post-war world for a wise and successful reception of our returning soldiers and to prepare both our soldiers and the people for attitudes and procedures adequate to carry the great load of post-war needs. In all these, we urge the public to a new sense of the meaning of these needs as they accord with our professed principles of Christianity and democracy.

APPENDIX D

THE ATLANTA RESOLUTION

On August 4, 1943, a Continuation Committee, appointed by the Richmond Conference, met in Atlanta to consider ways and means of implementing the recommendations of the preceding Conferences. The Committee resolved itself into the nucleus of the Southern Regional Council and elected Dr. Howard W. Odum and Dr. Charles S. Johnson as Co-Chairmen. The following resolution was adopted unanimously by the Committee.

We are gathered together here in solemn assembly, conscious of our heritage and opportunity. In the name and spirit of America and all her resources and institutions we covenant together in harmony and unanimity to make this day, or what this day should bring to pass, epochal in a new purpose, a new understanding, and a new fellowship.

In the name and spirit of America's science and education we seek to find and to tell the truth. In the name and spirit of America's democracy we seek the way of equal opportunity. In the name of America's patriotism, we strive for loyalty to the American dream, for leadership to guide, and for statesmanship adequate to carry the burden of the new America. In the name and spirit of America's Christianity, we search for the new faith of fellowship. In the name of humanity, we propose to substitute the measures of the good society for the old biological struggle for physical survival. In the name and spirit of all these and the living reality of a complex world, we dedicate ourselves to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

Four ways there are, and perhaps more, of approaching these laudable and attainable ends. First, we agree upon a new declaration of American principles and a new dedication of ourselves to the task of covenanting together with all regions and all races for the continued better ordering of our society. We recognize fully that in the present crisis this covenant is as important as the earlier compacts of the forefathers, and that the framework within which we covenant together must comprehend a concept and a charter which guarantees equality of opportunity for all peoples. This means more specifically as bearing upon the burden of our present counseling that the Negro in the United States and in every region is entitled to and should have every guarantee of equal opportunity that every other citizen of the United States has within the framework of the American democratic system of government.

Second, we dedicate ourselves unswervingly to the successful achievement of this task. Since in the order of all nature and creations and of the growth and development of the people and society there are always certain features peculiar to each society; since in the order of democracy there are certain elemental principles of self-government that are inherent in each folk and regional society; and since in both the physical and cultural heritage of the South there are certain cumulative and tragic handicaps that represent powerful factors in the situation, we appeal to the Nation, in covenant with the South, to exercise a wisdom and maturity through which methods, procedures, and rates of change may be worked out in the spirit of, and in conformity with, the principles of our American democracy.

Third, to the end that there will be actual realistic accomplishments rather than mere words and that there may be possible ways and means of actually insuring progress in all approaches to these goals of equal opportunity, we urge the South to pool its efforts and set up a strong, unified, Southern Regional Council, constituted of representatives of both races and of private and public groups. Such a council, in subscribing to the new declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all other available agencies and individuals in private and in public life and especially with a similar national group when established.

Fourth, since the crisis is not only southern but national, not only for whites but for Negroes and other races as well, and since the central purpose of the new council is cooperation and the building of active good will, we urge the formation of a National Committee on race and regional development, constituted of representatives of all races and of public and private groups. Such a committee, subscribing to the declaration of principles, would work with and utilize all available agencies and individuals in private and public life.

We recognize the sweep and power of the emotions in time of war and crisis and the rights and tendencies in the democratic way of life for thousands of individuals and groups to agitate, organize, and promote their own peculiar programs. This is and must be the essence of a democracy. But it is also the way of democracy to focus upon fundamentals and to give opportunity to responsible leadership through the orderly agencies of government and of private citizens. To this end no greater service can be rendered to the Nation than to covenant together in responsible organizations, to provide leadership and clearing house, and to avoid conflicts, waste and overlapping, on the one hand, and, on the other, to minimize the harmful influence of irresponsible forces in this great hour of need for good will and for effective ways of doing what is needed. We feel that in these councils may be approximated needs more nearly than in any other ways that now appear.

The Nation is committed now to what is generally called, both in private business and in public life, post-war planning to the end that we may be ready for the demobilization and reintegration of our millions of returning soldiers into the best possible American way of life. Recognizing that the problems of the folk and of race constitute a more difficult problem than that of physical planning, by the same token we urge all the more the obligation to apply to this great area of our democracy the best the sciences, social sciences, the humanities, and religion can do in the realistic working out of next steps.

To this end, the present membership of the Continuation Committees of the Durham and Atlanta Conferences is hereby constituted the nucleus of the new Council; and the officers are authorized (1) to take immediate steps for the legal incorporation of the Council; (2) to appoint immediately the necessary staff personnel to implement this program, and (3) to enlarge the present membership in order to make it fully representative of all the interests encompassed by this program.

It is also respectfully urged that the President of the United States appoint a National Committee such as is suggested above.

EXCERPTS FROM ADDRESS OF MARGARET L. FISHER, PUBLIC RELATIONS DIRECTOR, SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, AT LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1944

By your magnificent slogan, "I am determined never for a moment to be afraid to face a truth because it is new or to dig under a belief because it is old and dearly loved," you have agreed that the first step in the solution of any problem is to face the problem squarely and honestly.

As Americans who happen to be Southerners, and not as Southerners who happen to be Americans, let's take a look at our region as it is - - not as we like to think it is.

We are a region of untold wealth and hope; and a region of untold poverty and despair.

More than a third of this country's good farm lands, with the most varied soils, are in the South. Forty percent of the Nation's forests, representing great timber reserves as well as our best protection against soil erosion, are in this region. For more than six months of each year our crops can grow without danger of frost. We have ample rainfall. We have vast natural reservoirs of minerals, crude oil, coal, fish and game, and enormous capacity for generating power.

We are rich in human resources. Our population has grown more rapidly than any other region, our section forming the basis for the population increase of the Nation.

Yes, we are blessed by Nature with immense wealth, yet our people are the poorest in the Nation.

Great sections of our forests have been cut away, leaving us with 22 million acres of devastation where once there were fertile lands. More than half of the country's farmers are in the South, and more than half of our farmers are tenants and sharecroppers. Many of these people live in inescapable poverty. The average per capita income in the South has been little more than half the average for the Nation.

And because we are the poorest region in the country, we are the most illiterate region - - or perhaps it is vice versa. The average salary of our teachers is far below the national average, yet the number of pupils per teacher is much higher. Many areas have no schools available. I have been told that of the 3 million children of school age in this country for whom no school facilities are available, more than 2 million of them are in the South.

Poverty, illiteracy, crime and disease go hand in hand. We have a dangerously high death rate, with more than half of our low income families undernourished and masses of our children racked by preventable disease.

We are a region of traditionally religious people. Yes, we have the Bible Belt. But we also have had and may still have the Ku Klux Klan, riders in the night, a tree, a length of rope, and death.

Why are these things true? Why have we not converted our riches into a good life for our people? Why have there been practiced time and time again the worst forms of human cruelty and degradation?

Can it be because we have here two great groups of people who for generations have been set against each other with deliberate and wicked cunning? Can it be that here in the South our insecurity has led us to exalt material values over human values? Can it be that the South has found it expedient to have neither Christianity nor democracy at work? Can it be that two great groups of people have been set against each other ~~for generations~~ in order to maintain a system of cheap labor?

Cheap labor means an economy of much for the few and little for the many. We all know that neither Christianity nor democracy is compatible with that kind of economy - - unfortunately the kind of economy we have had in the South throughout its history.

Yes, cheap labor has enticed absentee-ownership to come in, much of which has drained off the wealth of our natural and human resources and has exerted potent influence on our governments.

Powerful interests want to keep labor cheap. You can depend on that. And so far the most effective way has been to set the white man and the Negro against each other. To play upon the white man's passions and hatreds, to keep him poor, to keep him illiterate, to build on his prejudices, to threaten his so-called security by using the Negro. And to use those same weapons with the Negro - - to fill him with fear, and to withhold his rights of citizenship, in many cases keeping a ballot out of his hand.

And there, my friends, we have the race problem. Founded on economic exploitation, nurtured on prejudices, fears, illiteracy, and disease. A problem passed on from generation to generation, prejudices becoming more and more ingrained - - based on no scientific findings, and directly contrary to the Christian ideal of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God, and directly contrary to the fundamentals of democracy upon which this great republic was founded.

So, if we hope to take our place in the Nation and in the world, and if we hope to build a lasting peace, we must face the race question and all of its implications.

During this world conflict, during this great war we are waging to make secure the rights of the individual man the world over, during this perilous time when we have seen our fathers, brothers, and sons face death in order to wipe out a philosophy of racial, religious, or national superiority -- during these times we have seen this very philosophy we seek to destroy in full swing in our South.

We have seen industries in the South, engaged in the manufacture of weapons of war, searching frantically for workers and yet turning down hundreds of qualified Americans for one reason only - - color. I have seen war plants desperate for specialized skills, scraping the country trying to find them, turn down men who had those skills right on the plant's doorstep -- for one reason only: color. In one city in the South, hundreds of Negro women were encouraged to and took government training courses for employment in a local war plant.

When they had finished and acquired a high degree of skill, they were refused employment in the jobs for which they were trained. They are still without work in a town with so-called acute labor shortage, an already congested town into which more white workers are being imported. I have seen a Negro radio technician, a desperately needed skill, offered work as a common laborer. Such accounts are endless.

The world knows these things. Our colored allies know these things. Our soldiers know these things. It seems small wonder that a young Negro soldier said as he went into combat: "If I am killed, put on my grave marker 'Here lies a black man who died fighting a yellow man for the protection of a white man.'"

If we want our civilization to stand we must face these facts. We must recognize that the rights of no man are safe unless the rights of all men are safe. If we want Christian democracy a dynamic force in the South, we can have it. If we want a good world for all men, a lasting peace, we can have that, too.

What can we do? We can examine ourselves and see that we as individuals practice what we preach. We can inform ourselves about our community: its schools, its hospitals, its parks, its police; about our state; and about our Nation. And in informing ourselves, we can make sure that we are getting both sides of every picture. We can share our information with the people. We can support the press when it is on the side of right, and combat it when it isn't. We can become intelligent and well-informed citizens on public affairs, and then we can fulfill our obligation as citizens at the ballot-box. We can demand of our representatives that they represent the people, the majority of the people, on all legislation -- and don't think your letters and telegrams don't carry weight. We can use our influence daily with our church, our government, and our neighbors for the rights of all men. We can ally ourselves with social action groups which are working on problems of human relations. We can stand and speak fearlessly for the practices as well as the principles of Christianity and democracy. We can make up our minds to lay aside harsh criticism in the knowledge that we are living in honesty with ourselves, with our brothers, and with our God.

We stand at the crossroads. We can see our civilization go down to destruction in a series of devastating wars, or we can rise to a higher plateau with an abundant life for all men. There are only two roads this time. We must take one or the other. Right down here in the South we are helping decide which of those roads we shall take. Building the good life for all mankind will not be an easy road -- but we can travel it and reach our destination if we are prepared to give up special privileges, to wipe out false prejudices, to hate war and love peace.

What can we do? We can practice what we preach. As Christians, we can set democracy at work in the South.

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

Thank you for your letter of July 27. I am glad that you are writing Miss Smith. Incidentally, I am curious to know where her letter was printed. I thought it would get into print sooner or later, but I have not run across it.

Several of us have noticed and commented on the fact that our charter mentions cooperation with only "local, state, and regional agencies." I understand that it was purely accidental that the word "national" was not also inserted. I agree with you that the charter should be amended, and I think we should bring up this matter at the annual meeting in October.

Best wishes,

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

I have your letter of August 18 inquiring about the work of the Council. The Council is still in the process of organization and our program has not been sufficiently crystallized to answer your questions in detail. As yet, we have no established relations with the Southern Regional Council or other organizations in the field. Future cooperation and work with such agencies is the subject of our deliberations during this organization period.

After our next Board meeting, early in the fall, I shall be able to tell you our membership requirements. Our aims, however, have been set forth in a suggested announcement and I believe will answer your question on our position on segregation. I am enclosing a copy of the first draft for this announcement, which is to be issued in the fall.

I am also having your name placed on our mailing list to receive such material as we may issue. In the meanwhile, we should be very glad to have any material that you could send us.

Very truly yours,

"Strange Fruit--food for the Talmadgites"

Miss Lillian Smith
Clayton, Georgia

Dear Miss Smith:

Since writing you I have had an opportunity to read your letter to Dr. Johnson in its entirety, and am so impressed by it that I would like to use all of the enclosed portions, if I may have your permission.

In the final analysis, our difference of opinion seems to be as to the efficacy of demanding an end of segregation in the South now. The question is: do the good results from such demands outweigh the evil, or vice versa? I have put this question to several of the SRC's directors, and they do not venture to guess. My guess is that the evil results predominate, while you evidently believe otherwise. One of us is right, and I'm not certain which. But this thing is basic, and I do wish you would give me your reasons for your conclusion.

"Strange Fruit" provides the best case in point. It comes under the category of "shock treatment, expertly administered," as prescribed for the South in your "Things to Do." If we could determine its total effect upon the Southern situation, we would have the answer to our question.

I do not doubt that "Strange Fruit" has administered a beneficial shock to a great many people, especially outside the South. But the important question is, has its total effect been to alleviate or worsen the South's interracial ills?

For a time Talmadge and the other professional promoters of race hate had to be content with inflating Ambree's long-distance suggestions of white and colored children playing together; now the hate-mongers have the interracial intermarriage incendiary bomb of Strange Fruit to point out as the "enemy within the gates."

If you had complete control over your patient (the South) under laboratory conditions, shock might well bring the quickest relief. But under the actual conditions, you are administering shock to a patient who doesn't want it, and who is thereby prompted to call in the old family witch-doctors, Talmadge, Colescott, & Associates.

These fakers, needless to say, are not interesting in effecting a cure, but rather seek to drive the patient to violence. The more shocks the patient is given by Strange Fruit, the easier it will be for the quacks to drive the patient to insanity.

I do not think that, in view of the patient's present condition, and also because of all the maddening paraphenalia supplied the witch-doctors by those with an economic stake in segregation, there is any hope of the shock treatment winning out.

This being the case, it seems to me that shock treatment merely serves the purpose of driving the patient into the arms of the witch-doctors, whereas moderate therapeutic methods can doubtless succeed in winning ~~them~~ away.

I may be wrong; but I am not trying to dodge the issue.

Sincerely,

Stetson Kennedy

My dear Mr. Kennedy: The Bureau for Intercultural Education has been in operation for some time, and has attempted to develop a program for a broad attack on the problem of racial discrimination by working through the schools. It has made a small beginning. When the American Council on Race Relations was organized, it was decided that the director of the Educational Division of the American Council should become the acting director of the Bureau with a view to the elimination of duplication, and the development of a unified approach to the problem. This arrangement has now been in operation about three months and serious consideration is being given to merging the work of the two organizations, perhaps under the American Council, though the details are yet to be worked out. There will certainly be closest cooperation, if not affiliation, between the two organizations.

I am not sure that I can answer your question about the specific condemnations of segregation being confined to housing, public facilities, and services. I do not remember any discussions of that point, and I doubt if there is any tactical reason why it was stated in just that way. I would assume that these areas were specified as illustrations rather than out of a desire to limit the area to be considered.

I am

Sincerely,

VOL. V AUGUST, 1944 NO. 8

What Can Be Done About Domestic Employment?

By Grace Towns Hamilton
Executive Secretary, Atlanta Urban League

Effects of The War

The past few years have been a time of crisis for both the employer of domestic help and for the household worker. The crisis has created "tensions," which like the early symptoms of a nervous breakdown, may have the advantage, if thoughtfully regarded, of preventing disaster—or the disadvantage, if ignored, of accumulating until a real breakdown becomes inevitable The "Eleanor Club," the "Push-'em Club," the "wait-'till-the-war-is-over-we'll-fix-'em" reports are symptoms of an unhealthy condition about which something needs to be done and about which something can be done, if the patients, in this case the household workers, the employers, and the community, are willing.

Mamie the maid who became Minnie the welder says that the shorter hours and the better wages pulled her out of the home and into the factory. However, she and her sister workers have recently become acquainted with and accustomed to social security, health insurance, and protective legislation. Their first experience as union members in the war jobs to which they have gone has made concrete for them the advantages which come from cooperative efforts of employees to bargain for improvement in conditions of work. The same experience has also made increasingly clear the necessity for cooperative planning by employees and employers in order that the interests of both may be protected.

Meanwhile, the war period has stimulated the development of cooperative projects among housewives for the care of children and for cleaning services. These efforts have had the tendency to point out to them the importance of organization in the routine of housework. Increased appreciation of each other's needs by the maid and the mistress make possible mutually satisfactory adjustments.

Basic Needs

Finding the answer to what can be done about household employment is important planning for the home front which need not wait for the post-war period. Five needs constitute a basis for efforts to solve the problem:

1. The need for trained household workers, which can be met only by the establishment and support of proper training facilities.

2. The need to make conditions of employment in household work more comparable with other types of work.

3. The need to remove the social stigma so that the difficulties for the group already engaged in the occupation will be corrected, and so that capable women will be attracted to it.

4. The need to develop new standards and techniques of placement, which will provide the employer with the kind and amount of service for which she is willing and able to pay, and which will protect the employee from substandard assignments which destroy the advantages to the employer and the employee of any program for improvement.

5. The need for education of the public in order to make clear to housewives that it is to their personal advantage to raise the status of this almost feudal vocation of domestic service to the level of modern industry.

Education of the community at large can make clear that more adequate wages paid to one of the largest occupational groups in our country will be of vital importance in increasing the purchasing power of a large number of workers, thus making effective an increased demand for goods. Wage adjustment in this occupation is an infrequently mentioned but nevertheless important factor in conquering the threat of a post-war depression by making possible full employment after the war.

Community Approach

Community understanding is essential if resources for proper training and placement are to be made available, and if the hours and wages for the occupation are to be adjusted in the direction of acceptable standards.

Since the amount which can be spent for service is determined by the family budget, many women with a need for help, but with a limited amount to spend, have used their limited funds to buy inferior services at substandard wages. Organized efforts on the part of the community as a whole will provide new resources for the families with limited financial resources and will help such women learn how to spend wisely the amounts they have, to buy the services they need most, without undermining standards. It should be recog-

DIFFERENTIAL FREIGHT RATES AND THE SOUTH

Seven years ago this summer the National Emergency Council submitted to the President of the United States its now widely publicized "Report on Economic Conditions of the South." Among the findings of this report was this statement: "In addition to absentee ownership and the high cost of credit, the major problem which faces almost all industry in the South is that of freight rate differentials."

The report maintained that the then existing interterritorial railroad freight rates, which affect the movement of many southern manufactured and semifinished goods and some agricultural products, actually restricted the development of industry in the South. In view of the subsequent findings of the National Resources Planning Board and the more recent activity of the Southern Governors' Conference, this problem has assumed a unique significance in the social and industrial life of the South. Because the full and mature development of the economic South is one of the SRC's interests, the editors present a brief primer of the problem as it affects the South and its people.

Development of Rate Structure

When the railroads were developing in the country there grew up a regionalized class rate structure which was supposed to have been based upon differentials in the cost of railroad operation, the longer hauls and smaller populations in some areas. These factors necessitated higher rates to meet operating costs. The Southern Territory comprised Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee. The area adjoining the South, known as Official Territory, has the lowest freight rates on manufactured goods and the nation's largest consumer market. The Southern Territory has high rates on manufactured goods and low rates on raw or semifinished materials. According to some authorities this means that the region's industries are kept in a semifinishing or "colonial" status. In the southeast a manufacturer faces a 39% disadvantage in the charges he has to pay in order to get his goods into Official Territory, which embraces roughly the northern half of the United States east of the Mississippi. A manufacturer in the southeast has a relative disadvantage of 75%, and is even worse off.

Effects of The Differentials

With what results? Simply this: the

We salute the Democratic county chairmen in Texas who followed the U. S. Supreme Court decision and permitted Negroes to take part in the Democratic primary on July 22. In Bexar County, for example, the Democratic chairman declared, "I understand many Texas counties are planning to refuse Negroes the right to vote. They are just getting themselves involved in a lot of difficult situations. I am not going to take any chances here." A candidate for office said, "Anybody with a poll tax should be allowed to vote regardless of their color." In Palo Pinto County, the Democratic chairman stated, "In accordance with the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, county election judges should permit free exercise of the ballot by everyone who professes allegiance to the primary's nominees and who meets state requirements." In these and many other counties, Negroes took part in the Democratic primary for the first time in many years.

Two important films have been released recently, but there are indications that they will not be seen in many Southern communities unless interested citizens urge theater managers to show them. One of the films is "The Negro Soldier," which was produced under government supervision and which has been the object of wide comment and praise. The other is March of Time's "Americans All" which is based on the theme of racial and religious tolerance. The SRC assisted the March of Time crew in various ways during its three weeks' stay in Atlanta, and the film contains some scenes portraying the activities of the SRC. However, we have not yet been able to get even a sneak preview of "Americans All."

Attorneys general of 13 states will meet in Memphis, September 5, at a regional convention of the National Association of Attorneys General. Principal topics at the meeting will be the recent opinions of the U. S. Supreme Court affecting Negro voting in Southern primaries and declaring insurance to be an interstate business.

Quotes From The Press

Governor Sparks' Challenge

(Birmingham News, August 2, 1944)

"There is one problem in Alabama and in many Southern states which has been a millstone around our neck . . . That is the tenant problem. More than half our farmers live on tenant farms . . . There has been an increase in white tenancy in recent years, while at the same time there has been a decrease in colored tenancy. This indicates that the Negro race is moving to centers of industry, while on the farm our white people remain in status quo."

The foregoing is from a speech delivered by Governor Sparks before the Southern Farm Bureau Training School meeting at Auburn. It is a reminder from a man whose opinion must be respected that the tenant farmer problem is already largely a white man's problem. Any who have been sniffish about finding a solution for the problem because of a disinclination to help Negroes will have to revise this attitude. And those who have a narrow, self-centered point of view are also under pressure to realize that they have been at odds with their own interest.

Governor Sparks is not content with viewing with alarm. He wants to do something. He knows that the tenant farmer cannot be relied on to use modern agricultural methods so long as he is the victim of a harsh system. The governor doesn't like "regimentation" or "collectivism," but he knows that the tenant farmer must be helped by the state. He is even prepared to supplement what the national government is doing by having the Legislature enact legal relief so that a "better relationship can be developed and a more profitable tenant system can be established looking ultimately toward the elimination of tenancy as we now know it."

These are good words, and one hopes that they left the right impression on the audience the governor addressed. The Farm Bureau's antagonism toward the FSA, which is now mainly concerned with its tenancy program, shows that somewhere along the line there are people who do not join Governor Sparks in his social approach to the subject. Perhaps these are leaders who frequently misrepresent the sentiment of their followers. It would be a grand thing if the Farm Bureau could throw itself behind the reforms which Governor Sparks suggested. There is good reason to believe that too much of the law affecting the farm tenant is heavily weighted against him.

Housing For Negroes

(Atlanta Journal, July 31, 1944)

The declaration by the National Association of Real Estate Boards, representing 20,000 real estate firms over the nation, that the members should face the Negro housing problem as a sound business investment, is a move that should have far-reaching economic effects. It should result in housing improvements for millions of Negro families, and a raise in the standard of living for this large minority group is certain to have a generally favorable effect upon the nation as a whole.

The association has recognized that there is a serious shortage of healthful and safe housing for Negroes, setting forth the belief that in this shortage lies an unparalleled opportunity for real estate men in every community to tap an almost entirely new field of business. The association asserts further that the Negro, if given the opportunity, is a good economic risk. This makes the projected housing program a sound business policy, in addition to all the other obvious benefits.

Can Easily Be Arranged

(Charleston News-Courier, Aug. 3, 1944)

Negro Rooseveltians talk of Negroes being a majority in three congressional districts of South Carolina, as if the general assembly could not pass an act abolishing three districts and providing for the election of three representatives (or six) at large. It would be excellent were three of the representatives chosen at large though there were no Negro voters in the state. In the same way, legislation can at any time be enacted that would insure the election of white officers in counties. Nothing prevents the joining in an election district of half a dozen counties for the election of sheriffs and legislators, the district to be so arranged that it would contain a majority of white people.

The Progressive Democratic Party In South Carolina

By JOHN H. MCCRAY*

*The author is editor of The Lighthouse and Informer, Columbia, S. C., and Chairman of The South Carolina Progressive Democratic Party.

Up to the time the Supreme Court handed down its decision in the Texas Primary case, Negroes in South Carolina were hopeful that the state's Democratic leaders would recede from their hostile attitude towards Negro membership in the Democratic Party, and their hopes soared when it was announced that a special session of the state legislature had been ordered to deal with the Texas decision.

These hopes lived only briefly, for the special session was told by Governor Olin D. Johnston that it had been assembled for the purpose of circumventing the Texas decision and "maintaining white supremacy."

For some time before, Negroes had been conscious of the fact that they outnumbered whites in 22 of the state's 46 counties and in three of the six congressional districts. Despite pleas for their admission into the state's Democratic Party, made by both Negro leaders and liberal white citizens, their net gain was a suggestion that they form their own Democratic Party. With reluctance the suggestion was studied, and during the process it was discovered that here was a procedure which could work as a boomerang on both the state party and the national Democratic Party, which certainly had known of what was happening to Negroes in the South but which either preferred to let the situation remain or had never been asked for a ruling.

So when all hopes of honorable solutions failed and when it was obvious that legal action planned two years earlier could not be brought in time to have effect in this year's important elections, the Progressive Democratic Party was organized in Columbia, May 24, for the purpose of forcing the issue of Negro admission into the Democratic Party by pressure from the national party and by a threat from the Negro voters in the counties and districts where they outnumbered whites.

The movement spread like wild fire. Daily newspapers and radio commentators discussed it. When the first state convention assembled, 172 delegates from 39 counties were present. Because the state government rejected a plea for use of the House of Representatives chamber, the convention was held in Columbia's Masonic Temple. The convention declared itself open to persons of all races, declared in favor of the re-election of President Roosevelt, adopted a constitution, and named eighteen full-vote delegates to go to the national Democratic convention in Chicago to contest the seating of "lily-whites" as a means of being recognized by the national party.

The party launched a state-wide registration drive for voting in bloc in the general election this year, proposing a full party ticket offering opposition to every nominee from the white party. The white members of the other party became alarmed and, for the first time in the history of the state, began registration en masse to "outvote the Negro." Progressive Democratic workers reported from over the state that any number of devices were being used to deter Negro registration, especially in those counties where Negroes outnumbered whites.

South Carolina law provides registration for any citizen who has lived in the state two years and in the county one, who owns and has paid all taxes on property worth $300 or more. The alternative is to be able to read and write any section of the state constitution the registration officer might submit.

The devices ranged from keeping Negro registrants in line all day (as was done in Chesterfield County) to brusque refusal to register them. In Williamsburg County, the officer took all day to examine five Negroes, requiring them to read the entire constitution, to write it in full and then interpret it. After surviving these ordeals, the applicants were then asked to relate how courts are conducted and finally were told that a board of eight would have to decide whether or not they were competent to hold a registration certificate.

In Colleton County Negro applicants were told they would have to write a letter to the registration board and obtain permission before they could register. In another county, when a colored man spent most of the day trying to pay his poll tax (necessary for voting), a sheriff's deputy bellowed at him: "What you niggers so anxious about paying poll taxes for? Somebody fixing to get his damn head beat open trying to act like white folks." When the man expressed a willingness to have his head beat anyway, the sheriff accepted his tax, running it up a bit.

In Marlboro County, officials gave Negro applicants cards intended for absentee balloting by soldiers. Many left with these thinking that they held certificates. And so does it continue. Party leaders propose to vote as many this fall as possible but predict it will take several years before full strength is built up.

Before the national Democratic convention, national party leaders became aware of the serious threat posed by the Progressive Democrats. These hitherto unheard-of South Carolinians could alienate the northern Negro vote and toss the fall election into the laps of the Republicans. So at the request of national leaders a series of conferences was held in Washington. Certain definite benefits have come out of these in behalf of Negro Democratic membership in South Carolina, augmented by others gained in Chicago. The delegates were not seated at the convention, mainly because, realizing they were a bit short after having less than three months for complete state organization, they preferred to threaten and bargain for benefits. They won far more than a knockdown-dragout convention scene would have netted them and returned to South Carolina with the feeling that South Carolina has sent her last all-white delegation to the national convention.

Support of the party has been pledged by a number of white citizens. In fact, the first contribution it received came from a widowed white lady in Columbia.

In South Carolina proper, two main achievements have been claimed by the Progressive Democrats. First, this year's senatorial campaign for the Democratic nomination was conducted without the usual anti-Negro blare. In fact, one candidate ran on a flat record of "fair treatment for the Negro." The second is that party leaders among the old group confess alarmingly that "no longer can we keep the Negro out of politics by the Primary." The general election now is the battle ground.

The Progressive Democratic Party expects to remain a permanent organization, even though South Carolina's pattern falls before the U. S. Supreme Court. Future plans include a state-wide organization among Negroes so long as it shall be necessary to have group action in the matter of group rights and privileges.

A Letter From California

Some time ago we received a letter from a young man in California requesting some of our literature. His letter also contained the following comments:

"I am a Negro student and am working in one of the local shipyards. Very frequently at lunch time I have talked to the men on the personal benefits when one is free of racial bigotry, etc., and what a better job we can do when each is doing his best in cooperating.

"I know I would be a better citizen if it were not for racial discrimination. I also know my white co-worker could rise to a more enjoyable and full life if he would only wake up.

"I am a member of The Neighborhood Church which is interracial in its organization. It has a Negro and a white pastor who alternate.

"The Church has been operating since last November and shows signs of becoming a great agency for good."

JAMES P. JONES.

Elsewhere on this page we publish an article by John H. McCray, Chairman of the recently organized Progressive Democratic Party in South Carolina. The author presents what seems to be a potentially effective strategy for organizing the Negro vote and making it count. The editors invite readers of the SOUTHERN FRONTIER to contribute constructive discussions of this approach.

Domestic Employment

nized that in this field, as in most others, the employer seldom gets more than she is willing to pay for.

As in any other maladjusted social situation for which a community-wide solution is sought, genuinely representative groups of the people most concerned must consider together programs for improvement. Local groups must take responsibility for local situations. Facts must be found, and a plan of action based upon the facts must be determined.

The American Association of University Women, the National Y. W. C. A., and the National Committee on Household Employment have pioneered in work upon this problem. In the last two years two strong unions of household workers have been chartered. It is evident from reports of all efforts to improve the situation that consideration of standards is essential.

In order to get facts and to consider acceptable standards, household workers and their employers must find channels to work together cooperatively for their mutual interest. In the Southern region, where the members of these two groups recognize their interdependence and are accustomed to everyday relationships, there should be great possibilities for getting together to "do something" in the interest of each other.

Proposed Standards

As a basis for knowing what domestic employees expect, the following statement of standards, approved by a widely represented group of workers, is interesting:

We believe that housework is a dignified occupation. The relationship of the employer and employee is entered into for the mutual economic advantage of both, the employee offering her skill in return for wages, the employer offering wages in return for skill. Social relationships, which result from face to face contacts, should not hide this fundamental economic relationship in which bargaining is taking place.

The relationship should be at all times professional, neither party asking favors nor exploiting the other. The independent relationship will be aided if the employee lives out and has a home life of her own. If she wishes to do this, her wish should be respected and given consideration. Whether the employee lives in or out, her private life should be free from supervision by the employer.

A. Working agreement

A definite written agreement between employer and employee should be made at the time of employment. It may be signed or unsigned and should be subject to periodic review to meet changing conditions.

B. Regular duties

Regular duties shall be clearly defined, based on an analysis of the job to be done within the hour limit agreed upon. A high standard of work shall be expected in return for good wages and satisfactory working conditions.

C. Trial period

After the first interview, the work should begin with a trial period of two weeks, after which time either the employer or employee should feel free to end the relationship if it has proved unsatisfactory.

D. Hours

Actual working hours shall be defined as hours of duty during which the worker is not free to follow her own pursuits.

Total working hours shall not exceed 60 hours within the week. A schedule of 48 hours is recommended.

Time on call is that time when the worker is not free to leave house, but may rest or follow her own pursuits, being available for emergencies. Two hours on call shall be equivalent to one hour of working time. Overtime may be adjusted by extra time off or extra payment on rate per hour basis. Frequent overtime should be avoided.

Time off shall include one full day (Sunday, if the employee so wishes) and one half day. At least one other evening shall be free.

E. Vacations and holidays

After one year of service the employee should have two weeks' vacation with pay. The employee should be given four of the following holidays: Easter, Decoration Day, Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's, Labor Day, Mother's Day.

F. Termination of services

Notice of one week or one week's pay shall be given on termination of service by either party.

G. Living conditions

Comfortable living conditions include: 1) adequate food, 2) private room, or one shared by another employee if necessary, 3) access to bath, 4) adequate heat and light, 5) a place to entertain friends.

H. Health examination

An employee should possess a certificate showing that she has had a health examination within a year. The employee shall pay for the examination, except that when she remains for more than six months, the employer shall reimburse her for half the cost of the examination.

I. Wages

For living-in employees, minimum wages for the inexperienced should be $12 a week, for experienced $15.

For employees living out, minimum wages for the inexperienced should by 25c an hour; for the experienced according to the following schedule: 50c an hour for 3 hours or less, 40c an hour from 3 to 30 hours a week, 30c an hour for more than 30 hours a week.

The rates should be revised as costs of living change. They may be varied in accordance with conditions in different types of communities.

Two significant statements deserve the thoughtful consideration of those who decide that something must and can be done about the problem of domestic help:

From the inescapable fact that domestic employment is a human relationship and not a totally economic one arise most of the problems connected with it. From an acceptance of that fact arise certain possibilities of understanding and improving the relations.

Only one-half of the labor problem can be solved by wage and hour adjustment, the remainder lies in human relationships and the needs of the human soul. No addition to wages or subtraction from hours will bring peace until the men and women concerned receive their due as human beings.

Freight Rates

southern producer attempting to build up a larger business on the principles of decreasing unit costs of production finds his goods barred from a wider market in an area where live 51% of the nation's people.

With what results? According to the National Resources Planning Board, the situation freezes the Southern economy in a form which drains raw materials and partly finished products to the northeast, makes the South pay two-way freight on its purchased manufactured goods, and stunts the development of manufacturing within the South. Thus it becomes cheaper to ship the South's zinc ore to the North, have it made into metallic zinc (used to coat northern steel), and shipped back to the South where it will be used for roofs and galvanized iron ware, than it is to convert this zinc ore in the South without the economic loss of cross hauling. So great is this differential that it counteracts the natural Southern advantages of superior power and fuel supply.

What Can Be Done About It?

What can be done about it? The proffered solutions are many. Some authorities say that no conceivable freight rate structure can be free of discrimination. Although this type of discrimination against localities has been unlawful since 1887, the Transportation Act of 1940 recognized its existence and directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to study the elements of the question. Further legislative treatment is not deemed advisable because of the complex issues involved. It is believed that the Interstate Commerce Commission can effect a fair solution working in cooperation with interested groups. However, the acuteness of the problem will be alleviated with the increased development of competitive agencies of transport. Meanwhile, as reported in the last issue of the FRONTIER, a court test case is in the offing.

Notes

According to a survey conducted by CRISIS, magazine of the NAACP, and published in its issue of August, 1944, a total of 4,059 Negro students graduated from colleges and universities during the school year 1943-1944. Of this number, 3,595 received Bachelor degrees, 143 the Master's degree, 9 the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, and 215 professional degrees. Of those who received the Bachelor's degree, 3,510 finished Negro institutions and 85 were graduated from mixed schools. Howard University at Washington, D. C., continues to have the largest enrollment, 2,355; Prairie View in Texas is second with 1,353; and Tennessee State College is third with 1,256.

During the week of August 14, a Scout Leaders' School was held at Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, under the auspices of Region Six, Boy Scouts of America. The purpose of the School was to train for more effective leadership of boyhood through the program of the Boy Scouts of America, with particular emphasis upon the problems of Scouting for Negro boys in the Southeast. Volunteer Scouters and Scouting Executives from several states attended the School. In 1943 a similar school was held with 122 men participating.

Dear Mr. Kennedy: Now that I am back at the office, I should like to send a personal word in addition to the full reply to your letter of August 21 made by my colleague, Dr. Alexander. Since you refer to my opening statement at the conference of March 21, it occurs to me that you might like to have the full statement which I had prepared with a good deal of care, and which I read directly from this manuscript. The statements on the bottom of Page 4 and following I think will indicate that I had no intention of condoning or ignoring conditions in the South. My point -- and I still think it is good stragedy -- is that the country as a whole should devote itself to questions of democracy without being bound or retarded by the peculiar traditions and laws of the South.

In reply to your specific question about membership in the American Council on Race Relations, my understanding is that plans are being made for opening the membership to all who may care to join. Specific arrangements to this end I think will be made at the next meeting of the Council, which is to be held within the next few weeks. May I suggest that you send your application directly to the Council: Mrs. Mary-Jane Grunsfeld, Secretary, American Council on Race Relations, 32 West Randolph Street, Chicago.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

My delay in answering your letter of the twenty-first of August is due to the fact that a large part of the time I have been out of town in connection with the National Democratic campaign. I am sorry.

I have read with very great interest your design for racial democracy and I thank you for sending it to me. This problem of a proper relationship between the races must be solved as a matter of making Democracy work in this country.

It is interesting to learn that Doubleday-Doran have accepted your book "The Four Freedoms Down South" for publication.

I shall always be glad to hear from you.

Sincerely yours,

Claude Pepper

VOL. V SEPTEMBER, 1944 NO. 9

Equalization of Teachers' Salaries in North Carolina*

By N. C. Newbold

Gov. Ehringhaus' Commission

In June, 1934, Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus appointed a Commission of fifty-four persons and a Committee of fifty consultants to be known as the "Governor's Commission for the Study of Problems in the Education of Negroes in North Carolina". Half of these persons were white and half were Negroes. The Commission made the Study and presented its completed report to the Governor on November 26, 1934. This Study included eight points in the public school program. These were prepared upon the request of the Governor by members of the Negro Committee Groups and are as follows:

1. Consolidation and transportation of small schools.
2. Standard high school facilities.
3. Raising the average scholarship level of teachers.
4. Minimum eight months terms for every school.
5. Adequate buildings and equipment.
6. Providing preparation for a more differentiated occupational life.
7. Professional offerings for Negro youth in institutions within the State up to the limit which the State provides.
8. Teachers' salaries.

Recommendations

In the recommendations of that report of ninety-six printed pages are the following:

"1. That the differentials in teachers' salaries between white and Negro teachers, now in existence in North Carolina, be reduced approximately 50 percent in 1935.

"2. That the remaining differentials after 1935 be eliminated as rapidly as possible within a period of three to five years."

This was the first official recommendation in North Carolina that salaries of Negro teachers be made equal to those of white teachers.

It is appropriate to include in this article the following statement which appeared in the published report of the "Governor's Commission for the Study of Problems in the Education of Negroes in North Carolina":

"Changes in school legislation produced problems for every Negro teacher. The North Carolina Negro Teachers' Association, meeting at Goldsboro, November 23, 1927, heard two addresses which dealt with these vital problems, one by President S. G. Atkins and the other by Mr. N. C. Newbold of the State Department of Public Instruction, and as a result authorized the appointment of a committee of twenty-five from the membership of the Association to study problems involved in: (a) Teachers' salaries; (b) Length of school term; (c) Buildings and equipment. The report of this committee was necessarily limited in scope and findings because of the lack of availability of data. The report was presented to the Association in March, 1929."

Negro Teachers' Association

It will be both proper and historical to state that the representative of the State Department of Education recommended and urged that the members of the Negro Teachers' Association undertake the studies of their own schools. After the meeting, some Negroes said: "What can we do under existing conditions that would influence the State officials and the Legislature?" That was a logical question seventeen years ago. Such a question would not be raised in 1944. The Association, now with more than 5,850 paid members, has a Legislative Committee which is invited to appear before the State Board of Education, the Budget Bureau, and Legislative Committees which deal with public education, appropriations, and finance.

At the fall meeting (1929) of the Association, a steering committee was authorized. It was this steering committee, together with a representative of the State Department of Public Instruction, who went to the Governor, April 6, 1933, and requested the appointment of a commission "to study the State's program for Negro Education".

In his message to the Legislature on January 10, 1935, Governor Ehringhaus made the following statement: "I have myself also caused to be made a study of conditions peculiarly applicable to the Negro Schools in North Carolina, and the results of this study will be available for your consideration. We should be careful to see that justice is done our Negro citizenship."

Since that time, the matter of equal salaries for white and Negro public school teachers has been kept alive in North Carolina.

Gov. Hoey's Commission

On March 10, 1937, the Legislature passed a resolution authorizing Governor Clyde R. Hoey to appoint a "Commission to Study Public Schools and Colleges for Colored People in North Carolina," the members of the Commission to be represented by two from the Senate and three from the House of Representatives. Governor Hoey appointed these persons and the study was begun promptly. This study was completed in 1938. The Report and Recommendations are included in a printed bulletin of 62 pages. In this report the members of the Commission recommended, among other items, that the State appropriate annually approximately $250,000 to be used in the reduction of the differential between white and Negro teachers' salaries.

The Legislature of 1939, whose members had this report before them, made sufficient funds available for a beginning in the reduction plan. Beginning in 1938, the monthly salaries paid teachers from state funds have grown about as follows:

YEAR	WHITE	NEGRO
1938-1939	$133	$100
1939-1940	$133	$105
1940-1941	$133	$110
1941-1942	$133	$115
1942-1943	$133	$120
1943-1944	$133	$125

During each of these years provision was made by the Legislature for approximately $250,000 to apply on the reduction of the differential.

Equalization in 1944-45

On June 8, 1944, Governor J. Melville Broughton appeared before the members of the State Board of Education and recommended that the balance of the differen-

Editorial

When rumors of a threatened race riot engulfed a Southern city last year a few citizens met with city and county officials to discuss ways and means for improving conditions which were felt to give cause for rioting. Two important facts were gleaned from the lengthy discussion which attended the planning. First, there was a great distrust of the so-called "race relations crowd," the do-gooders, those who act, as Everett Clinchy has said, "all in the name of God." Second, the official fathers were quite unmoved by the citizens' complaint of rumors and what they might do to otherwise quiescent community relationships. This led us to ponder why a stigma is attached to working with what we call lost causes? Why do we continue to play down the importance of common talk and unauthenticated stories in human relations?

Though no brief comment can provide a full answer to these questions it is possible to point out some of the symptoms that indicate the ailment involved. First, there is no more unpopular "cause" in the South than that of human or race relations. Many people believe that these relations should be more equitable but only a few dare go out and work for them. Since there is little material gain for the person who does give his heart and hand to such a cause, most of us can see no earthly reason why one would make himself a martyr. As one public official said, "Those folks just get in my hair and make me uncomfortable." Which is all to the good, as is borne out by the numbers of people who are joining the ranks of agencies and movements working for social betterment.

However, one distinct challenge is not fully met. The official continues: "Nine times out of ten they don't know what they are talking about. They get all worked up about something and come to you with a tear-soaked handkerchief in one hand, a Bible in the other, and sob stories on their lips. That kind just irritates you. I don't want to be in office when these people start learning how government is run and the facts as they really are. We'll have to do something then."

This brings us to this matter of rumor, which distinctly is not facts as they really are. The masses of people never really know the facts of their living, the facts behind their governments, their jobs, their health. Their economic, political and social lives operate, in the main, on what they hear indirectly, on what they sense from newspaper stories and radio commentaries. Rumor reigns in the South because we have not been willing to discover and propagate fact, which is both stranger and stronger than the fanciful fabric of regional, racial and economic prejudices we weave about ourselves. We need more do-gooders who possess fact and tact. We need more people who know how to squelch rumor with the truths of Southern life.

Southern Comment

"Hooliganism has no place in race relations in Mobile. Members of neither race can justify themselves in malicious unprovoked actions of aggression against the other.

"This has always been a community in which the races got along peaceably together, each understanding and adhering to the principles of Southern custom and preference. It intends to remain such a community. Let no hot-headed racial bigot, black or white, home-grown or in-migrant, doubt that if he expects to live long in Mobile without being separated from society by a set of bars."—The Mobile Register, August 12.

"The question of whether Negro teachers should receive the same pay as white teachers, where the qualifications are the same and the responsibility similar, is a matter that South Carolina must meet. And the best solution is to take the fair course, which is to equalize the compensation where on merit it is justified."—Columbia State, August 11.

"To argue that the Negro is better off in one section of the country than in another is exceedingly silly and beside the point, as anyone who desires to be honest with himself must admit that the Negro isn't very well off wherever he is. . . . But the task (of solving the problem) calls for a maximum of intelligence and understanding and a minimum of emotion and rabble rousing, among whites and blacks alike."—Bob McCracken in "The Crow's Nest," Corpus Christi Caller-Times, August 20.

"We have by our own action abolished the poll tax as a qualification for voting, we have without compulsion or court order equalized the pay of white and colored teachers, we have established for our Negro citizens a great system of public schools and a program of higher education and vocational training unequalled in the Nation.

"We have had no lynching in over 20 years and no race riot in over 40 years. In good faith, in a spirit of genuine friendliness and in spite of outside agitators, we are solving our race problems on a basis of mutual understanding and economic justice."—Radio address of Governor J. M. Broughton of North Carolina, Raleigh, August 7.

On Racial Discrimination

(The Smithfield, N. C., Herald, July 28, 1944)

There are Southern politicians who thrive on their outspoken advocacy of white supremacy because there is deep-rooted racial prejudice among many rank-and-file Southern citizens.

These politicians were described as "boiling mad" when the Democrats inserted the following plank in their platform adopted at the Chicago convention last week: "We believe that racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our Constitution. Congress should exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights."

If other sections of the nation obtain the impression that all the South is hostile to this plank of the platform, they have a wrong impression, because an increasingly large number of forward-looking Southerners know full well that Vice President Henry Wallace spoke the truth in his speech at the Democratic convention when he stated that racial discrimination in America is on the way out and they not only recognize the truth of the statement but they believe it to be their duty to exert their influence toward a hastening of the day when there will be no racial discrimination.

The racial equality plank adopted by the Democrats is but a reiteration of rights already guaranteed by the Constitution. The reiteration is necessary because there are politicians and selfish interest groups always seeking to circumvent the Constitution to deny Negroes and other race minorities in the United States opportunities for development and abundant living.

Forward-looking citizens of the South and of the nation do not oppose racial discrimination, however, merely because it is forbidden by the Constitution, but because it is eternally wrong and inconsistent with Christian principles which, after all, are the foundation stones of democracy.

The oft-predicted racial war in America will not materialize if the majority race honestly seeks to wipe out discrimination against the minority race. It is not a question of white supremacy or black supremacy—it is merely a question of whether a racial minority has "the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our Constitution."

An affirmative answer to that question will be both Christian and democratic—in keeping with the best traditions of American governmental progress. A negative answer will be in keeping with the methods of Hitler and the Nazi party.

The American Missionary Association Institute of Race Relations

By Charles S. Johnson
Fisk University

A group of one hundred thirty-seven Negro and white community leaders met at the Fisk University Department of Social Sciences, during the month of July, for three weeks of intensive study of current problems in race relations. Organized as the initial Institute of Race Relations of the Race Relations Division of the American Missionary Association, the meeting represented perhaps the first effort of its kind ever to be held in the South. As a part of the regular program of the Race Relations Division of the Association, the institute offered an intensive and practical course of study of the problems and methods of dealing with racial situations. Growing out of the heightened racial tensions in many areas of the North and South affected by war migrations and the complication of the major social problems of these areas by the factor of race, the institute was a response to the expressed needs of workers and community leaders all over the country for information and guidance.

Membership

Of the total membership of one hundred thirty-seven registrants, there were fifty-five Negro members, eighty-one whites and one Japanese. Representation came from thirty-one states and the District of Columbia, covering a geographical range from California in the West, to Texas in the South, and New Hampshire in the North and East. These were persons of mature experience, involved more or less directly with problems of race relations as matters of practical and immediate concern in daily work. Among the group, forty-seven persons were from northern areas, while ninety were individuals working and living in the South. The majority of registrants were engaged in social, medical, public health and religious work; a fourth were teachers, educators and students, and slightly less than a fifth were race relations specialists, community workers and journalists.

Organizations and individuals of national importance were represented in the institute membership, in addition to scores of local groups and organizations.

Course of Study

The curriculum for the institute centered around four general interest fields: (1) Race and Racial Theories, including anthropological and psychological aspects of race and race relations, and comparative race relations throughout the world; (2) Racial Aspects of Social Problems, covering racial tension areas in the United States, problems of racial adjustment and integration in industry, labor, housing, educational institutions and the church, social planning for minorities in the framework of city planning, and post-war problems of readjustment; (3) Methods, Techniques and Community Planning—a review and analysis of methods and practices in dealing with racial situations; and (4) The Role of Personal Religion in Human Relations.

There were eighty-seven lecture and discussion sessions during the twenty-one day institute. The resident faculty, composed of thirty-six lecturers and consultants, provided a valuable source of guidance, information and stimulation. Some of the Nation's most informed leaders were in this group.

Discussion Findings

It is not possible here even to highlight adequately the exhaustive discussion and lecture sessions, although it is useful to outline some of the methods and techniques suggested for changing existing patterns of race relations. The following methods were mentioned:

(1) The organization of private and official committees for both emergency and long-range planning and action programs.

(2) Extension of labor organization membership, training in labor methods and disciplines and identification of racial interests with those of labor.

(3) Encouragement of Negro migration from solid clusters in the South to small towns and cities of the North and West.

(4) Intensive programs of adult education among the culturally isolated Negro communities, particularly in cities, such education to include the inculcation of expected modes of urban behavior.

(5) Programs of inter-cultural education. Special days, weeks, or projects devoted to the contributions of minority groups are relatively easy but only satisfactory as a temporary expedient. Successful intercultural education should be interwoven throughout the school curriculum, emphasizing the part played by all groups, rather than stressing a particular minority.

(6) Intelligent use of the Negro vote.

(7) Utilization, as educational material for employers, of the successful industrial experiences of Negro workers.

(8) Extension of areas of personal contacts and relations.

(9) Skillful use of the press, motion pictures and radio to recondition public attitudes.

(10) Utilization of the social function of the church.

(11) In the South where segregation laws exist, insistence upon exact equalization can either improve facilities manyfold, or deteriorate segregation because of the unsupportable cost of maintaining dual institutions.

(12) Use of emotional media such as music and art in the creation of favorably-toned situations in which hostilities disappear.

(13) Cooperative self-help projects as illustrated in the Flanner House urban experiment (Indianapolis) and the rural cooperatives in North Carolina and Georgia.

(14) Planned education of children in the school and family in respect for human personalities across the superficial barriers of race and class.

(15) Use of pressure groups and pressure tactics, properly timed and intelligently executed.

(16) A work camp program of the type developed by the Friends Service Committee for the employment of non-violent solutions of social and economic conflicts and for the development of intelligent social attitudes for participation in community life.

(17) Abolition of segregation in the federal government, which has vast contacts and establishments throughout the country. With the proper application of political pressure it should be possible to break down the pattern of segregation in federal offices and services.

(18) Abolition of segregation in the church. The churches are uncomfortable about their racial attitudes. It should be possible in many cases to establish the principle that churches ought to be places in which practices are more Christian and democratic than outside them. Also, the churches run many institutions such as hospitals and schools. The policies of these institutions could well be brought in line with the philosophy of human brotherhood.

Conclusion

A final word might be given as to programs of race relations generally. It was suggested directly and indirectly that a program or activity for better race relations might be successful to the extent that it is able to make whites and Negroes feel, with respect to each other, more like "we" and less like "they."

It is important, but not enough, to attempt to modify behavior of Negroes by asking them to behave more circumspectly. Likewise with efforts to change the opinions of white people by showing them movies, pictures and books of Negroes, as Negroes who have achieved success in one field of endeavor or another. To demonstrate that Negroes can achieve as much as whites is probably not alone going to change the opinions of persons who still feel that they belong to one group and Negroes belong to another.

It would in general be useful to consider each device employed in race relations carefully in the light of two questions: Will the doing of it engender a feeling of solidarity in the whites and Negroes who are collaborating in it? Will the results contribute to or distract from the separateness of these two groups in our American population?

Equalization of Teachers' Salaries

tial as between the salaries indicated above should be removed beginning July 1, 1944, so that the salaries of Negro teachers and white teachers, so fas as state funds are concerned, would be identical thereafter. The State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Dr. Clyde A. Erwin, who is a member of the Board, offered a motion that the recommendation of the Governor be approved. This motion was carried by unanimous vote. In the budget for the school session 1944-1945, there was an allotment of approximately $250,000, which lacked only about $201,000 of being sufficient to eliminate all of the differential in 1944-1945. This difference was now provided, making the total for removal of the differential about $451,000 for 1944-1945.

The Financial Cost

While the statements above are both factual and historical, they do not tell the whole story, viz: What has it cost North Carolina in actual money to bring the salaries of Negro teachers and principals up to equality with white teachers and principals in all categories? This story is as follows:

1. In 1938-1939 the State School Commission allotted $118,000 to bring the maximum "A" grade Negro teacher's salary up from $96 to $100 per month.

2. Following that action of the Commission, the State Legislature has appropriated sums for reducing the differential as follows:

1939-1940	$250,000
1940-1941	500,000
1941-1942	750,000
1942-1943	1,000,000
1943-1944	1,281,250
1944-1945	1,769,657
GRAND TOTAL	$5,550,907

3. The further amount needed in keeping with Governor Broughton's recommendation as above, which was made available by the State Board of Education on June 8, 1944, was $201,000. This is included in the amount given for 1944-1945 above. However, the above Grand Total does not include the $118,000 listed under "1" above.

A casual glance at the figures for the six years listed above may not be sufficiently explanatory. Briefly, they mean that after the 1939-1940 initial legislative appropriation of $250,000 it required about that sum for each succeeding year plus the total cost for the preceding year; that is, until the current year, when the total sum for 1944-1945 includes also the $201,000 mentioned above.

The action of the State Board of Education, which body approved the Governor's recommendation, therefore places public school teachers' salaries, white and Negro, on an absolute equality basis in North Carolina, beginning July 1, 1944.

Here And There In The South

Southern Negro Youth

Twenty-odd Negro youth, a young white Southerner, and a young Japanese-American attended a two-week seminar conducted by the Southern Negro Youth Congress at the Atlanta University School of Social Work this summer. It was an amazingly successful seminar of young people who earnestly sought an understanding of the social problems facing youth of this generation.

The seminar said, "The valley of Negro rights has been flooded by the river of white supremacy. This is our fight to win the fruits of true democracy.

"We, as Negro youth, shall be crusaders for political justice, and securing our right of suffrage; educating the people in current and vital issues and stimulating the interest of our people. We shall try to promote good will and understanding among the races of our country and the world, thereby strengthening our great democracy and establishing economic freedom.

"We Negro youth will develop race-consciousness and instill in ourselves the value of self-confidence, dependability, self-determination, reliability. We will have an interest in personal appearance, personal integrity and the development of individual abilities and talents."

Miami

On Friday, September 1, and after a period of intensive training, five Negro men fully equipped with badges, nightsticks, guns, flashlights and authority became full-fledged members of the Miami, Florida, police force. The policemen were assigned to patrol the Washington Heights downtown section of the Florida city.

Another epochal move was made in Miami in late August when six white public officials, two county commissioners, two city commissioners, the Director of Public Safety and the Sheriff, together with six Negro citizens formed a committee "to do something." Said County Commissioner Grandon, "We don't want to sit around and talk. We want action and results. We have been talking about some of these problems for a long time. It's time now to do something."

The committee dug in on several things almost immediately—housing, health, transportation facilities, bathing beaches and schools. They were not fooling.

The Army

Our army included 698,911 Negroes on June 30, 1944. Of this number 5,957 were commissioned officers at all ranks from 2nd Lieutenant to Brigadier General. In the infantry were 44,869 soldiers. The artillery had 38,517, the engineers 128,789, the air forces 79,027. The remaining 407,709 were in other branches of the service.

The total number of Negroes in the army is greater than was the combined male population of Atlanta, Birmingham, Houston and New Orleans in 1940.

Segregation

Last month a War Department order directed all army post commanders to end the segregation of races with respect to the use of certain facilities on their posts. This official segregation, which had aggravated discriminatory practices, was terminated immediately at some Southern posts and belatedly at others. All in all, the reaction in the South was less violent than had been expected. However, the segregation-antisegregation lines of thought remained taut.

The Governor of Alabama wired President Roosevelt: "I protest such an order which violates a State-wide practice and belief and aggravates rather than helps. . . . It breaks down an essential principle of race relationship in the South and grievously handicaps those of us who are trying to bring about a better relationship between the two races and an improvement of both on equal bases."

The Birmingham Baptist Ministers Conference, composed of 250 Negro ministers representing approximately 50,000 Baptists in the city, took this stand:

"1. The Negroes of Alabama have been law-abiding citizens, having done our part both as civilians and as soldiers as far as we have been allowed. We realize that segregation takes away from the Negro his constitutional rights.

"2. Because of segregation, the Negro has been kept out of the best institutions and technical schools, thereby impairing his preparation for the armed forces of the country.

"3. As Negroes we believe in our democratic form of government, and we believe that true democracy should work throughout America for all people, and therefore, we emphatically deny the statement made by anybody, anywhere, at any time, that we are satisfied with the evils of segregation."

Piney Woods

The Piney Woods Country Life School is loated in Piney Woods, Mississippi. It is one of those realistic, down-to-earth schools that meets the needs of people who live in the country areas of the South. Piney Woods has problems that are not so usual these days. First, it is located in Rankin County where there is no public library for Negroes, nor is there a library in either of the adjoining counties of Simpson and Smith. The 8,326 colored children in that region must rely upon the books available at Piney Woods School.

But Piney Woods has no library building. Many of its books are kept in boxes simply because there is no place for stacking them, no place where the children of those three counties and their adult friends and relatives can come to read them. Piney Woods wants to change that situation, as it has helped to change so many others in the past.

You can help them build a library by sending contributions of one dollar or more to the Piney Woods Library Fund, Piney Woods Country Life School, Piney Woods, Mississippi. That dollar will really go a long way.

No. 1 For Members of the Southern Regional Council Nov. 10, 1944

ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of members of the SRC was postponed in the hope that we could arrange for two public evening sessions at which we could present speakers who could focus public attention on the problems of the South with special reference to the post-war period. When it became apparent that the desired speakers would not make any commitments until after the presidential election, it was necessary to go ahead and set a date for the annual meeting. By vote of the Executive Committee, the meeting will be held on Wednesday, December 6. There is still a possibility, now that the election is behind us, that a prominent liberal leader will consent to speak on the evening of December 5 or 6.

The meeting of SRC members will be held at Atlanta University at 10:30 A. M., December 6. The Board of Directors will meet immediately after the member meeting. This may be in the afternoon or evening of December 6, or even on the morning of December 7, depending on the time of adjournment of the member meeting.

The Executive Committee and the standing committees will be called for December 5. If you are a member of any of these committees, please look out for the announcement of committee schedules and make your plans to attend.

OUR NEW QUARTERS

The Commission on Interracial Cooperation reduced its staff during the last few years of its existence and gave up some of its rooms. When the Council took over the Commission quarters at 710 Standard Building, it was soon faced with the problem of space. It was impossible to get any additional room in Standard Building. In fact, the Southern Area Council of the Y. M. C. A., from whom we sub-rented, was pressing us to give up more space to their own expanding needs.

There was no choice but to look for new quarters. And what a job! Atlanta was full of government and private agencies looking for office space. When the situation seemed almost hopeless, Bishop Arthur J. Moore came to our rescue. The Wesley Memorial Building, owned by the North Georgia Jurisdiction of the Methodist Church, had a lot of space on its fourth floor which was being remodeled to house the Bishop's offices and other church activities. Through the kindness of the Bishop and the Building Committee, the Council was able to secure space in Wesley Memorial Building.

It was necessary to build partitions, to paint, put in floor covering, install light fixtures, etc., but after weeks of planning and construction we finally moved to our new quarters during the week of October 16.

We have twice our previous floor space for less rent, and we hope that our space problem is solved for several years.

Be sure to visit our new quarters when you are in Atlanta: Room 432 at 63 Auburn Avenue. Wesley Memorial Building is located at the corner of Auburn and Ivy. Enter on Auburn Avenue at the corner of the building farthest from Ivy and take the elevator to the fourth floor.

THE STAFF Have you tried lately to employ someone with very special qualifications? It isn't easy to find 'em, is it? Most of the bright young people of the sort we should like to have are either in the Service or in jobs which they are reluctant to leave.

On June 1 we obtained the services of Miss Margaret L. Fisher, formerly with the War Manpower Commission, to work in public relations. Miss Fisher resigned on November 1 to work with another agency. We are now on the trail of a publicity and editorial man, as well as two persons who can work actively in the field with state and local agencies and who can build up our financial support within the South. Here's hoping that we can present one or more new staff members at the annual meeting.

FINANCES It looks as if we shall just about break even on our 1944 budget. We are not particularly proud of this, because if we could have obtained the personnel we wanted, we should be glad to face a sizeable deficit.

Please bear in mind that a budget of about $38,000 is all right for an exploratory and planning year with a small staff, but if this Council is going to serve the South as it should, it must have a much broader financial base. We need at least $75,000 a year for the next three years.

MEMBERSHIP Although we have not had the facilities for putting on an intensive membership campaign, Council membership has grown to more than 400. More than one-third of these members have made contributions ranging from $1.00 to $25.00. The present dues of $1.00 a year are barely sufficient to pay the cost of carrying a member. Should these dues be raised? This question should receive your attention at the annual meeting.

COORDINATION CONFERENCE Your Executive Director will go to Washington on November 22 to attend a conference called by the American Council on Race Relations for the purpose of working out a division of labor and a better coordination of the work of the major agencies which are interested in race relations.

DEMOBILIZATION CONFERENCE The Executive Directors are glad to have had a part in the planning and execution of a conference on the theme of "Demobilization Challenges the Church" which was held in Atlanta on November 1 and 2. The personnel at the conference included representatives of numerous religious and social agencies in several Southeastern states. After addresses by Dr. Russell H. Stafford, of Old South Church, Boston, and Dr. W. A. Smart of Emory University the conference divided into four work shop groups to discuss problems of the post war period: (1) Full employment, (2) Children and Youth, (3) The Churches' Ministry to the Family, (4) Group Tensions. The Council is distributing the findings of the work shop groups. We shall be glad to send copies on request.

FUTURE CONFERENCES — We hope, the budget permitting, to sponsor the following conferences early in 1945: (1) a conference of the leaders of women's groups in the South in the interest of constructive social action, (2) a conference of the heads of state interracial agencies for the purpose of coordinating the program and strategy of the SRC and the state organizations, (3) a conference of Fellows of the SRC.

PROPOSED PAMPHLETS — We want to issue a series of solid and authoritative pamphlets on various Southern problems. The list includes such subjects as The Southern People, Politics and Good Government, The Poll Tax, The Police and Race Relations, The Equalization of Educational Opportunities, Full Employment, Domestic Service, Freight Rates, Small Loans, and Sermons for Southerners.

Some of these pamphlets will be produced by our own staff, others by the best authorities we can get. We have already negotiated with certain experts and we have tentative commitments for the writing of several pamphlets.

STATE INTERRACIAL GROUPS — Because of the merging of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation with the SRC and the inability of the SRC at present to continue financial assistance to the state interracial groups, we have faced the problems of working out anew a satisfactory working relationship with these organizations. We have attended meetings of the state groups in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia, and we feel that we have made some progress.

Since SRC differs from the Commission in structure and in its broad membership, the problem of working out some direct structural relationship with state groups is not easy. However, we have two definite plans which are being proposed to the state interracial organizations. In Plan I the state group would resolve itself into a state division of the SRC; that is, all SRC members living in that particular state would constitute the state division. In Plan II the state group would become an affiliate of SRC in a somewhat informal sense. One state organization has already expressed a readiness to adopt Plan I.

CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTEES — From time to time there arise cases which SRC might well handle for the protection of the civil rights of citizens in the region. The central staff cannot undertake to investigate personally all such cases. Therefore we should like to proceed to the establishment of Civil Rights Committees in all our thirteen states. Each committee would be composed of five Council members and a legal advisor who may or may not be a member of the Council, and the duty of the Committees would be to advise the Executive Directors as to what action the Council should take in cases involving civil rights.

Dear Dr. Odum:

The accompanying copy of a letter to Dr. Johnson is self-explanatory. I have not easily brought myself to the writing of it, and have done so only after an unsuccessful effort to reason myself out of the responsibility.

Since the call for the meeting to which I have referred would come from the President of the Council, let me repeat to you my request that a meeting of the Board be held prior to the Council meeting on December 6.

Sincerely yours,

Josephine Wilkins

Dear Guy:

The accompanying letter is written in a spirit of high purpose, to meet what appears to me to be a responsibility which I cannot by-pass, though I should like to.

In sending a copy of the letter to Dr. Odum, I have repeated the request for the meeting to which I refer, realizing that its call would come from him as President of the Council.

Sincerely,

Josephine Wilkins

Dr. Guy B. Johnson, Executive Director
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Dr. Johnson:

The Bulletin of November 10 for members of the Southern Regional Council is well done, and the serial number appearing on it seems to indicate that the issue inaugurates a regular service to members which I would wholeheartedly commend.

I regret however to learn from the Bulletin, and from notice received subsequently, that no provision is being made for a meeting of the Board of Directors prior to the forthcoming meeting of the Council. Unless such a meeting is held, the Board will manifestly have no opportunity to submit proposals and recommendations to the Council, nor will it be in position to offer the leadership expected from such an elected body at a general meeting of members.

I am aware that our By-Laws require only a post-Council meeting of the Board, and that they do not call for the customary meeting of an elected board before a general meeting of members. You will recall my speaking of this when I came over to talk with you before accepting membership on the Executive Committee. But after all we adopted the By-Laws through merely hearing them read at the charter meeting. I was under the impression that you promptly recognized that without a Board meeting prior to each Council meeting we could not conduct a membership organization with any semblance of democratic procedure. I remember we discussed the fact that under Article IV, Sections 3 and 4, dealing with meetings of the Board, the situation could be readily met until the By-Laws were amended.

Perhaps the forthcoming meeting of the Council is contemplated primarily as a meeting to hear reports, but even if this is the case there is still the matter of its acting upon a proposed program and a proposed budget for the coming year. From whom will these proposals come? I note there is to be a meeting of the Executive Committee prior to that of the Council. Still this group is only a committee of the Board with the responsibility of functioning between meetings of the latter body. Would it not be unusual procedure to have proposals come from the Executive Committee to the Council when the Board members themselves are due in Atlanta?

In meetings thus far held by the Council, the practices of business organizations and universities have been cited several times in support of procedures advocated for the Council. But we are conducting neither a business nor a university: we are carrying on a membership organization. And as long as we represent ourselves as a membership organization, we cannot too often remind ourselves, it seems to me, that in such an organization authority rests in the members; that the Board of Directors consists of their elected representatives; that the Board's Executive Committee bears this responsibility between meetings of the Board itself; and that the Administrative Staff functions only under the authority granted to it and gives leadership by means of proposals and recommendations to the Board and its Executive Committee and through them to the general membership.

Referring again to my conversation with you in your office before I accepted appointment on the Executive Committee, you will recall my asking whether you contemplated this committee as a working one, assuming the customary responsibilities of such a group, or whether you thought of it as merely a paper committee. You assured me that it was to be a functioning committee, and it was with this understanding that I accepted membership. The minutes of the initial meeting of the Executive Committee, held on March 22, state:

> "After discussion, it was suggested that the Committee meet once a month, or at least every two months, until the annual meeting in October. The fourth Wednesday in each month was tentatively agreed upon as the regular date until October."

No further meetings of this group have been held, with the exception of the one prior to the meeting of the Board on April 28, and no communication regarding their omission has been received by the members.

As a member of the Executive Committee as well as of the Board of Directors, I ask that a pre-Council meeting of the Board be held, in order that the Board may consider the agenda for the Council meeting on December 6 and that it may have the opportunity to make proposals and recommendations to the members when they come together on that day. Call for such a meeting might be issued any time through November 25 and still conform to the advance notice required in our By-Laws. If time does not permit pre-Council meetings of both the Executive Committee and the Board, I ask that the time already allotted to the Executive Committee be given over to a meeting of the Board.

I am prompted to make this request by my interest in the Southern Regional Council. For many months I have been troubled by our seeming disregard of the necessary rules of democratic procedure.

Sincerely yours,

Josephine Wilkins

Easing Our Inter-Regional Tensions

By Emeric Kurtagh
(Head Resident, Kingsley House, New Orleans)

Signs of Tension

There are today signs of an increasing tension between the two major regions of our country—North and South. Perhaps it might be more accurate to describe this tension as one between two cultural patterns or two sets of folkways rather than between two geographic areas.

This tension has serious implications affecting our unity as a nation now at war and later in the postwar period. Conflicts have arisen in different parts of the country—North as well as South. If the present tensions are permitted to continue, we may see more outbreaks of disunity and violence.

For the purposes of the present discussions, one might ignore the violent outbreaks that occurred in Detroit, Beaumont, Mobile, and New York, and consider rather the steady and subtle undercurrent of tension that is present wherever conflicting folkways and cultural patterns meet. The exigencies of war have enlarged tremendously the area in which there is an uncontrolled interplay of these different folkways and have thereby increased the areas of potential conflict.

The war has presented us with the problem of migration on an unparalleled scale. Millions of our military personnel are being shifted around the country, often followed by their wives and families. War workers move in tremendous numbers between far off places. Groups of teachers, social workers, nurses, and other professional workers, numerically small but important, are also part of this migration.

The unprecedented migration between regions has great potentialities for good or for evil. Every in-migrant is an unofficial ambassador of good will or ill will, as the case may be. This twentieth century movement of masses of which he is a part may lead to a greater understanding between our regions and a greater unity of our country as a nation. Or it may lead to a sharpening of differences and a period of intolerance and disunity. No one can know which one of these extreme outcomes, if either, will prevail, but it might be very valuable for groups who believe in educational programs designed to increase inter-regional understanding and to interpret our conflicting folkways. Such programs of education might well affect the eventual outcome of this problem.

*Reprinted by permission from the Adult Education Journal, October, 1944.

Causes of Tension

Some of the causes of friction and tension between our regions, especially between the North and South, are: 1) attitudes toward the Negro: segregation, discrimination, withholding of political and civil rights, denial of economic and educational opportunities; 2) attitudes of the Negro toward segregation, discrimination, etc.; 3) attitudes toward the family, education, church, class, place of women; 4) attitudes toward work and work habits, planning, invention, originality; 5) attitudes toward government, law, unwritten law, justice, politics. This list could be extended considerably, but it will suffice to show the wide range of divergent attitudes and folkways with which we are dealing.

Regional Handbooks

It is perfectly understandable that exposure to the folkways of the South will produce dismay and antagonism among newcomers from other parts of the country. But almost any person, once given an opportunity to understand the background of southern ways, the whys and wherefores of southern behavior, will develop a more effective relationship to the South. Sometimes I wonder if our war leadership—which had the foresight to develop special pamphlets for our servicemen going abroad, instructing them in the ways of England, North Africa, or Australia—could develop similar materials for the use of our troops going South. Civilians on the move also might well use some similar handbooks.

Bringing about a better understanding between our two major regions would call for educational statesmanship on a giant scale. And it should be remembered that this job of interpretation ought to cut both ways: explaining the South to the North and the North to the South.

Community Leadership

There is another and somewhat more limited problem: the problem of leadership in southern communities or other communities where the job of day-to-day leadership has to be performed against a backdrop of tenseness and prejudice. There are many professional workers in southern cities who come from other parts of the country. They represent what might be called "imported" leadership. The vast majority of these voluntary emigres are sincerely enthusiastic about the vast potentialities of the Southland and its significant place in the future of America. Temporary or permanent residents of the South, they are eager to contribute to the healthy growth of these regions and to their integration with the rest of the country.

Workers' Dilemma

In the peculiar position they occup in their respective communities, these workers are often beset with doubts and perplexities. They ask themselves such questions as these: Can I do a good job as a specialist in my field without actively taking sides in general community problems? What should be my role in relation to the controversial issues of my community? How far can I go in cultivating positive and accepting attitudes toward my community and its folkways without actually strengthening and confirming them? How can I stay on the side of the line beyond which the habit of making concessions may become an occupational disease?

In trying to find a level which affords both personal satisfaction and professional effectiveness, leadership has a difficult road to travel. At the one extreme are those who withdraw to an attitude of isolationism. At the other extreme are those who practice mimicry to the point where they identify themselves completely with their new community, including its most extreme folkways. And in between are the great majority of workers making accommodations of one kind or another.

Leadership Training

There are several national agencies, public and private, which select and appoint workers for important posts in the South. In most cases, such workers are not given any special preparation to meet the peculiar problems and tensions of the South. Of course there is always the opportunity to learn by the method of trial and error, the hard way. But there are many more who experience failure or frustration. It seems to me that important gains could be made by a plan that would provide special preparation and training for workers who are to function in south-

To attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region.

Editorial

The "Sharecroppers Country"

The National Sharecroppers Fund was established in 1943 in an effort to help the agricultural workers, tenant farmers, and sharecroppers of the South through acquainting the nation with the problems of the nine million people directly affected by the marginal nature of southern agriculture and through supporting those movements working toward the economic and social emancipation of these agricultural workers. The "Magna Charta for Southern Agriculture" published elsewhere in this issue is the Fund's statement of objectives for attacking the "sharecropper system" at its roots while providing land for the returning landless soldier. In attaining these objectives NSF hopes to do more than deal fairly with the returned soldier, as is contemplated by the "GI Bill of Rights." It hopes to erase a great historic blot upon the economic record of American democracy.

The increasing landlessness of the Southern rural population has been greatly accelerated by the War. State governments and chambers of commerce have shown great concern over the impending disaster that awaits a region so dependent upon the soil for its survival. Some of these agencies are advocating and advancing plans for ameliorating these conditions, which plans, along with the "Magna Charta," should invite constructive thought and action.

But over and above the problems of agricultural commodities and infertile soil are the pressing problems of people in the region who are being disinherited by the demands of war, the technological changes, and the social pressures of poverty, illiteracy, race, and coercion. It is fairly certain that all of the farm hands who went to the wars will return to farm under the pre-war system of agricultural insufficiency. It is to be doubted that the rural workers who moved down to the coastal cities of the South to build ships and perform day laboring tasks will return to the soil from which they stemmed. And if the protests similar to one appearing in the Charlotte, North Carolina, Observer continue, it is evident that the old system of racial exploitation in agriculture will receive a severe shaking. The protest was a simple one. The Negro schools of Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, were closed for cotton picking. The white schools were not closed. The correspondent stated, "I feel that all of us should help in every possible way to relieve the situation for the benefit of all concerned, but should it be one-sided?"

The needed reformation in southern agriculture must not be one-sided. Owners, managers, and tenants, government, banker, and operator, whites and Negroes, all have a tremendous stake in this situation. The only constructive, effective answer is to be found in ways that develop, conserve and use to the fullest the human and natural resources of the region. We need not continue a "grapes of wrath" type of agriculture. We need not continue breeding a region of landless farmers.

The Cotton Textile Workers

They work at a bewildering variety of jobs. They are doffers, slubber tenders, rovers, spinners, slashers, tie-in-girls, weavers, loomfixers, loop cutters, sweepers, bleachers, dyers, and a hundred other familiar things.

Basically, however, they do two things, today as two thousand years ago. They spin the cotton fibres into thread, and they weave the thread into cloth.

Four out of five of them live and work in the South, the rest being mostly in New England.

The nationality pattern is tremendously variegated. In New England, the French Canadians are most numerous, filling the bulk of the jobs, with a top layer of Yankees and Scotch-English holding down the more skilled jobs by virtue of having got in on the ground floor in the last century. Other nationalities crop up thickly in certain places: Poles in Massachusetts and Connecticut; Portugese in New Bedford and Fall River; Italians in Utica, N. Y., and throughout Rhode Island. In the South, this variety yields to perhaps the most complete homogeneity of any major group of working people in the country. Almost all the Southern textile workers are old-line Americans from our last great reservoir of pure Anglo-Saxon stock—the hill districts of the Southeast Piedmont. There are at present only a handful of Negroes in the Southern mills, nearly all of them in low-paid custodial jobs.

Whatever their nationality, all of them, Northerners and Southerners alike, live and work in the two classic "depressed areas" of the United States: the have-seen-better-days New England manufacturing towns, and the not-quite-yet-developed industrial areas of the South. It is also significant that most of them are not to be found in the big metropolitan centers of these regions, but in the "back country" or in smaller cities which tend to be self-contained communities where the textile mills are the only important industrial enterprise.—"The Story of the Cotton Textile Workers." Textile Workers Union of America. 1944.

A Magna Charta for Southern Agriculture*

WE PROPOSE that every veteran of the armed services who shall have been discharged under conditions other than dishonorable shall have the right, subject to reasonable tests as to his ability and experience as a farmer, to government aid in securing ownership of a fairly-valued, "family size" farm. The size of such farm will vary in different localities, according to the conditions of the soil, crops, and climate, but in every case the measure will be the ability of the farm, under careful cultivation, to support adequately a family. The inclusion of every item of labor-saving machinery necessary in the operation of the specific farm is envisaged.

WE PROPOSE that the purchase be financed by an appropriate public agency, either through direct loan or through total government guarantee of any loan contracted through ordinary commercial channels. Cheap credit not to exceed four per cent per annum and long-term amortization privileges of not less than twenty years are contemplated.

WE HOLD IT ESSENTIAL that there be no discrimination on account of race, creed, or color, and specifically between Negro and white, in the administration of these benefits.

Proposed by the National Sharecroppers Fund and subscribed by 65 distinguished citizens.*

Some Questions and Answers

Do you think Negroes have the same chance as white people in this country? Sixty per cent of the whites living in the South said "Yes"; 37% said "No"; 85% of the Negroes believed that their race has unequal opportunities.

These opinions were the result of a nation-wide population sample of public opinion obtained by the National Opinion Research Center of the University of Denver. Persons covered by this poll believed, among other things, that some white people dislike Negroes because of their race and color; some look down on them as inferior; some believe Negroes do not have the capacity to take advantage of educational and economic opportunities; some, that Negroes lack ambition and initiative; some, that the Negro's own aggressiveness is a handicap; some, that Negroes have as good a chance as they deserve; and some, that whites don't like to mix and associate with Negroes.

One person reported: "Negroes are not supposed to have an equal chance to make a living. The Bible says they're the white man's slave."

FROM THE PRESS

Amendment No. 3

To the Editor of The News-Age-Herald:

Why add another amendment to the constitution when we ignore the provision which requires that the basis of representation should be adjusted every 10 years to conform to the changes in population as shown by the census? It is a shame that the people of Jefferson County should humbly and dumbly submit to be defrauded of their rights in this matter.

Some are afraid that white supremacy will be endangered if this amendment No. 3 is made. Instead of attempting to deprive the Negro of his constitutional rights as a citizen by every kind of chicanery, equivocation, evasion and pettifogging device that our magnanimous lawmakers can contrive, we should encourage every citizen, white or black, rich or poor, to take part in political affairs to insure the general welfare. The broader the base, the steadier and stronger the structure.

The Negro population is less than 50 per cent in any Southern state. It is extremely improbable that they will vote solidly and as a unit in any state election in support of any party or policy, even where Negro interests are directly concerned. It used to be supposed that all Negroes would vote only as Republicans. Recently Negroes have attempted to vote in Southern Democratic primaries and have been excluded from them.

In national affairs, the Negro minority is about one-tenth of our total population. It is absurd to suppose that this Negro minority can endanger and nullify the will of the much more numerous white population who are better educated, richer and occupy a position of overwhelming dominance in the courts, in political affairs, in the business world, in social organization and are firmly established by long existing custom.

Bret Hart's Truthful James inquires:

"Do I dream, do I doubt or are visions about?
Is civilization a failure, or is the Caucasian played out?"

We say: No.

We can gratify the laudable ambition of the Negro for full citizenship without the slightest danger to the established order, political or social.—Archibald Leishman. —Birmingham News, November 5, 1944.

Not Subject to Law

John M. Daniel, the attorney general, ruled that the primary election the other day to name a successor to the late Hamp P. Fulmer was not an election within the meaning of South Carolina's state law requiring liquor stores to be closed on "election days."

The election was, of course, a primary election and since the general assembly repealed all of the primary laws in an effort to prevent the federal court from holding that Negroes must be allowed to participate in the primaries, presumably primary elections are no longer elections within the meaning of the state laws. It remains yet to be seen whether the special session will actually prevent the Supreme Court's deciding that Negroes may not participate in the extra-legal primaries which South Carolina is now holding.

Already, by the attorney general's opinion, it has succeeded in leaving liquor stores open for primary election days. This probably doesn't matter much now since there isn't very much liquor for sale in South Carolina, but it may be significant after the war.—Columbia, South Carolina, Record, November 10, 1944.

Our Health Department

Bleckley County now has a fine new Health Center, with facilities for both white and colored residents. The new Health Center opened this week and is certainly the pride of all Bleckley County.

The new offices, the equipment and furnishings were made possible by the City of Cochran, the County Commissioner, several civic organizations but more particularly by the hard work and determination of the County Nurse, Mrs. Richard Parramore, and her able assistant, Mrs. Bryant Williams.

Mrs. Parramore and Mrs. Williams deserve the thanks of all and both deserve full credit for the new Health Center. This is another example of what can be done to improve our community and county if only we have the DETERMINATION and the AMBITION to really do things and not assume the "business as usual" attitude and become the victims of procrastination.—Cochran, Georgia, Journal, October 26, 1944.

The President Speaks

The future of America, like its past, must be made by deeds—not words.

America has always been a land of action—a land of adventurous pioneering—a land of growing and building.

America must always be such a land.

The creed of our democracy is that liberty is acquired and kept by men and women who are strong and self-reliant, and possessed of such wisdom as God gives to mankind—men and women who are just, and understanding, and generous to others—men and women who are capable of disciplining themselves.

For they are the rulers and they must rule themselves.

I believe in our Democratic faith and in the future of our country which has given eternal strength and vitality to that faith.—Franklin D. Roosevelt speaking in Chicago, Illinois, October, 1944.

Two More Lynchings

The record has been stained by two recent lynchings. On November 3 Robert Lee, a Negro who had fatally assaulted Arthur Harris, Troup County, Georgia, jailer, was shot to death by a civilian member of a posse near Rock Mills, Alabama. His slayer claimed that when he overtook Lee, the Negro turned to throw a large rock at him, so that he was obliged to shoot in "self defense."

At Pikeville, Tennessee, on November 23, James I. Scales, young Negro trusty at the Tennessee Training and Agricultural School, who was accused of slaying the daughter and wife of the superintendent of the institution, was removed from the county jail and shot to death by a small group of white men on the grounds of the reformatory. Governor Prentice Cooper immediately announced that "there will be a full investigation of both the murder and the lynching," and offered a reward of $500 for arrest and conviction of the lynchers.

Negroes Ask for Postgrad Funds

The State Board of Regents has been asked to make it possible for graduates of the three state colleges for Negroes to pursue post-graduate and professional work at universities which award higher degrees . . .

The petition, signed jointly by H. M. Bond, of Fort Valley State College; Aaron Brown, of Albany State College, and Benjamine F. Hubert, of Georgia State College at Savannah, asked the regents to adopt the principle that they "are liable to provide such opportunities for Negroes as are now provided for white persons."—Atlanta Journal, November 21, 1944.

The Chicago Round Table

"We have seen that the color-line problem is a recent problem—not one of long standing in human history. It is a social problem which has become an international problem.

"The problem is urgent now, we think, because of the improvement in communication, the shift in industrial power, and the use of color-line propaganda by great powers in our modern world. It is, therefore, a matter of intense urgency for the American people to think constructively and to strive diligently for further improvements in the matter of race relations and color discrimination within the United States. Only as we solve the problem locally—that is, within our own country—can these United States of America make their maximum contribution in international relations throughout the world."—Ernest C. Colwell, vice-president of the University of Chicago, closing the Round Table's discussion of "Peace as a World Race Problem." Chicago. August 20, 1944.

Freedom: Promise or Fact*

By Eleanor Roosevelt

IF I WERE a Negro today, I think I would have moments of great bitterness. It would be hard for me to sustain my faith in democracy and to build up a sense of goodwill toward men of other races.

I think, however, that I would realize that if my ancestors had never left Africa, we would be worse off as "natives" today under the rule of any other country than I am in this country where my people were brought as slaves.

In a comparatively short period of time the slaves have become free men—free men, that is, as far as a proclamation can make them so. There now remains much work to be done to see that freedom becomes a fact and not just a promise for my people.

I know, however, that I am not the only group that has to make a similar fight. Even women of the white race still suffer inequalities and injustices, and many groups of white people in my country are the slaves of economic conditions. All the world is suffering under a great war brought about because of the lag in our social development as against the progress in our economic development.

I would know that I had to work hard and to go on accomplishing the best that was possible under present conditions. Even though I was held back by generations of economic inequality, I would be proud of those of my race who are gradually fighting to the top in whatever occupation they are engaged in.

I would still feel that I ought to participate to the full in this war. When the United Nations win, certain things will be accepted as a result of principles which have been enunciated by the leaders of the United Nations, which never before have been part of the beliefs and practices of the greater part of the world.

I would certainly go on working for complete economic equality and my full rights under a democratic government. I would decide which were the steps that I felt represented my real rights as a citizen and I would work for those first, feeling that other things such as social relationships might well wait until certain people were given time to think them through and decide as individuals what they wished to do.

I would not do too much demanding. I would take every chance that came my way to prove my quality and my ability and if recognition was slow, I would continue to prove myself, knowing that in the end good performance has to be acknowledged.

I would accept every advance that was made in the Army and Navy, though I would not try to bring those advances about any more quickly than they were offered. I would certainly affiliate with the labor movement because there is the greatest opportunity for men to work side by side and find out that it is possible to have similar interests and to stand by each other, regardless of race or color.

I would try to remember that unfair and unkind treatment will not harm me if I do not let it touch my spirit. Evil emotions injure the man or woman who harbors them so I would try to fight down resentment, the desire for revenge and bitterness. I would try to sustain my own faith in myself by counting over my friends and among them there would undoubtedly be some white people.

The Urban League Resolves

The National Urban League at its Annual Convention held in Columbus, Ohio, September 28-October 3, resolved that:

"The South, while economic problem number one, also is economic opportunity number one, and is destined to play an increasingly larger role in national affairs. Four out of five Negro Americans still live in southern and border states where the Negro's social problems are found in their most acute form. War-time migration has intensified in other regions racial tensions and social maladjustments which may be traced back to southern origin.

"We believe that basic attempts to meet the social welfare problems facing American Negroes must be based upon preventive, constructive work in the area from which the problems stem.

"We affirm, therefore, our recognition of the need for increased attention to the social problems of Negroes in the South; and urge the development and execution of plans for increased service by the National Urban League to that area."

Edward L. Bernays Award

In February, 1945, the Race Relations Department of the Federal Council of Churches will award to an American citizen, white or Negro, whose efforts in the race relations field have been outstanding, the Edward L. Bernays Award consisting of a Series E, $1,000 war bond and an engrossed scroll.

The purpose of the award is to focus public attention upon constructive, cooperative efforts to remove racial tensions and conflicts and to insure better personal and group relations between white and Negro people of the United States.

The judges are: Virginius Dabney, Editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, Richmond, Virginia; Dorothy Canfield Fisher, author, Arlington, Vermont; William H. Hastie, Dean of Howard University Law School, Washington, D. C.; Leslie Pinckney Hill, President, Cheyney Training School for Teachers, Cheyney, Pennsylvania; and Samuel M. Lindsay, Economic Advisor of the Harmon Foundation and Professor Emeritus, Columbia University, New York City.

A Young People's Institute

The Young People's Institute of the Universalist Convention of North Carolina was held in June at Shelter Neck, N. C. After discussing the racial situation, the members "unanimously resolved and pledged themselves:

"1. To speak with respect of all races and creeds and to discard the use of the word 'nigger.'

"2. To seek acquaintance with the cultural and scientific contributions of great Negroes. (Suggested reading Negro Newspapers—The Pittsburg Courier, the Crisis, The Norfolk Journal, The Afro-American. Read biographies of great Negroes.)

"3. Support political and government issues that will provide better economic and educational opportunities for Negroes.

"4. Treat all persons and groups with appropriate consideration and use terms of courtesy and respect.

"5. To keep these items before ourselves by publishing them in the Tar Heel and the Christian Leader and by sending copies to each member of the Institute.

"6. The unanimous vote to stand as an individual pledge for the carrying out of these resolutions."

Miss Fisher Resigns

Miss Margaret L. Fisher, who joined the staff of SRC on June 1 as Director of Public Relations, has resigned her position. She is now working with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. Her address is 939 Piedmont Avenue, N. E., Atlanta, Georgia.

ern communities. The purpose of such preparation would be to equip the worker with certain fundamental insights and understandings and assist him in organizing these understandings in relations to his job. Some of the elements that would help to build the necessary insights and understandings are: a study of autonomous groups; a study of the social and economic backgrounds of the South; a study of history and psychology of the South; and a careful analysis of workers' own attitudes and prejudices.

In the course of this training it might be well to emphasize to the workers that inter-regional tension is not confined to the North-South impasse, but is a many-faceted affair involving, for example, cultural differences between the Far West, the Midwest, and the East, as well. If the problem can be presented as one concerned with harmonizing the relations of all these regions, the old misunderstanding between the North and the South might well be overcome, as it were, on the flank.

TO HONORARY FELLOWS
OF THE
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

Purpose of the Fellowships

The purpose of these Honorary Fellowships is set forth in the by-laws of the SRC as follows:

> ARTICLE III, SECTION 1. Fellows. The Board of Directors may award honorary fellowships, not exceeding one hundred (100) in number, to Southerners who have demonstrated exceptional talent for constructive leadership. Fellows shall be chosen in such manner as the Board of Directors may prescribe, provided they are well distributed as to race, sex, creed, occupation, and place of residence. The duties of fellows shall be to cooperate with the Council as observers, advisers, correspondents, and special representatives. Fellows may receive such honoraria or reimbursement of expenses incurred at the request of the Executive Committee as the Board may direct. The term of a fellowship shall be for two years, unless otherwise provided by the Board of Directors, and fellowships may be renewed or withdrawn at the discretion of the Board. Fellows need not be members of the corporation at the time of their appointment, but they shall, during the term of their fellowship, be members with all the rights and obligations of members, except that they shall be exempted from the payment of dues.

The Fellowships, then, offer an opportunity for mutual assistance. As a Fellow, you can help the Council in its program of social interpretation and social action. The Council can help you to gain experience and greater maturity in techniques of leadership. We believe that the cumulative efforts of one hundred young Southerners who are willing to do the little chores in local situations can contribute a great deal to the realization of democracy in the South.

The Southern Regional Council Program

The Council's main objects are to promote "the improvement of economic, civic, and racial conditions in the South" and "to attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region." Some immediate problems which the Council wishes to work on are: (1) inclusion of the interests of all citizens in the post-war plans which are now being made; (2) full employment after the war; (3) fair standards and wages in domestic service; (4) suffrage reform in the South; (5) equalization of school facilities and teachers' salaries; (6) the police and race tensions; (7) housing for low-income groups.

The techniques for working on these problems include: (1) educational work through pamphlets, press, radio, addresses, etc; (2) cooperation with other agencies and use of coordinated organizational influences; (3) personal influence upon key people, such as editors, employers, mayors, chiefs of police, governors, legislators, congressmen, etc; (4) public statements or appeals by groups of influential citizens; (5) constructive political action wherever possible.

How Fellows Can Help

As a Fellow you can help the Council and serve the cause of a better South in various ways. Here are some suggestions:

1. Write us regularly, reporting on trends, incidents, and problems in your local area. We want to discover and advertise good practices as well as combat bad practices. And, of course, we want to know about your own activities in behalf of a more democratic South.

2. Make special investigations. From time to time we might ask you to obtain further details about some situation in your area. For example, we might ask you to investigate a lynching or a prevented lynching, a local health situation, or a progressive community project.

3. Help us make public opinion polls. We hope to develop a system of making reliable surveys of public opinion by sampling.

4. Send us clippings from local papers -- news stories, editorials, letters to the editor relating to the South and Southern problems. We have a clipping service, but it does not give us a complete coverage.

5. Help us to find persons who would make good members of the Council or who might contribute substantially to the financial support of the Council.

6. Stimulate the organization of a local Interracial Committee or Council of Human Relations. If such an organization already exists, try to put new life into it.

7. Make it your task to "educate" one or more public officials or other influential persons to a better understanding of the Negro and of the social, economic, and political issues confronting the South.

8. Write brief articles for SOUTHERN FRONTIER, the Council's monthly paper, and help us to find other contributors to the FRONTIER.

9. Enlist in our Speakers' Bureau. We get many more invitations to speak than our staff and budget can accommodate. It will greatly facilitate our work if we can call upon Fellows to speak in their local areas in so far as their time permits. We will supply literature, exhibit material, film strips, etc., on various subjects.

10. Advise us freely on what the Council might do to improve its program and strategy.

Naturally no one is expected to do all of these things, but we hope that from this list you will select one or more types of activities which you pledge yourself to carry on to the best of your ability.

Direction and Supervision of Fellows

The Council's Committee on Fellows selects the Fellows and decides upon matters of general policy affecting them. The personnel of the Committee is as follows: President Goodrich C. White, Emory University, and Dr. Forrester B. Washington, Atlanta University School of Social Work, Co-Chairmen; George S. Mitchell, Atlanta; Dean T. S. Staples, Conway, Arkansas; James T. Taylor, Durham, North Carolina; Clark Foreman, Black Mountain, North Carolina; and President Horace Mann Bond, Fort Valley, Georgia. However, the Executive Directors of the Council will be in direct charge of the activities of the Fellows, and all routine correspondence by Fellows should be addressed to Guy B. Johnson, Executive Director, or Ira De A. Reid, Associate Executive Director, Room 432, 63 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta, Georgia. We hope eventually to have a staff member who can devote a good part of his time to work with Fellows.

As the work of the Fellows develops, we want to issue a regular mimeographed bulletin which will serve as a clearing-house for ideas and activities of Fellows. Furthermore, we plan to hold an annual conference of Fellows as soon as our budget permits. Although the Council's budget at present does not permit the payment of regular stipends to Fellows, it will reimburse Fellows for expenses incurred in connection with specific assignments done at our request.

No. 2 FOR MEMBERS OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL Dec. 22, 1944

IT WAS A GOOD MEETING!

Seventy-nine members attended the annual meeting of SRC in Atlanta on December 6. All of the states in our area were represented except Oklahoma, Kentucky, and Arkansas. If you were one of those who couldn't attend, you missed a good meeting. It did not solve all of the problems which confront the Council, but it made a good beginning. The meeting was notable for the full participation of those present and for the frank, objective discussion of the problem of the Council's strategy with respect to segregation.

SOME RESOLUTIONS

The Council meeting adopted several resolutions which were given to the press. One of these resolutions called for: (1) employment of all persons on the basis of ability; (2) abolition of the white primary; (3) more use of Negro policemen and firemen; (4) equalization of educational facilities; (5) extension of low cost housing; (6) improved medical and dental care for both races; (7) equal accommodations on all public transportation facilities.

A second resolution enlarged upon the problem of post-war employment. A third dealt with the equalization of educational opportunities, and a fourth condemned the action of the Board of Regents of the University of Texas in ousting President Homer P. Rainey. These resolutions will be printed in full in the December issue of The Southern Frontier.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTORS

Your Executive Directors presented a report covering the activities of the staff since the charter meeting of February 16, 1944. They also presented a program for the coming year, and this program was given general approval by the members. Among the proposals were: (1) organization of state divisions of the Council; (2) a series of South-wide conferences; (3) organization of state civil rights committees; (4) a study of police systems in the South and a series of closed conferences with police officials; (5) a comprehensive study of segregation and discrimination; (6) a legal test of the applicability of the Supreme Court decision in the Texas primary case to other Southern states.

AMENDMENTS OF THE BY-LAWS

Several amendments of the Council by-laws were adopted at the meeting. The most important of these were: (1) provision for a regular meeting of the Board of Directors just prior to each meeting of members, and (2) addition of the Executive Directors to the Executive Committee, without vote.

BOARD WILL MEET ON JANUARY 31

The Board of Directors held a brief meeting following the member meeting on December 6. It transacted only the most pressing matters of business and voted to sit again on January 31, 1945. At that time it will elect officers and discuss the details of the program for 1945. This will be a very important meeting. If you are a member of the Board, please make note of the date. You will receive a formal notice later on.

HONORARY FELLOWS

We have heard from twenty-six of the thirty-two Fellows who were selected by the Committee on Fellows. Twenty-four have accepted appointment and two are moving outside the South and are unable to accept.

Each of these Honorary Fellows has promised to assist the Council in one or more of the following ways: (1) Regular reports; (2) Making special investigations; (3) Conducting public opinion polls; (4) Sending in newspaper clippings; (5) Finding members and supporters for SRC; (6) Work with local human relations groups; (7) Personal contacts and "education"; (8) Writing for The Southern Frontier; (9) Participating in our Speakers' Bureau; and (10) Advice on SRC program.

We want to bring the number of Honorary Fellows up to one hundred as soon as possible. You can help the Committee on Fellows by sending us the names of people in your area whom you wish to nominate.

KENTUCKY GOVERNOR'S COMMISSION

Governor Simeon S. Willis of Kentucky has appointed a Commission for the Study of Negro Affairs. Your Executive Director spent two days in Louisville last week conferring with members of this Commission. This is the first special Commission of its kind in the South, and we are hoping that it will set a pattern worthy of emulation by other Southern states. If you think your state would profit by such a Commission, why not bring the Kentucky example to the attention of your Governor?

NEGRO POLICE

We have a list of twenty-four Southern cities which employ Negro police. Council members might make good use of this list in promoting the further use of Negro policemen in the South. We shall be glad to send you the list on request.

NEWSPAPERS AND NEGRO SERVICEMEN

We have made a list of approximately 80 Southern newspapers with respect to their printing of news and pictures of Negro service men and women, including, in some cases, the use of courtesy titles in referring to their parents. If you want a copy of this list, just let us know. You might make good use of it in educating editors who are not in the habit of publishing news or pictures of Negroes in the service.

WANTED: NEW MEMBERS

Why not make a New Year's resolution to nominate at least ten persons for Council membership? We now have about five hundred members. If you will help the Membership Committee by sending in nominations from time to time, the membership can easily be tripled during 1945. A sheet is enclosed for your convenience in making nominations. Please don't forget!

Atlanta, Georgia
Dec. 27, 1948

Dear Stetson:

One good use I have made of the lax period surrounding Christmas has been a careful reading of your chapter on "Design for Racial Democracy" in your forthcoming book "The Four Freedoms Move South."

I shall have to ask your gracious consideration of the unpardonably long delay in my reply. Perhaps you can at least conceive of certain reasons — or excuses — for this.

Your paper impresses me as, on the whole, a reasonable and sensible approach to and interpretation of the existing situation, with a judicious recommendation of remedies. Being myself a progressive rather than a radical, it meets with my approval.

However, I not only have no fear of, but welcome, the radical because of the preponderant pressure and narcotic power of the reactionaries and their fellow travelers, the middle-of-the-roaders, who are standing still instead of being headed somewhere. Therefore, I would favor your including a statement about the need for persons like Lillian Smith with the position she takes.

The only other positive suggestion occurring to me was possibly a brief reference to FEPC as a ground-preparer for the greener pastures we hope for.

I have also exercised the temerity to suggest a few grammatical and punctuational changes.

It will be a pleasure to discuss the entire paper more at length personally sometime.

Greetings and best wishes to you.

Sincerely,

Witherspoon Dodge

We dedicate ourselves to the task of doing the most and the best that can be done here and now.

VOL. V DECEMBER, 1944 NO. 12

Report of The Council Meeting

Resolutions

1. General Resolutions

We believe that every effort must be made to prepare the people of the South for the returning Negro and white soldiers. The problems which are arising already as they come back from active service or are demobilized into civilian life, call for prompt and constructive action on local, state, regional and national levels.

With a view to encouraging the returning Negro soldiers to have faith that the democratic principles for which they have fought are to be translated into reality, we recommend:

1. Employment of all persons on the basis of ability, with due regard for seniority rights.
2. Abolition of the white primary where it exists.
3. Extension of the growing practice of employing Negro policemen and firemen in Southern cities and equal treatment of members of both races by the police and the courts.
4. Equalization of educational opportunity and of pay for teachers of both races.
5. Extension of publicly financed low cost housing.
6. Increased publicly financed medical and dental care available to both races on an equal basis.
7. That equal accommodations for Negroes as provided under the law, be actually provided on all public transportation facilities, and that discriminatory practices now common in travel be abolished.

2. Post War Employment

The Southern Regional Council realizes the importance of encouraging and planning for an effective program of full employment in every Southern community.

We, therefore, urge that such planning include the initiation and maintenance of an effective public employment service which within its ranks and among employers will promote the effective utilization of all workers in terms of their skills and training, without regard to their race, color or creed.

We recommend that equal and effective opportunities for the technical and vocational training of Negroes be made available.

President Odum's Address

It is a privilege to call to order this our first annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council, to recapture something of the heritage and spirit back of its founding, and to look forward to the action which the Council will recommend today and perhaps to hazard what tomorrow and all the days after tomorrow will bring forth. It seems appropriate to look briefly at our Council's first year from three levels.

Our first feeling is one of gratification that we have in the South an actual Southern Regional Council, organized, chartered, and a growing concern devoted to the high purpose of developing, conserving and using wisely the great resources of the South, particularly the human resources, and of so integrating the South into the total fabric of the United States as to achieve a better approximation to the regional quality and balance of America which may be the most important and critical domestic task of post-war planning that will face us. Less than a year ago we gathered together in solemn assembly, conscious of a great heritage and a great opportunity, and we covenanted together to devote ourselves unswervingly to the specific task of doing the most and the best that could be done with reference to one aspect of our post-war problem, namely race relations and development with particular reference to the South's part in assuring the Negro an equitable part in all our democratic processes.

We agreed for the first task to focus our interest and efforts upon this field for several reasons. In the first place, it seems universally agreed that in the total modern world and particularly in America at this time, the problem of race and minority people constitutes one of the most important, maybe the most important, point of tension. Still more specifically in the South it is our Number One problem and we recognized that every phase of southern economy and culture is inseparably related to the total life and culture of the Negro and that there is scarcely any aspect of Negro life that in turn is not closely related to the total life and culture of the South. Still more specifically we recognized the impending crisis that might soon face us in the dilemmas of our returning soldiers and the South's responsibility and opportunity here. And still

Program for 1945

The first annual member meeting of the Southern Regional Council was held in the Exhibition Galleries of Atlanta University on December 6, 1944. This meeting was preceded by meetings of the Executive, Program, Fellowship and Membership Committees at the SRC offices on December 5. It was followed by a meeting of the Board of Directors.

The Executive Directors, in their reports offered several suggestions and recommendations on the program of the Council during the coming year. The procedures authorized were:

1. The Organization of State Divisions of the Council. As soon as there are one hundred members of the Council in a given state, they will be organized as a nucleus for action on the state level. The by-laws and policies of such divisions would, of course, have to be in harmony with those of the Council.

2. A Series of South-wide Conferences. Within the limits of the budget and with the advice of the Executive Committee, the SRC will sponsor several important annual conferences. One would be a conference for the leaders of the state and local interracial committees. Another would be a strategy conference of the leaders of the major agencies working on problems of the South within the framework of the Council's interests. Still another would be a conference of religious leaders in programs of social action, with particular emphasis, perhaps, on the women's divisions of the various church bodies.

3. A Series of State-wide Race Relations Institutes or Forums. Each of these would run from three to five days and would attempt to reach a better cross-section of the public than is usually reached by such meetings. The Department of Race Relations of the American Missionary Association is preparing to promote a series of institutes and has asked the Council to share in their planning and sponsorship.

4. Special Visiting Committee. The officers of the Council, or such other groups as the Executive Committee might choose, are authorized to seek private conferences with as many Southern governors as possible in the next three months. Their discussions will not be confined to race relations, but will include the main problems of social and economic welfare in the South.

To attain through research and action programs the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the region.

Editorial

The recent annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council marked a forward step in the life of movements designed to make human relations democratic in the South. Paradoxical as it may seem race relations movements seldom have been democratic in their structure and function. In the past they operated in two ways: first, they relied very heavily upon the one-man type of leadership, one person being a spokesman for each race; second, they leaned very heavily upon the wisdom and wishes of a select few whose actions were either supported or repudiated. Today, more so than ever before, the wishes of the many become the foundation stone of action in the field of race relations. As we have implied, this is a very significant index to the changing character of movements in race relations, and if the Southern Regional Council's Member Meeting may be regarded as indicative of any trend at all it does reflect a growing desire on the part of people to face situations frankly, collectively and fearlessly.

The executives of the Council were heartened by the courage and forthrightness with which chronic and acute problems of southern life were introduced. True, SRC members did not possess all of the information, hold to all of the beliefs, decide on every action that would make living utopian, but they did make a light for ways that have been dark. No phase of relations between the races was ignored in discussion. The members realized, however, the mighty potency of words and stultifying effect of fear in furthering or arresting any program they might undertake. Though our emotions were quickened with reports of "incidents" of sex and race, of injustices, of official lethargy and community inactivity, our reason was challenged with programs of correction, amelioration, even the complete undoing of ways that had perpetuated an undemocratic South. We met to find ways of doing something more about and with all of these people, communities and problems. We stuck to our last.

Above all, perhaps, this achievement seems outstanding—we learned to discuss all of our ills without venom and emotional distress; we made new covenants and resolutions, openly arrived at. And though the SRC's diagnosis of the South is not yet complete, the organization's therapy for what is known continues. There is abundant life in the membership of the Southern Regional Council. That gives us hope.

Resolutions—Continued

We recommend the creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to promote the non-discriminatory use of manpower.

3. Education

In the seventeen states and the District of Columbia which require separation of the races in their public school systems, continuing and substantial differences in the public schools for white and Negro children prevail despite requirements of educational statutes, that separate and uniform school facilities be established and maintained. These differences are reflected in the buildings and equipment, in the length of the school day, in the teacher-pupil loads, in the per-pupil expenditure, in the investments in public school property, and in teachers' salaries.

Recognizing the necessity and continuing obligation to establish equality of educational opportunity for all in order to further the establishment of a sound economy in the Southern region, and recognizing the opportunities inherent in the post-war plans for school improvements now developing in communities within these states, we accept the principles that:

1. There should exist and be available for Negro children the same types of educational opportunities as there are for white children.
2. The teacher-pupil ratio in Negro schools should be as low as that in schools for white children.
3. The length of the school day should be the same for the Negro child as it is for the white child.
4. The same types of physical accommodations and facilities in the public schools should exist and be available for Negro children as are available for white children.

We commend these principles for the consideration of all law-abiding citizens, and responsible school officials in Southern communities, and urge, in behalf of the common welfare, that action be taken to make these principles operative in all plans for public school improvements.

4. Homer P. Rainey and the University of Texas

The Southern Region Council wishes to protest the dismissal of Dr. Homer P. Rainey as President of the University of Texas. The Council believes this is a startling infringement of personal and academic freedom, and a severe blow to those Southern persons and agencies working for democratic rights.

The Southern Regional Council believes in Dr. Rainey because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his close association with us in the formation of SRC which he now serves as Vice-President. The Council commends him for the stand he has taken, and applauds those Texas citizens and those students and faculty members at the University of Texas who gave him such unqualified support.

Program—Continued

5. Civil Rights Committees. From time to time arise cases which the SRC might well handle for the protection of the civil rights of citizens in the region. The central staff cannot undertake to investigate personally all such cases. Therefore, the Council members approved the establishment of Civil Rights Committees in all our thirteen states. Each committee might be composed of five Council members and a legal advisor who may or may not be a member of the Council, and the duty of these Committees would be to advise the Executive Directors and the Executive Committee as to what action the Council should take in cases involving civil rights.

6. Youth Work. The Council authorized the taking of steps that would permit youth direct participation in the Council or the sponsoring of some sort of auxiliary or correlated youth division of the Council.

7. Study of Police Systems. One of the most urgent needs in the South is reform of police training and administration. Along with its program of promoting improvement wherever it can, the Council authorized the sponsorship of a comprehensive study of Southern police systems in cooperation with one or more universities. An approach of this sort would permit the Council to embark on a program which would not necessarily be tied in with the race question, yet would permit the treatment and analysis of a problem that is closely allied with race tensions.

8. Study of Segregation and Discrimination. The Council authorized the drawing of plans for a comprehensive study to be carried on throughout the South in the field of legal discrimination and segregation. It is proposed that ameliorative action be based upon a study of the facts as to the human and economic costs of segregation and discrimination. Such a study should provide useful material for molding public opinion on the question of equal opportunity. This study would be preceded by a conference on the subject of segregation and discrimination.

9. Primary Test Case. The Council authorized the Board of Directors to proceed with a legal test of the applicability of the Supreme Court decision in Smith vs Allwright in the State of Georgia if it appears that no such case is already under way.

President Odum's Address

more specifically we recognized our opportunity and obligation to take over where the Commission on Interracial Cooperation had left off.

If I understood correctly, we thought that it would be a fine thing if we could have for the first year such a united Council devoting its energies to getting organized, providing adequate offices and minimum equipment, and exploring the preliminary ways and means for seeking direction for a continuing Council worthy of the South and the crisis which it faced.

The main thing was to have a Council united on high grounds of both purpose and strategy, having a sound philosophy and plan commensurate with attainable standards of achievement. We didn't care much what was done the first year in so far as what was done was right. In fact we thought that it might be better not to try to do too much until we were ready, knowing full well that our problem was one which had no simple or total solution but many solutions; our questions of dispute and differences of opinions had no single easy answer but many answers. We knew, too, that we had neither the wisdom for the answers nor the strategy for these solutions. But we wanted above all else for the South to try something first-class within the framework of our American democracy and the ideals of Christianity. We wanted to be American as well as Southerner and we wanted to be Christian as well as Church.

And finally, in venturing into what we believed to be the most important and the most difficult of all American problems, we knew that the hazards would be great and that the criticisms would be many and bitter from almost every level of American and southern life. But we held that when these criticisms came, knowing already that they would come, we should interpret them all as increasing evidence of the need for all the more singleness of purpose, hard work, and devotion to the task.

And you remember, we said that we would do our level best not to be afraid.

Well, we have such a Council. As I see it, the staff has done a great deal more than these minimum assignments and has more than met expectations. So, too, in many ways the criticisms and attacks have been less in number and in bitterness than I had anticipated, in spite of the extraordinary catalogue which I shall presently mention. The Executive Directors have provided for admirable office arrangements with conditions of working relationships hardly dreamed of a few years ago. The young people assisting there have not only worked with standard efficiency but also with a zeal worthy of a crusade. The Executive Directors and Secretary-Treasurer have not only done well their new assignments but have taken over a multitude of left-overs from a long and eventful record of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. And they have turned out a prodigious amount of hard and important work. In the midst of all this, they have had conflicting demands upon their time; too many things to do, too little time and help to do it with. Yet the net result must surely be one to elicit from us all not only our gratification but our high appreciation for what has been done.

Our first feeling and reaction, therefore, is very clearly one of gratification for the progress we have made and a new enthusiasm and eagerness to go on now and do the job. Our second feeling and reaction, however, is something quite different. It is one of wide-eyed, perhaps startled, realization of the total realities involved in the catalogue of crises, misunderstandings and criticisms and in the prospect before us there is a new recognition of the hazards facing us.

There is first of all the world situation of war and suffering. With reference to our own Nation, there is mass tragedy in the making and in which there is abounding in all our American families and communities personal tragedy and more to come on such momentous scale as we have ever known. From hazard and sorrow, from personal tragedies and grief, surely we are chastened to a scorn of personal conflicts, trivial quarrels and futile conflict and bickerings and to a determined will to forget self and unimportant details. And maybe we aspire to a national humility adequate to encompass all those irresponsibles who share neither the hard work nor the sorrow of the nation.

And then abroad, the folk conflicts and tragedies are beyond any reasonable comprehension. Here are the noble Greeks again in travail. As if all slaughter and starvation were not enough, there are added now tragedies of civil strife. And the great perennially suffering Polish people; and the little democracies, peace loving and long suffering; the sensitive French and Belgians and the British and the Chinese and the Russians and all that other host of suffering people whose tragedies are a part of our heritage—surely their conflicts and tragedies, their sacrifice and suffering, make ours pale by comparison. Yes, we do have our problems and we set high store on their solution; but in the fellowship of suffering there is challenge to sympathy and patience and understanding.

Back again to our own Country: within the special field of race relations, North and West, a multitude of organizations are working to meet crises. They are differing one with another, conflicting over status and details, issuing ultimatums. From all this the conclusion seems justified that the problem is not only for the South but is among America's first. As instructed, we explored the possibilities of the President of the United States appointing a National Advisory Committee and came to the conclusion that the situation was so complicated that we agreed with "The Chief" that it could not be done to good advantage. The criticisms of the President in his prospective appointments indicated that the net result would be divisive rather than unifying.

Many of the criticisms of the Southern Regional Council have been logical and consistent repetition of the usual charge that the Council lacks courage to face the issues of segregation and that it is committed to the preservation of the Southern status quo. So, too, there has grown up a rising tide of bitter criticism of the South whose sweeping total assumes the proportions of a sort of symphony whose crescendo repeats the recurring motif "I hate the South." It is easily conceivable that in specific cases such a feeling would be inevitable, as in the case of Negro youth, but even if it were justifiable, I can conceive of few more important American tasks than so planning together as to eliminate this poison in our American system.

There have been currents more grievous than mere bitterness and criticisms. Some of the efforts to set race against race, to make race conflict the basis for achieving special ends and the engendering of bitterness for bitterness sake come nigh unto treason and some efforts have been treasonable in effect. So wide and so bitter have been these criticisms and so unequal the conditions of American life, that it seems clear that the most important domestic problems of post war planning must surely center around the regional quality and balance of America.

There are also serious problems of definition and of strategy. With reference to the prevailing tendency to advocate Federal coercion for the South in matters of race segregation as being a necessary tenet of American democracy, one point needs to be recognized. The essence of American democracy has always specified the consent of the governed as fundamental in both philosophy and the administration. It follows, therefore, that since the majority of southern people will not give their consent, the only possible way of achieving coercive revision would be through pure fascism or some other type of totalitarian government, insofar as this coercion is extended to the regions where overwhelming majorities will not give their consent. Whatever else it might be, it couldn't be democracy in the way of governmental administration. And so powerful conflicting forces are gaining momentum that needs to be channeled into ways of council more than conflict.

Now coming on to the South, the hazards and criticism of the Council and its work; the realities and obstacles to be faced are scarcely less sobering; perhaps they are probably more profound and far-reaching. There have been criticisms of the Council of many sorts within and without its own set-up. Some of these criticisms you have read and you have read the illuminating replies by Hancock, Wesley, Johnson and others. Many of the criticisms have clearly ignored facts; many have reflected personal sensitiveness not justified in so important work. There have been criticisms of personalities and arrangements as well as of principles and practices. Yet all of this, in addition to affording measures of reality, is a normal part of the democratic process and is symbolic also of the frustration and aggression expected in times that are abnormal. Nevertheless, the test of an abiding organization doing its job in a big way must somehow be in the measure of its unity and its capacity to work together.

It has been stated both North and South that the Council was nurtured in noble words that meant nothing. Yet the reading of our resolutions and of those others stated so clearly at Durham must be convincing that the words are both specific and meaningful. To me there is meaning in the words, "a new declaration of American principles," "a new dedication to our task;" or the positive phrase "this means more specifically as bearing upon the burden of our present counseling that the Negro in the United States and in every region is entitled to and should have every guarantee of equal opportunities that every other citizen of the United States has within the framework of the American democratic system of government." All these mean to me exactly what they say. And when we said, "We dedicate ourselves unswervingly to the successful achievement of this task," I translate that to be good English saying something very definite.

The greatest reality which we face, however, is in the total mass criticism and honest fear of both the white South and the Negro leadership. On the one hand there is the sincere fear that the Council aims to do something contrary to the southern way of life as a living part of American democracy. On the other, there is fear that nothing will be done. This is the main series of criticisms that we face and we must respect it and study it. We must find out, if we plan to have an all-regional Southern Council, how many of the people of what sort will go along with us in what ways; and having found that out we must decide which is the way of leadership and which is the way of followship and determine our course accordingly.

The strategy with which we approach our task involves fundamental issues. One of these is whether the South can work increasingly well in the total integration of our national democracy with the rest of the nation. To state the problem vividly, is the South willing to work with a President or a Vice President of the United States in our Council? Or, are we so southern and they so un-American that there is no resolving of differences in practical workable ways of doing things? And equally can the rest of the nation rise to the statures of cooperation with and face the realities of the southern regional problems which are "American" if they are anything? These are profound questions which bring us back to the fundamentals of American democracy, greater than local issues, emphasizing the fact that this thing of southern regional development and the regional balance of the nation is a supreme task.

All this challenges again the Negro to a sort of superhuman wisdom and a superlative strategy through which he can mould a great transitional period in terms of and in the framework of American democracy and can cooperate with the white South and the rest of the nation in doing the most and the best that can be done. It must be clear that this is a noble task but that there is no other way by which the attainment of mastery is possible.

This, then, is my second reaction. Our third level of sensing the situation is in terms of what to do next and how to do it. They all tell us that we must face the issue of segregation frankly. That is, the several militant groups insist that we must declare ourselves on what they assume to be the one definitive issue. For instance, the aggressively active American intellectuals and agitators, commonly called "The North", continuously push for an exact declaration, specifically bearing upon the philosophy, not the practice, of segregation. So, also, the Negro leadership of the Nation can bring itself to negotiate on no common ground that does not assume the elimination of legal segregation in America and that the very pattern of segregation, even if tenable, by its very definition, negates the whole guarantee of equal rights and accommodations. There are other reasons from some sources, but these are not basic to our planning now.

On the other hand, the white South insists upon a straightforward declaration with reference to segregation, also with two basic assumptions. One is that segregation is here to stay, is the only acceptable economy for the South, and cannot be eliminated in any way. Another is that it is time to go to work in what can be done—and quit fighting over what can't be done. Within this framework, then, it is urged that the South work straightforward and forthright to bring about more and more actual equality and services guaranteed under the law. Many southern Negroes are on record as being willing to join in such a declaration.

Now we know these demands are real and that we must face both the issues and the situations which give rise to all these assumptions. Yet there are ways and ways of taking important steps in which crisis and emergency are everywhere apparent. There is needed wisdom and maturity, strategy and honesty, science and morality, all pooled together worthy of the America which we build.

There are many evidences to indicate that we do not now have the wisdom or the maturity adequate for the task; that we have not worked long enough on a master strategy and a forthright intellectual honesty; and that we are not prepared to balance the scientific societal facts with the emotional phases or the moral issues involved. It is one thing to agree to work hard and long, faithfully and honestly, within the framework of an existing, realistic order of legal segregation to bring about better and better results, to insist on full equality before the law and in economic opportunity, and above all to leave nothing undone to prevent conflict and tragedy by devotion to this high ideal of doing what we can do. It is something different, however, to go on record as approving the principles and philosophy, the practice and pattern of legal segregation as embodied in the southern way of life. An individual may well rightly so go on record; many individuals may agree; but for an organization of leaders seeking genuine progress, having this field of race relations as one of its major areas of activity and concern, to so subscribe itself would be providing no leadership at all.

What I am suggesting, therefore, is that this strategy of working out on a mature basis the essentials of the Council's platform and program be made the special order of business for one of the special strategy conferences recommended by the Executive Directors. And, for this meeting today we have a day filled to overflowing with a two-fold task. One is to receive the report of our directors and of the committees that have been at work; to act upon their recommendations and to follow up with suggestions, discussions and encouragement. The other, then, in the afternoon, following this rich experience of participating in the first annual meeting's reports, is to open wide the doors of discussion and suggestion, and to provide then specific time and procedures for the formulation of continuing specific formulae and strategy of work.

Life is rich here and full of opportunity and hazard. Yes, we know that practically everything that everybody says is true in all the complicated maze of our interwoven culture and civilization. Yet always we are trying to ascertain what else is true and what is the relation of each truth to each other truth and to the whole. We are always trying to remember that today is not tomorrow and that we have covenanted together to so meet crisis as to let it make us do something better than we would have done without the crisis. Well; we have the crisis; what to do and how to do it, that is our problem. And there is no contradiction in the poet's exhortation "to seek, to find, to strive and not to yield."

Negro Servicemen

A recent survey by the Associated Negro Press discloses that there were 871,010 Negroes in the armed services of the United States as of October 31, 1944. Of this number 701,678 were in the Army and 169,332 in the Navy. The Army figures showed 5,804 commissioned officers; 49,483 in the Infantry; 36,302 in the Coast and Field Artillery; 867 Cavalry; 133,130 Engineers, and 408,160 in other branches. The Navy personnel included 17 officers and 142,628 enlisted; the Marines 15,771 enlisted; the Coast Guard 4 officers and 3,675 enlisted.

No. 3 For Members of the Southern Regional Council April 9, 1945

TIME MARCHES ON! It certainly does! The work piles up and our personnel is still the same as it was. We are doing the best we can and we are sorry that we have had to neglect you lately. As usual, we are hopeful of getting more help. We are virtually assured of one new staff member sometime during the present month and we are hot on the trail of another one who might join us on June 1.

WE ARE ESSENTIAL! One bit of good news which you will be interested in is that SRC has been declared "essential" by the Atlanta area office of the War Manpower Commission. We come under the following classification: Performing a service, governmental or private, directly connected with the maintainance of indispensible civilian activities, health, safety, welfare, or security." This ruling will make it a little easier for us to obtain the manpower that we need.

THE BOARD MEETING A special meeting of the Board of Directors was held on January 31 to elect officers for the current year and to conclude the discussion of policy and strategy which began at the annual meeting on December 6. There was a frank and honest discussion of the Council's policy with respect to segregation. Finally one member expressed himself as follows: "I think it is obvious that this group is not going to agree on a statement about segregation which will be satisfactory to the great majority of our members. I have always felt that the Durham statement on this question was sufficient and that we could hardly improve on it. Why not let the Council be known by its works?" This seemed to express the sentiment of most of those present and there the matter rested.

Since Dr. Odum had expressed his desire to retire from the presidency the nominating committee offered the name of Mr. Mark Ethridge, Editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal. The committee had not been able to reach Mr. Ethridge in time to get an expression from him so the Board voted to empower the Executive Committee to elect Mr. Ethridge if he would accept. It developed that Mr. Ethridge felt that he could not accept the presidency because of the pressure of newspaper duties in the absence of Mr. Barry Bingham. Dr. Odum expressed a willingness to remain in office until his successor is elected. President Rufus B. Atwood, of Kentucky State College and Bishop Charles Clingman of Louisville, Kentucky were elected to the Board of Directors to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of Mr. Frances Bridges and Dr. Walter Matherly. Mr. Edmund M. Preston of Richmond, Virginia was elected to the Executive Committee in place of Mr. Bridges. We greatly regret to inform you that Mr. Preston died suddenly of a heart attack on March 21.

CONFERENCE OF STATE COMMITTEE HEADS

On February 1 we had a conference of the Directors of the Southern state interracial committees. There are ten active state committees--Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky, and Texas--and everyone of them was represented at the conference. We discussed the programs and problems of the state committees as well as ways and means of strengthening the working relationship between them and the Southern Regional Council. The meeting was very successful and we plan to make it an annual affair.

CONFERENCE OF CHURCH WOMEN

On February 2 a small group of women who are active in church work met in Atlanta under Southern Regional Council auspices to discuss some of the things that church women might do to prevent racial tensions and to promote interracial tolerance in the postwar period. Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames presided over the meeting. The group adopted a statement of activities which they would like to promote through the various women's divisions of Christian Social Relations. A copy of this statement is available on request.

LAW ENFORCEMENT CONFERENCE

Plans are shaping up for a conference on Law Enforcement and Race Relations--or perhaps several small conferences so that long distance travel will be held to a minimum. In the meantime, with the assistance of Mrs. Henry Havens of Jacksonville and Mrs. M. E. Tilly of Atlanta, we are exploring the question as to how the Council can best do something constructive on the police situation in the South.

POSTWAR ECONOMY CONFERENCE

Perhaps you have seen notices in the newspapers to the effect that SRC is sponsoring a conference on the South's Postwar Economy in Atlanta on April 11-12. We have been very fortunate in securing a group of outstanding experts on economic problems to speak at this conference. Among these are Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, Economic Adviser, U. S. Department of Agriculture; Dr. August Maffry, Chief of the International Trade Unit, U. S. Department of Commerce: Mr. Coleman Woodbury, Assistant Adviser of National Housing Agencies; and Judge Edgar Watkins, Atlanta, authority on freight rates. Attendance from the Atlanta area will be open to the public but in conformity with ODT regulations, we have restricted outside invitations to a small group of leaders in agriculture, labor, industry, and research. Please do not plan to come to this meeting if you live outside the Atlanta area unless you have been invited !

A MESSAGE FROM PRESIDENT ODUM

To Members of the Southern Regional Council:

The January 31 meeting of the Board of Directors of the Southern Regional Council was to me about the most inspiring exhibit of the American conference at its best that I have ever seen. It was, however, more than inspiring. It was a realistic fact-finding, sincere group of men and women coming to grips with matters of the highest spiritual, social and economic importance on levels of practical strategy and sound principles.

I would rather have the confidence of this group and have a part in its leadership than any other group in existence or any that I can now imagine.

There is no gainsaying the fact that a region and a nation that can produce the type of leadership and character that was demonstrated there offers tremendous hope for the continuity of American opportunity and democracy. There was rare frankness and understanding of each other at the same time that there was demonstrated the basic American principles of understanding, patience, and the pattern of working together on diverse issues.

There are other organizations and agencies, private and public, that are working admirably toward their specialized ends. I know of no other organization in which the over-all spiritual quality of the South is so involved in its search for the truth and its efforts to attain the most and the best that can be done.

For my part, I want to assure members of the Council that we are just ready to begin and, so long as there is a Council of this sort having the support and confidence of its present members and of a small but increasingly strong constituency, I have complete confidence that its programs, policies, and strategy can be worked out. Of course, we are all making a lot of mistakes, but that is an almost inevitable measure of both the complexity of the situation and our limited time, finances, and personnel.

We are all sorry that Mark Ethridge could not accept the presidency since he is so heavily committed to so many tasks, especially in the absence of Barry Bingham. So, too, many of our other Southern leaders find themselves caught up in the midst of not only the quantitative load of extra work, but in technical and routine commitments that do not permit travel and the devotion of extra time to new projects.

Faithfully yours,

(Signed)

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

Yes, I have written you - at length. Even if the letter had to be forwarded, you should have had it by the time you wrote me. I sent you a whole raft of letters collected during the process of publishing the Redding and Smith pieces on the Southern Regional Council. Besides that, I sent you proofs of your piece last Thursday, and I hope they will not be held up too long.

We will not actually be on the presses before November 19 or 20, and there would be a slight chance that I could work in additional material in your piece if I hold space open for it on the last page. It would have to go in, however, as a postscript to the article; there would not even be a slight chance of incorporating it within the body of the piece.

Mr. Couch's letter passes comprehension, but I suppose Common Ground's point of view is equally incomprehensible to him. What shocks me most deeply, I think, is his query as to whether anything is right or wrong. If the traditional southern patterns of segregation result in this fuzziness of mind, nothing could be a sharper indictment of the system.

Cordially yours,

Margaret Anderson

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

1945

S

The Members Meet . . . .

The recent annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council marked a forward step in the life of movements designed to make human relations democratic in the South. Paradoxical as it may seem race relations movements seldom have been democratic in their structure and function. In the past they operated in two ways: first, they relied very heavily upon the one-man type of leadership, one person being a spokesman for each race; second, they leaned very heavily upon the wisdom and wishes of a select few whose actions were either supported or repudiated. Today, more so than ever before, the wishes of the many become the foundation stone of action in the field of race relations. As we have implied, this is a very significant index to the changing character of movements in race relations, and if the Southern Regional Council's Member Meeting may be regarded as indicative of any trend at all it does reflect a growing desire on the part of people to face situations frankly, collectively, and fearlessly.

The executives of the Council were heartened by the courage and forthrightness with which chronic and acute problems of southern life were introduced. True, SRC members did not possess all of the information, hold to all of the beliefs, decide on every action that would make living utopian, but they did make a light for ways that have been dark. No phase of relations between the races was ignored in discussion. The members realized, however, the mighty potency of words and stultifying effect of fear in furthering or arresting any program they might undertake. Though our emotions were quickened with reports of "incidents" of sex and race, of injustices, of official lethargy and community inactivity, our reason was challenged with programs of correction, amelioration, even the complete undoing of ways that had perpetuated an undemocratic South. We met to find ways of doing something more about and with all of these people, communities, and problems. We stuck to our last.

Above all, perhaps, this achievement seems outstanding—we learned to discuss all of our ills without venom and emotional distress; we made new covenants and resolutions, openly arrived at. And though the SRC's diagnosis of the South is not yet complete, the organization's therapy for what is known continues. There is abundant life in the membership of the Southern Regional Council. That gives us hope.

Authorize . . . .

The Executive Directors, in their reports offered several suggestions and recommendations on the program of the Council during the coming year. The procedures authorized were:

1. The Organization of State Divisions of the Council

As soon as there are one hundred members of the Council in a given state, they will be organized as a nucleus for action on the state level. The by-laws and policies of such divisions would, of course, have to be in harmony with those of the Council.

2. A Series of South-wide Conferences

Within the limits of the budget and with the advice of the Executive Committee, the SRC will sponsor several important annual conferences. One would be a conference for the leaders of the state and local interracial committees. Another would be a strategy conference of the leaders of the major agencies working on problems of the South within the framework of the Council's interests. Still another would be a conference of religious leaders in programs of social action, with particular emphasis, perhaps, on the women's divisions of the various church bodies.

3. A Series of State-wide Race Relations Institutes or Forums

Each of these would run from three to five days and would attempt to reach a better cross-section of the public than is usually reached by such meetings. The Department of Race Relations of the American Missionary Association is preparing to promote a series of institutes and has asked the Council to share in their planning and sponsorship.

4. Special Visiting Committee

The officers of the Council, or such other groups as the Executive Committee might choose, are authorized to seek private conferences with as many Southern governors as possible in the next three months. Their discussions will not be confined to race relations, but will include the main problems of social and economic welfare in the South.

5. Civil Rights Committees

From time to time arise cases which the SRC might well handle for the protection of the civil rights of citizens in the region. The central staff cannot undertake to investigate personally all such cases. Therefore, the Council members approved the establishment of Civil Rights Committees in all our thirteen states. Each committee might be composed of five Council members and a legal advisor who may or may not be a member of the Council, and the duty of these Committees would be to advise the Executive Directors and the Executive Committee as to what action the Council should take in cases involving civil rights.

6. Youth Work

The Council authorized the taking of steps that would permit youth direct participation in the Council or the sponsoring of some sort of auxiliary or correlated youth division of the Council.

7. Study of Police Systems

One of the most urgent needs in the South is reform of police training and administration. Along with its program of promoting improvement wherever it can, the Council authorized the sponsorship of a comprehensive study of Southern police systems in cooperation with one or more universities. An approach of this sort would permit the Council to embark on a program which would not necessarily be tied in with the race question, yet would permit the treatment and analysis of a problem that is closely allied with race tensions.

8. Study of Segregation and Discrimination

The Council authorized the drawing of plans for a comprehensive study to be carried on throughout the South in the field of legal discrimination and segregation. It is proposed that ameliorative action be based upon a study of the facts as to the human and economic costs of segregation and discrimination. Such a study should provide useful material for molding public opinion on the question of equal opportunity. This study would be preceded by a conference on the subject of segregation and discrimination.

9. Primary Test Case

The Council authorized the Board of Directors to proceed with a legal test of the applicability of the Supreme Court decision in Smith vs. Allwright in the State of Georgia if it appears that no such case is already under way.

And Resolve for 1945

1. General Resolutions

We believe that every effort must be made to prepare the people of the South for the returning Negro and white soldiers. The problems which are arising already as they come back from active service or are demobilized into civilian life call for prompt and constructive action on local, state, regional, and national levels.

With a view to encouraging the returning Negro soldiers to have faith that the democratic principles for which they have fought are to be translated into reality, we recommend:

1. Employment of all persons on the basis of ability, with due regard for seniority rights.
2. Abolition of the white primary where it exists.
3. Extension of the growing practice of employing Negro policemen and firemen in Southern cities and equal treatment of members of both races by the police and the courts.
4. Equalization of educational opportunity and of pay for teachers of both races.
5. Extension of publicly financed low cost housing.
6. Increased publicly financed medical and dental care available to both races on an equal basis.
7. That equal accommodations for Negroes as provided under the law, be actually provided on all public transportation facilities, and that discriminatory practices now common in travel be abolished.

2. Post War Employment

The Southern Regional Council realizes the importance of encouraging and planning for an effective program of full employment in every Southern community.

We, therefore, urge that such planning include the initiation and maintenance of an effective public employment service which within its ranks and among employers will promote the effective utilization of all workers in terms of their skills and training, without regard to their race, color, or creed.

We recommend that equal and effective opportunities for the technical and vocational training of Negroes be made available.

We recommend the creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to promote the non-discriminatory use of manpower.

3. Education

In the seventeen states and the District of Columbia which require separation of the races in their public school systems, continuing and substantial differences in the public schools for white and Negro children prevail despite requirements of educational statutes, that separate and uniform school facilities be established and maintained. These differences are reflected in the buildings and equipment, in the length of the school day, in the teacher-pupil loads, in the per-pupil expenditure, in the investments in public school property, and in teachers' salaries.

Recognizing the necessity and continuing obligation to establish equality of educational opportunity for all in order to further the establishment of a sound economy in the Southern region, and recognizing the opportunities inherent in the post-war plans for school improvements now developing in communities within these states, we accept the principles that:

1. There should exist and be available for Negro children the same types of educational opportunities as there are for white children.
2. The teacher-pupil ratio in Negro schools should be as low as that in schools for white children.
3. The length of the school day should be the same for the Negro child as it is for the white child.
4. The same types of physical accommodations and facilities in the public schools should exist and be available for Negro children as are available for white children.

We recommend these principles for the consideration of all law-abiding citizens, and responsible school officials in Southern communities, and urge, in behalf of the common welfare, that action be taken to make these principles operative in all plans for public school improvements.

4. Homer P. Rainey and the University of Texas

The Southern Regional Council wishes to protest the dismissal of Dr. Homer P. Rainey as President of the University of Texas. The Council believes this is a startling infringement of personal and academic freedom, and a severe blow to those Southern persons and agencies working for democratic rights.

The Southern Regional Council believes in Dr. Rainey because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his close association with us in the formation of SRC which he now serves as Vice-President. The Council commends him for the stand he has taken, and applauds those Texas citizens and those students and faculty members at the University of Texas who gave him such unqualified support.

SRC Reports for 1948

The fifth annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council will take place in Atlanta on November 10th.

The meeting will begin promptly at 10:30 A. M. in the Exhibition Room of the Library Building of Atlanta University. Registration will begin at 10 A. M.

As was the case last year, the meeting will be largely devoted to planning SRC policies and program for the coming year. In order to eliminate the necessity for lengthy review of the past year's activities, this issue of NEW SOUTH is given over to reports of the staff and of State Divisions and Affiliates of the Council. Members are urged to familiarize themselves with these reports before the annual meeting.

By George S. Mitchell
Executive Director, Southern Regional Council

NINETEEN forty-eight is the fifth year of the Council's life. The thoughtful Southerners who launched the Council had a rounded plan for the organization. It was to link up again the activities of the various State interracial committees, tying them in to the Council and to the Council's general program; it was to build a substantial membership throughout the South; it was to provide at its central office a research service which would have full-time professional persons giving guidance to the South in its agriculture, industry, health, education, and welfare, and through its state and local organization was to stimulate action in alleviation of poverty, prejudice, and injustice.

In five years a good deal has been done. We are closely tied to statewide organizations, interracial in character, in every Southern State except three (Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Arkansas), and we have active membership and some local organization in two of the missing three. Membership has grown from some 800, who joined in the first year, to 2700, with another 2000 whom we reach indirectly through State Committees.

We have pulled together the main facts about people in the South, and have published them in a notable series of pamphlets. These delimit our problems in the fields of population, industrialization, health, education, our changing agriculture, housing, and the ballot. We have put out many other useful if less comprehensive pamphlets, and we have provided in the old Southern Frontier and more lately in New South a monthly flow of information and comment on happenings good and bad throughout the region. We have answered questions coming in in every mail for all this while; we have provided speakers for uncounted local meetings; and we have set before local discussion groups the text material which made the meetings fruitful. Still, our research and information job has been way below what is fairly expected of us, and in getting corrective action we have doubtless been disappointing to many of our warmest supporters.

More information better presented is a matter of money. Action is a matter of organization. Therefore our two great needs are more and stabler support and more of our present kind of useful members.

Since the last Annual Meeting we have built upon the good foundations laid earlier. In getting our work into the States we have seen the Alabama Division, newly launched in November, 1947, achieve status. In Tennessee a new Division is off to a promising start. General membership has grown by a few hundred. With more time and money to spend on cultivation we could have had a larger growth in membership. In publications we have done five significant documents, and are well on the way to getting out three others. The five that have seen print are:

Publications

Housing in the South, by Helen Bridgman.

"To Secure These Rights", a Digest of the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

The Condition of Our Rights. A textlet to accompany the Digest, instancing from the files the kind of problems the South is up against in this field.

Race and Suffrage in the South Since 1940, by Luther P. Jackson.

"An Honest Answer in the Civil Rights Controversy", a statement by the Executive Committee of the Council, adopted September 15, 1948.

The things now in preparation are:

A Manual for the Small Community Self-Survey.

A Manual for newspapermen on the handling of race in the news.

A Revision of Economic Value of the Negro to the South, newly titled The Negro in Our Economy.

A review of Southern legislation on tenure of farm land, and recommendations for improvements.

We have during the year printed a number of lesser items, and we have had gratifying proof in newspaper comment of the effectiveness of New South in getting public attention put onto particular problems at particular times.

Human and Civil Rights

The Council was principal sponsor to a Southwide Meeting on Human and Civil Rights, which took place in Atlanta in February of this year. Over 300 people came from 11 States and 72 separate communities. The meeting had the cooperation of a variety of church and civic bodies from over the South. It set before those present the task of getting the South informed on a question which it was foreseen would be hotly discussed. Those who came were put through the main items of the Report, were given opportunity for discussion and recommendations, and were urged to make themselves available for follow-up discussion meetings in their home towns. We have received written reports of some 58 meetings on this subject which have taken place since, and in which people who were at the February

A Year of Effort 'To Secure These Rights' in the South

By Mrs. M. E. Tilly
Field Secretary

SERVING on the President's Committee on Civil Rights brought upon me certain obligations and responsibilities and a compulsion I could not evade to become a crusader "to secure these rights" of our Constitution for the peoples of our nation. The Southern Regional Council and the Church have furnished the avenues for the crusading.

The year 1948 has been for me one of travel by auto, bus, train, and plane into thirty States of our Union, teaching, speaking at Conferences, leading forums for college, civic, and church groups. While the travel has been extensive, by far the larger part of my time has been spent with groups in the South — as I wanted it to be.

Just to think back over the thousands of miles traveled, the audiences faced, makes me dizzy. "For work to do and strength to do it, I thank my God."

Southern Evolution

Just what has been accomplished by all this travel, this teaching, and much speech-making, I cannot tell. The South is in the throes of an evolution and in its midst the Southern Regional Council seeks to bring understanding where there is confusion. As one of its representatives, I have tried to carry out my part of the responsibility.

In all groups in the South and elsewhere I have spoken, I have found sympathetic listeners. The opposition only arises when the field of economics is touched. We have seen that the "Right to Equal Opportunity" is an area where "man's inhumanity to man" is most frequently met. After all, our basic problem is one of economics.

Two trips brought about the organization of the Alabama Division of the Council, and it is now a healthy, growing organization.

The Mississippi Division is also becoming stronger. The Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation, our affiliated committee, has taken much of my time. It is very active against the wrongs that beset the State.

I did not meet with the Texas Committee on Interracial Cooperation, another affiliated state committee, but did have a conference with some members of its executive committee while I was in Dallas this summer teaching a few days at Southern Methodist University.

All of these State Divisions and Committees are hampered in their programs by lack of funds.

Respect and Cooperation

In his speech for American Brotherhood Week, President Truman said, "National unity and strength depend upon the willingness of men of all creeds, races, and national origins in America to respect one another's rights and to cooperate as citizens in all areas of common conviction, concern, and responsibility."

Hard upon this speech came Hodding Carter's statement, perhaps truthfully, that H-A-T-E is Public Enemy Number One of our nation. The task of all of us who make up the membership and the working force of the Council is to endeavor to bring about the cooperation of all citizens "in all areas of common conviction, concern, and responsibility" — and thus transform hate into understanding. To this end I have worked.

DEADLINE FOR RESOLUTIONS

Members are reminded that copies of all proposed resolutions must be submitted to the Standing Committee on Resolutions not later than 12 o'clock noon on the day of the annual meeting. Members of the Committee on Resolutions are Mr. Marion A. Wright, Mrs. W. H. Borders, and Dr. Forrester B. Washington.

Field Work—Past and Future

By Mrs. Henry Havens
Field Secretary

As one of your Field Secretaries, I am again afforded the opportunity of submitting to you an annual report. In my report last year, I presented certain objectives, activities, observations, and conclusions; and I offered a recommendation. In reviewing this past year, it is noted that these remain the same, with few exceptions. It is on these exceptions I will now report, with the hope that you will remember the various routine matters contained in last year's accounting to you; recalling that it is slow, gradual building which will insure a sound, enduring regional structure.

New Division

One of the major objectives accomplished during the year was the organizing of our new Tennessee Division, in April. From the report of the Division Chairman, you will see what a splendid organization has emerged and the promising future which faces them. There is a great deal of work to be done, but already interest is awakening among local groups and other Tennessee organizations. The newly appointed officers of the Division are vigorously prosecuting a membership drive to bring the many people already doing similar work, but not SRC members, into the Division, thereby strengthening the efforts of all in Tennessee. This has taken a great deal of travel, time, and correspondence.

My other activities have been based primarily upon the conclusions in my report of last year; viz, to get local committees together, with specific objectives which appeal to all people. This has meant attendance at all types of meetings, and numerous conference with individuals and planning groups. Our local committees are growing in number, but not yet fast enough. Again, I say to you, it is my firm conviction that the Southern Regional Council cannot hope to succeed in its entirety, until our program is fully recognized, and accepted, on these local levels.

Another project was to seek the support of certain religious groups for our program. This has been done in various ways: by participating in panels, workshops, and conferences; and, by appealing to these groups to give financial as well as moral support to SRC at work in their respective states; and by urging them to use our material in their study courses. This field has only been touched and will require much greater emphasis from the region and states, both white and Negro. The pulpit is often spoken of as the "spirit of the South", and appropriately should be.

After three years of intensive participation in this work, it is my studied conclusion that the time has come when we who have created SRC and carried its message throughout this great Southland should stop and take stock of the situation now facing us. As we stand today, we have formulated an approach to the Southern dilemma, and we know some of the answers. SRC is nationally accepted as a dignified, responsible source of authentic information regarding the intricacies of racial contact and life in the South. To maintain our position and expand our ambitions in this field, we must analyze and recognize our financial situation.

What of the Future?

To date our plans have been made possible through the generosity of foundation grants, aided by the dues and contributions of SRC members and friends. But, what of the future? Reference to our financial reports shows that our grants from foundations are rapidly nearing the end of the road. How can we continue to build this structure? The answer is obvious: we need materiel and personnel. Must this great movement stop? No, most certainly not! Let us look at the patterns evolved by other like eleemosynary groups engaged in similar endeavors, and build our own financial foundation.

Atlanta Office Activities in 1948

By Mrs. Agnes McKoy
Secretary-Treasurer

Like a fond parent who measures his offspring against the door jamb each year on his birthday, we in the Atlanta office begin diligently at this time of year to gather our figures on each activity, trying as best we can to measure the growth and development of the Council, to test the extent of its effectiveness, and to assess its progress.

Net membership increase gives the answer to growth, and our 390 increase for 1948 indicates a gain of new members at more than one per day. Total membership is now 2,666.

Information Requests

Requests for information come in at the rate of almost 4 per week, totalling at this point 190. These requests derive from 34 different States (20 of them outside the Region), from the District of Columbia, and from Hawaii, Holland, Germany, and Scotland. Among our correspondents 102 sought information concerning the Council itself. Of the rest, the greatest number were concerned with the problems of prejudice and racial discrimination. Others wanted to know about community organization, education, civil rights, the use of Negro police, farm tenancy, and rural public welfare in the South.

One of our Council members studying in Scotland, and another, temporarily in Hawaii, wanted material for lectures on the South which they had been asked to give.

It is a rare day, indeed, when we do not receive a sheaf of orders for literature. A total of 1,175 such orders has been filled since January 1st, with materials going to all but five of our 48 States, as well as to three correspondents in Canada and one in England. Canadian orders, one of them from the Ministry of Education, were for our anthology of Negro poetry, Singers in the Dawn, and for a collection of Negro spirituals. The order from England came from the Science Museum Library at London, and requested a complete set of our pamphlets.

Heaviest orders in this country were for our Digest of the Report of the President's Committee, To Secure These Rights. 10,300 of these have been distributed since February, including approximately 3,000 sent to our own members and subscribers. Almost 1,000 copies of our companion study, The Condition of Our Rights, have gone out on orders alone. America's Tenth Man and Singers in the Dawn continue to be favorites, with Wanted: A Healthy South; Wanted: An Educated South; Machines in the Cotton Field; the Negro Police issue of New South; Housing in the South; and Race and Suffrage in the South since 1940 continuing in steady demand.

Following release by the Executive Committee last month of its statement on the civil rights issue, and the wide newspaper comment which it evoked, a steady stream of requests for full copies of this statement is making itself felt here in the office. These are as yet uncounted.

Pamphlet Distribution

The total number of pamphlets distributed this year has reached a peak of 61,175, of which approximately 36,000 went to our own members and subscribers. Receipts for literature reflect this heavy volume of distribution, totalling for the first six months of 1948 almost double the receipts for the same period of 1947.

The foregoing figures indicate the heavy volume of mail which is passing through the Atlanta office; correspondence concerned with orders for literature and requests for information; with members, both old and new; the issuance of dues notices, and notices of meetings; and the shipment of orders and New South. 36,000 mailings a year are required for the latter alone. The postage meter registers more than 53,000 pieces for 1948, and, to this, stamped mail adds another thousand or so pieces.

Reaching the Public in the News

By Harold C. Fleming
Director of Information

ANY organization which, like SRC, attempts to influence public opinion must hope that its work will command attention from the press. That is not always easy. Calm, objective studies, temperate statements, and everyday efforts to bring about wholesome local change are not spectacular. As The Christian Science Monitor wrote of the Executive Committee's recent statement on civil rights: "It is one of the tragedies and failures of communications that thoughtful statements such as this, which deal with solutions, find it difficult to command the attention rendered flamboyant speeches and violent events, which reflect only the difficulties, the stresses and strains, the heat rather than the light."

A Wide Public

In spite of this obstacle, the Council's work during the past year has had a gratifying amount of attention in both news and editorial columns. A great part of the explanation is that many Southern newspapermen have come to know and respect the Council and to recognize the news value of its constructive approach. Newspaper editors, white and Negro, and editors of the major news services have made it possible for reports and activities of the Council to reach a wide public. Mr. Alfred Mynders, chairman of the Tennessee Division, has given invaluable help in this respect. The Council has also benefited from the excellent reporting of Mr. Bem Price of the Associated Press, whose stories about SRC have appeared in hundreds of newspapers in the South and elsewhere. Mr. John Popham, Southeastern correspondent for The New York Times, has written some of the most thorough and informative stories about the Council's work ever to appear in print.

Perhaps the publicity which yielded the most direct results was that given the Council's facts about employment of Negro policemen. The findings of our survey last fall were widely carried in newspapers over the South. A number of papers editorialized, on the basis of the findings, on the wisdom of employing Negro policemen in their respective cities. Organizations presented the data to their city officials, to other civic groups, and to influential civic leaders. As a result, the Council was able to help significantly in bringing about an increased employment of Negro officers in the South during the year.

Similarly, the Council was able to contribute to better understanding of human and legal rights, so sorely needed in the region. The Southwide Meeting on Human and Civil Rights, held in February, got remarkably wide and thorough newspaper coverage. The comprehensive statement on civil rights issued last month by the Executive Committee was even more widely played, not only in the South but in the rest of the nation as well. Two Southern papers — The Chattanooga Times and The Birmingham News — ran the 2700-word text in full. The statement drew excellent editorial comment from such responsible papers as the two just mentioned, The Asheville Citizen-Times, The Christian Science Monitor, and The New York Times.

Periodic Reports

In addition to this major notice, there has been a steady stream of factual reporting of and comment about the Council's periodic reports on the South's needs and progress in the broad fields of housing, health, suffrage, and the community self-survey. These facts have been noted not only in the large daily newspapers but also in many specialized publications — the religious, labor, and race-relations press and house organs of various organizations. It should be mentioned, too, that many of the State Divisions and Affiliates have successfully sought the cooperation of the press in their localities.

With continued good fortune in public relations, we can hope to spread throughout the region a greater awareness of Southern problems and a more earnest desire to solve them.

This Is Kentucky—Legislative Gains

By J. Mansir Tydings
Chairman, Kentucky Division

War-time radio reports beginning with, "This is London," often brought good news of the progress of the War, and, more often than we liked, news that was not good. Now we feel that all such news was designed to improve home morale and strengthen our determination to win.

These are times of war — the War of Ideas. If America's big idea — Democracy — is suffering defeats on its Southern front it may be needful to boost morale by reporting victories of the positive kind. But it would also be dishonest to claim even satisfactory progress.

The Kentucky Division of the Southern Regional Council has some most significant progress to report on the legislative front — particularly as regards Negro education and health.

Negro Education

During the 1948 sessions of the General Assembly, appropriations for the Negro schools operated by the State were substantially increased. Although such gains happily serve the present needs of the present generation, they should be honestly appraised as the result of a common fear and a belief that better schools for Negroes will assuage their desire to enroll in the white university. The real progress in education for Negroes in Kentucky should be measured in terms of a fact, now universally recognized, that the State has a legal and a moral obligation to provide an equal educational opportunity for all the children of the State.

The Legislature also granted an increase in the amount allowed Negro students to subsidize their enrollment in courses available in colleges out of the State, if such courses are provided for white students within the State. This was a most welcome relief to many.

In the meantime a contractual arrangement has been made between the University of Kentucky and Kentucky State College for Negroes which has the legal endorsement of the Attorney General. This plan provides that courses offered at the University, but not included in the curriculum of the Negro College, will be offered at the College under the instruction of a qualified professor from the University. Laboratory work will be conducted at the University at a time convenient to the professor. Negro students now making application for enrollment at the University are being requested to accept enrollment at the Negro College under the above plan.

New Plan Resented

There has been considerable resentment to this request because the new plan closes the doors of educational opportunities of proven worth and established prestige heretofore open to Negro students. It is to be hoped that the present sentiment against Negroes attending the University will change as their presence in laboratories at the University becomes a common sight to white students and instructors who seem to be even now more liberally inclined than are the public policy makers.

Just as "all roads lead to Rome", so do all blocks to biracial education in Kentucky lead to the Day Law which requires segregated instruction in both private and public schools. During the 1948 General Assembly, an attempt was made to repeal the Day law. However, it was, by a resolution passed in the House, referred to the Assembly's new Legislative Research Council for study, with a request that recommendations be presented to the 1950 General Assembly. While the controversy over the repeal of the Day law was in process, the Kentucky Division presented a bill (HB 447) which required that the Day law "shall not be construed to prohibit the giving of instruction in nursing, medicine, surgery, or other related courses of graduate grade or on a professional level, within any hospital, if the governing body of the hospital, by a majority vote of its members, so elects." This modification of the Day law was enacted by the unanimous vote of both Houses.

The Kentucky Division has appointed a committee to study ways to implement the new act, and to cooperate in every way possible with hospitals in the State where nurse training is offered. In Louisville the committee has been joined in its efforts by the Urban League. Now, in less than a year after the passage of H. B. 447, Negro girls, for the first time in Kentucky, are receiving nurse training in fully accredited hospitals, and Negro doctors are obtaining post-graduate instruction. A Catholic hospital in Lexington and another in Louisville were the first to open their doors.

Another act of legislation sponsored by the Kentucky Division, which also unanimously passed both Houses, was an increase in the appropriation for the Red Cross Hospital from $4,000 to $30,000 per year. And this has made their nurse training program possible.

Other attempts at legislative action were not so successful, but are still in the realm of possibility through executive order. These included: (1) more adequate supervision for Negro schools, (2) the creation of an experiment station for Negro farmers, and (3) a permanent Commission to study the needs of Negro citizens.

The Kentucky Division has a Committee on Civil Rights which attended the Atlanta Conference in February. It has been generally felt that effective work for the recognition of civil rights must be approached on the community level. There is a real need for techniques and instructions for local leadership in conducting community self-appraisal clinics. The Louisville Community Clinic, which was sponsored by the Kentucky Division, has been productive of good results. The idea behind the nurse training legislation was originated at the Clinic, and only recently another recommendation was carried out by the City of Louisville, where a course of study in race relations for the Police Department was conducted. Also the Louisville Public Library now admits Negroes for the first time.

The Kentucky Division also has a Press Committee which sends out timely SRC releases to a mailing list of editors throughout the State.

A very valuable innovation has been the Division's Inter-Group Relations Ad-

Alabama Division Builds Organization

By A. D. Beittel
Chairman, Alabama Division

The Alabama Division of the Southern Regional Council came into being at a meeting held October 31, 1947 at State Teachers College, Montgomery, Alabama. Mrs. M. E. Tilly and Miss Margaret Price from the Atlanta Office attended the meeting. At this meeting the following officers were elected:

Chairman, A. D. Beittel, President of Talladega College.

Vice-Chairman, H. Council Trenholm, President of Ala. State Teachers College.

Secretary, Mrs. J. McLeod, Methodist church woman of Brundidge, Ala.

Treasurer, Robert Durr, editor of the Birmingham Weekly Review.

A meeting of these officers was held in Montgomery on December 16, 1947, at which meeting plans were made to set up an Executive Committee and an Advisory Council and a canvass was made of persons to serve on the Executive Committee and the Advisory Council.

A meeting of the Alabama Division was held at State Teachers College on February 17, 1948, with morning and afternoon sessions. The program consisted of the following speakers:

Mr. Nelson Jackson of the National Urban League discussed the various undertakings of the Urban League in the South.

Mrs. M. E. Tilly of the Central Office discussed the report of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights.

Mr. Herman Long of the American Missionary Association Race Relations Institute at Fisk University made an interesting presentation of the Community Self-Survey.

Dr. George Mitchell of the Atlanta Office told of the history, growth, program

S. C. Division Sets Up Local Groups

By J. M. Dabbs
Chairman, S. C. Division

The health of the South Carolina Division of SRC is indicated, first, by an increase in membership of 82 during the past year. These new members have come both from communities which have local organizations of SRC, and from the State at large.

The amount collected in dues and contributions also indicates the health of the organization. For the past twelve months, this amount is as follows: Dues retained by the South Carolina Division (i. e., one-half of the total dues collected), $178.50; contributions, $628.50; total, $807.00. Among the contributions were one of $200 and three of $100.

Executive Secretary

These achievements were made possible most of all by the devoted work of our efficient executive secretary, Mrs. Alice N. Spearman. At considerable sacrifice to herself, she has, in addition to writing innumerable letters, gone up and down the State visiting individuals, conferring with groups, and in general stimulating an interest in the Southern Regional Council.

This brings us to the work that the South Carolina Division has done in addition to the ground-work of getting new members and soliciting contributions. Perhaps most important were the two meetings held in Columbia on the civil rights issue. The first of these was held in conjunction with the annual spring meeting on April 29; the second as a follow-up meeting, about two weeks later, in conjunction with a meeting of the Columbia chapter of the Southern Regional Council.

The most interesting part of these meetings were panel discussions on the various aspects of civil rights. There were many questions and much discussion from the floor. The most hotly debated question was on the advisability of advocating at the present time an educational requirement for voting. The division on this question was so sharp and evenly balanced that neither of the conferences adopted any resolution upon it. There were probably 100 people present at each of these conferences.

In addition to these two meetings in Columbia, there have been smaller ones at other places in the State. At one of these, a meeting of the Spartanburg unit in October, 1947, J. M. Dabbs, the state chairman, spoke. Mr. Dabbs has also spoken during the past year to the student body of Harbison Junior College, for Negroes, at Irmo, S. C.; to the student body of the Mather Academy, also for Negroes, at Camden; and to the annual convention of the S. C. Baptist Student Union.

Mrs. Spearman, our executive secretary, has worked closely with chairmen of standing committees, following conferences with committee members and widely representative groups of citizens, in developing comprehensive statements of short and long range needs in the fields of education, health, recreation, and law enforcement in South Carolina. These statements were given wide distribution to individuals, agencies, and organizations concerned with some aspect of meeting these needs.

More Local Chapters

Throughout the year, the executive secretary has met and worked closely with local chapters in creating a more active membership and in expanding the programs of these groups. Two local groups are in process of working out affiliation agreements with the State Division, and ground-work is being done in six other counties, which we believe will soon be ready to form local chapters.

In addition to speaking before these local groups, the executive secretary has presented the work of the Council to men's service clubs, women's clubs, and church groups. She participated in annual conferences of a number of Southwide and statewide organizations.

Considerable work has been done by committees, a little of which will be

The Work for Justice in Mississippi

By H. Brent Schaeffer
Chairman, Mississippi Division

Among its activities of the past year, the Mississippi Division of SRC cites the following:

Distribution in cooperation with the Atlanta office of:

A pamphlet on housing in Mississippi.

A leaflet on employment of Negro police.

A leaflet on The Negro Press by Editor Robert Durr of the Birmingham Weekly Review.

A leaflet on bloc voting.

2,000 copies of a pamphlet entitled "White Mississippi Citizens Have the Character and the Courage to Give Negro Citizens Fair and Full Rights as Citizens" were printed and mailed January first to every member of the Mississippi Legislature, all public school superintendents, college presidents, newspaper publishers and editors, and county supervisors. (In spite of its apparent ineffectiveness and the hurtful political activities in the state in regard to civil rights legislation, the chairman still believes the title holds true.)

A request for a hearing by the Committees on Education of the State Legislature signed by fifty prominent white citizens for the purpose of emphasizing the need of more adequate provision for Negro education was presented personally to the chairman of the Committee of the House of Representatives. He promised to arrange it. Even though two reminders were sent him, no hearing was granted.

Urge Special Session

Upon the approval of the Executive Committee and a great majority of the membership, the chairman sent a communication to Governor Fielding L. Wright advocating the calling of a special session of the Legislature during the summer or fall "for the purpose of giving full and unhurried consideration to the development of Negro education and related problems of Negro citizenship and taking positive action to establish in attitude and deed the rights which our constitution and laws provide." No acknowledgment was received.

Comments on the present situation in Mississippi:

The efforts of the Division and kindred organizations and groups have been made fruitless apparently over against the rabid and rampant sentiment and turmoil stirred up by the state's political leaders and the great number of citizens who are opposed to giving the Negro citizen fair and just consideration. All who have eyes open to see know the Negro is going to "secure these rights." The persistent, blatant effort to prevent such development fosters Negro antagonism and rivalry which will result in bringing about the very things the white leaders say they are trying to avoid.

Problem of Politics

The personal position of the chairman and his official relationship with SRC prevent any political connection or activity. The subjects of civil and human rights and race relations have been injected into politics to such an extent that efforts in behalf of fair and right solutions, as we accept them, are made difficult.

Negro voting is growing apace, and this is resulting in street paving in Negro sections, promises and activities in providing better educational and recreational facilities for Negroes, etc.

The Mississippi Division has acquired 33 new members during the year and has received $520.00 into its treasury — an increase of $260.00 over the previous year.

At the annual meeting in October, Dean F. J. Welch of Mississippi State College will speak on "Acre Utilization," and Dr. Felix Underwood, Executive Officer of the Mississippi State Board of Health, will speak on the state hospitalization program, with special reference to provisions for Negro patients.

Tennessee Forms Strong New Division

By Alfred Mynders
Chairman, Tennessee Division

At a meeting on April 15, 1948, in Nashville, the Tennessee Division of the Southern Regional Council was formed. President Paul D. Williams, of the SRC, addressed the meeting and Mrs. Henry Havens, of the Southern Regional Council staff, outlined the nucleus which had already been formed for the Division and which has been functioning for some years.

Alfred Mynders, editor of The Chattanooga Times, was elected chairman and was authorized to complete the organization for the Division.

A constitution, patterned somewhat on the lines of the constitution for the Florida Division, was submitted to the total membership, now nearly 200, for approval and was declared adopted.

Officers and Board

The organization was announced Sunday, August 29th, by Mr. Mynders and the story was carried in all of the large papers in Tennessee and on the Associated Press.

The following accepted appointment:

Vice Chairman, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, who is also a director of the Southern Regional Council;

Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. C. B. Smith, of Donelson, Tennessee, an officer in the Tennessee Conference of the Women's Society of Christian Service of the Methodist Church.

The executive board members are:

Edward F. Barry, attorney and civic leader of Memphis;

Dr. William E. Cole, professor of Sociology of the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, who is also a director of the Southern Regional Council;

Bishop Edmund P. Dandridge, head of the Tennessee Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church;

Rabbi Abraham Feinstein, of the Ochs Memorial Temple, of Chattanooga;

The Very Reverend George J. Flanigen, pastor of St. Peter and Paul Church of Chattanooga;

Dr. Z. A. Looby, attorney, of Nashville, Tennessee, who is also a director of the Southern Regional Council;

Rabbi Julius S. Mark, of the Vine Street Temple of Nashville who accepted membership on the executive board, has since been called to Temple Emanuel in New York City;

Dr. L. L. Patton, physician and civic worker of Chattanooga, who also accepted membership, died after a brief illness late in August.

The chairman of the Tennessee Division regrets that because the Division was formed at the beginning of one of the most bitter political campaigns in the history of the State, he was unable to visit the various units throughout the State. Mrs. Henry Havens, has made several visits to Tennessee since the formation of the Division and her knowledge of the membership and of its functions is gratefully recognized by the officers of the Tennessee Division.

While the state division is new, the Southern Regional Council in Tennessee is not new. It has been functioning with great success for a number of years.

Wide Membership

The membership is scattered throughout the State, in small towns as well as in the large cities. Dr. Cole has helped unify the membership in Upper East Tennessee and Mrs. Smith, secretary and treasurer, has been doing a similar service in her travels for the Methodist Church throughout Middle Tennessee.

The vice chairman of the Tennessee Division, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, conducted another of the nationally known institutes on human relations at Fisk University during the summer. This outstanding institute is one of the most valuable contributions for harmony among peoples now being made anywhere in the United States.

The state division was able to take a part in a notable change in Memphis which came in September. Commissioner of Police, Joe Boyle, announced that Negro policemen would be tried out in Memphis. The state division of the Southern Regional Council had supplied the Council's admirable data on the value of Negro policemen to Commissioner Boyle and to our executive board member in Memphis, Mr. Edward F. Barry.

We have every reason to believe that this helped bring about the decision of Commissioner Boyle although we would not take away any of the credit from the Memphis Commercial Appeal for a fine campaign for Negro policemen in Memphis.

The state chairman considers removal of the barrier in Memphis one of the most important events for better relations that has occurred in the South in several years. It should be remembered that Memphis has the largest Negro population in proportion to total population of any city of the same size in the United States.

Furthermore, there have been charges, whether justified or not, that Memphis police have dealt harshly with Negro citizens in times past.

Interracial Harmony

The state chairman feels that great progress has been made in Tennessee in interracial harmony. The Negroes have enjoyed the vote in white primaries for years, and this is no longer a subject for comment.

There is a real movement on for equalization of teachers' salaries, and this has already been brought about in Chattanooga. Unfortunately, the payment of Negro teachers has not been marked by an equalization of school building facilities. It will require a great deal of money in Tennessee to provide Negro schools as well equipped as the white schools. But there is a sentiment for doing this.

The Tennessee Division was interested in the New South for August, 1948, in which there was an article on intercultural education. Progress has been made in the Tennessee Division on this important subject. Chattanooga, for instance, has an intercultural course in its public schools. In this course, both white and Negro pupils are taught the facts about other races.

The course has attracted nationwide at-

Fla. Division Follows Up Earlier Field Work

By Mrs. Warren Zeuch
Secretary, Fla. Div.

THE work of the Florida Division this year has been a follow-up of the field work done by the Division last year.

The Division has for the past two years worked with the Florida Citizens' Committee on Education, first in getting legislation passed to improve schools in Florida, and later in stimulating counties to seek the maximum aid possible under the laws which were passed. During this past year, members of the Division have continued to work on the county level with the Committee. Dr. William H. Gray, Vice-Chairman, is head of the Negro Division of the Florida Citizens' Committee on Education. He has been in touch with SRC members in counties where work needed to be done.

Division members in Jacksonville have worked on and with the Bi-Racial Continuation Committee of the Jacksonville Survey, helping to implement the recommendations of the Survey Committee. The progress of the Continuation Committee was reported in the May New South.

We are proud of the fact that the Florida Division has paid off the $400 debt which it owed the Council last year. Membership dues and contributions have supplied the necessary funds.

Work With Churches

The Division has worked with churches in Florida, especially with the Departments of Christian Social Relations. Mrs. William C. White, of St. Petersburg, SRC member and former field secretary of the Florida Division, taught classes on Civil Rights and Human Needs at a Methodist Young People's Conference at which 300 youths were registered. She also taught classes on civil rights, using SRC material, at each District Conference on Christian Social Relations of the Woman's Society of Christian Service of the Florida Methodist Conference. The Department of Christian Social Relations of the WSCS made a contribution of $100 to the Council last year. The Division also was influential in getting the Council placed in the budget of both Dioceses of the Episcopal Church of Florida.

Virginia's Progress in Race Relations

By Thomas C. Allen

Dr. R. B. Montgomery, President of the Virginia Council of Churches, recently announced the appointment of the Rev. C. Emerson Smith to succeed Dr. Thomas C. Allen as Director of the Department of Interracial Cooperation. Mr. Smith is a graduate of the University of Richmond and Union Theological Seminary. He comes to the Virginia Council from Hampton Institute, where he was an instructor in Bible and philosophy.

Progress continues to be made in Virginia in the area of race relations. The department of Interracial Cooperation of the Virginia Council of Churches has served as a coordinating force to give direction and guidance to many groups and organizations interested in the task of building good will and understanding in Negro-White relations. Virginia presents a pattern that is unique in the Southern Region, in that the over-all program of race relations is an integral part of the activities of the Council of Churches.

Health Facilities

The Council for Health and Medical Care is doing an excellent educational job that is beginning to gain wide support and no doubt played a part in constructive legislation enacted by the recent session of the General Assembly. Additional facilities for the care of the mentally ill were provided together with plans for increasing the capacity of the Piedmont Sanatorium (State Institution for Tubercular Negroes) by fifty beds. Plans have also been approved calling for the construction of an entirely new sanatorium in Eastern Virginia for Negro patients that would double the present facilities. Twenty-five additional medical scholarships were made available — five of which are for Negro students.

Law Enforcement

Negro policemen in four Virginia cities continue to do a most effective job. The number of men used is being gradually increased. It is to be hoped that other cities will follow the example and strengthen their law enforcement officers by the inclusion of Negro personnel.

Equalization of Educational Opportunity

The recent decision of Federal District Court Judge Sterling Hutcheson directing county school officials in the counties of Chesterfield, Gloucester, King George, and Surry to provide equal educational opportunities for all boys and girls has focused attention upon the need for larger and better educational facilities. In his decision the Judge pointed out four specifics in which educational opportunity is not equal: providing and maintaining buildings, equipment, bus transportation, and salaries. Efforts on the part of local school officials are being made to remove these inequalities.

It is significant to note that resolutions from some 33 counties and one city have been passed by school boards requesting the Governor to call a special session of the General Assembly to consider passage of necessary legislation to provide funds for greatly strengthening the public school program, and in particular to remove the existing inequalities. Thus far the Governor has been unwilling to issue a call for a special session on the basis that the necessary data to arrive at the actual needs were not available. Currently a 21-man Commission, authorized by the recent session of the General Assembly and recently appointed by the Governor to study the tax problem, is acknowledged to have as its chief assignment the discovery of ways and means of financing the equalization of public school facilities in Virginia. This Commission has set to work upon its task and has been urged by the Governor to proceed with promptness.

Suffrage

There is an awakened interest among the citizens of the state as to the use of the ballot. A number of factors are responsible, one of which is the realization on the part of those interested in equal opportunities for all people that greater use must be made of the vote. This is especially true on the part of Negro citizens. During the recent city elections in six Virginia cities, Negro citizens ran for the office of councilman. While in only one city — Richmond — was the candidate successful, the others received a goodly number of votes. For the first time since the turn of the century, Negro citizens are filling public offices.

Mr. William A. Lawrence was elected to the Board of Supervisors in Nansemond County during 1947. Mr. Oliver W. Hill was elected to the Council in the city of Richmond, June, 1948. Dr. H. T. Penn has been recently appointed to serve as a member of the school board in the city of Roanoke. It is also true that Negro citizens are asked to serve on committees and commissions at the local and state level.

Use of Public Facilities

The recent session of the General Assembly witnesses the first effort to repeal existing laws that expressly call for segregation of the races in public assembly and in the use of public transportation. Bills were introduced into the House of Delegates by the Richmond member, the Honorable W. H. C. Murray. The bills were referred to the Committee on Courts of Justice, before which two public hearings were held. The bills were killed in Committee. Both public hearings were well attended and much interest was manifested. (In concluding the hearing, Mr. Murray thanked the House Committee on Courts of Justice for the privilege of holding a non-segregated meeting of Virginia citizens in the interest of repealing state laws requiring that such public assembly meetings shall be segregated.)

Civil and Human Rights

Much interest has been expressed in the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. Many groups already

Texas Commission Works For Human Rights

By Mrs. James S. Crate
Chairman

The Texas Commission on Interracial Cooperation was organized in 1920 in the office of President R. E. Vinson of the University of Texas. It has continuously endeavored to foster interracial understanding and cooperation.

The Texas Commission is an Affiliate of the Southern Regional Council, and the Chairman was privileged to attend the Southwide Meeting on Human and Civil Rights which SRC sponsored in February. As a result, the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights was presented to and endorsed by the Executive Board of the Texas Commission, and telegrams requesting support of the recommendations were sent to Governor Beauford Jester of Texas, Senator McGrath, and the Texas congressmen in Washington. A review of the civil rights recommendations was given at the annual meeting of the Texas Council of Church Women, and the recommendations were adopted.

Other activities of the Texas Commission were as follows:

The Director of the State Training School for Highway Patrolmen was a speaker on the program of the annual meeting of the Texas Commission. The matter of ill treatment of Negroes on the highways was brought to his attention.

Penal Farms

The Texas Prison Commission was urged to include Negro penal farms in its investigations.

For years the Commission has worked for the establishment of the State Training School for Negro Girls. It is now a reality and one of the best such schools operating in the State. The superintendent gave a report on the School at the annual meeting of the Commission.

The Commission also maintains contact

For Greater Democracy in Georgia

By R. L. Russell
State Director, Ga. Committee on Interracial Cooperation

To list in concrete terms the work of the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation is almost impossible. It is difficult to put into words the hours of patient labor interpreting race relations to white groups, and at the same time getting Negro patience with the slow pace of progress.

The Committee has had no funds for legal action. It would have liked to institute suit on several occasions when there was serious infringement of rights of groups and individuals. But, because of a shortage of funds, that and many other tasks have been left undone.

Education in Democracy

Perhaps our best achievement has been in the field of educating the white people of the State to the fact that all are alike citizens and that any and all may be helpful citizens. It is true that we have a long way yet to go, but we must recognize that we have come a long way also.

One of the projects that has been worked at quietly and is now crowned with some success is that of getting white churches to open their doors to interracial meetings. For some years, only one white church in Atlanta would allow interracial meetings; today, there are seven or eight in Atlanta, and others of various denominations scattered over the State.

It took months of patient work with the Georgia Councils of Church Women until they truly became Council women of all races, faiths, and denominations. The Georgia Committee has an organized Committee of Churches on Race as an Issue in Political Campaigns. Through this committee, each denomination in the State has made its pronouncement, followed by similar statements by women's groups.

We have 23 local committees over the State. Although they are perhaps not always doing great work, at least the leaders of both races know each other and make a bulwark against outbursts of friction. We have memberships in over 200 localities in the State and connections in every town and community which we can reach in any emergency.

We have spent a great deal of our funds sending our workers into communities to learn the facts and build up sympathy and understanding for victims of hate and prejudice. When all else had failed, the Committee finally succeeded last fall in securing the release of three Negro children who were being held in jail because their father was suspected of a crime.

Three times this year, a member of the Committee has been in Washington conferring with the Attorney-General's office about the intimidations and activities of the Klan.

The opening of the Training School for Girls, Colored Division, came after long and persistent effort by the Georgia Committee. The Committee cooperated in forming a strong state committee of women from sixteen or more state organizations. Grand Juries were urged to make presentments on the need for the school, a statement was solicited from every juvenile court judge, and the group lobbied through two meetings of the Legislature. The establishment of the school, in the end, was a heartening reward for these efforts.

Recreation Centers

The matter of recreation has also been on our agenda for a long time. The Macon Committee is directly responsible for the establishment of the Booker T. Washington Center in that city. Conferences with mayors, commissioners, councilmen, and others have paved the way for similar institutions in Gainesville, Griffin, and Conyers. The Committee helped also in securing recreational projects in Atlanta and Fulton and DeKalb Counties. In Savannah, a community center will soon be opened as a direct project of the local committee there.

Progress—Actual and Potential—in N.C.

By Cyrus M. Johnson
Director, N. C. Commission on Interracial Cooperation

The noise of battle grows louder as the more crucial points are tested. So it is that as we move towards the opportunity for democratic participation by all of our population in the different phases of their existence, the noise will be loud and long. That is the case in the South today. We are moving into the realm where all are demanding their democratic right to help do things for themselves.

We have been fortunate in North Carolina in having less noise than some of our States. This might indicate that we have not gotten at the crucial points as much as some others have, or it may mean that resistance is less. It is perhaps a part of both. The North Carolina Commission on Interracial Cooperation has attempted to play a part in the educating of our population to realize that democracy can survive only as it moves towards providing satisfactory participation of all its citizens in directing and carrying out public affairs.

Educational Mailings

We have tried to carry on this educational program in a number of ways. During the past year we have acquired about 275 new contributors. The majority of these have been secured through using selected mailing lists, sending these persons material about what we are attempting to do and asking their cooperation. The lists used have been of persons that are in positions of influence in communities, such as ministers, school principals and superintendents, county commissioners, city officials, and other public officials. While often our financial returns from some of the lists have been small, we feel that the informing of these persons of our work is valuable, and we have had some indications to confirm this.

One of our most important educational attempts has been aided by our State Department of Public Instruction. The Commission prepared and printed a pamphlet "Knowledge Helps Understanding—Sketches of the Negro in American Life". Enough copies were provided the State Department of Public Instruction to send to all of our high schools along with a letter suggesting some possible uses for them. Copies were also sent to the public libraries of our State.

Library Material

The libraries have been sent other materials also. A short while before Negro History Week a bibliography of books and pamphlets on minority groups in the United States, with emphasis on the Negro, was prepared. This, along with a letter telling of the dates of Negro History Week and suggesting that a display of books and pamphlets related to the field might be in order, was sent by the State Library Commission to the libraries.

Another mailing during the year was that sent to several hundred ministers for use on Race Relations Sunday. Illustrations, human interest stories, and some facts were given that might be helpful in preparing a sermon on interracial relations.

Our educational efforts through the colleges have been along two lines. We have tried to interest the college presidents in setting up a faculty committee to concern itself with helping the total college program toward further interracial understanding. We have held a conference of the teachers of race relations, or of subjects in which race relations is included, to discuss what should be taught and how.

Radio programs telling of the contributions of our minorities to life in the United States and telling of wholesome examples of interracial cooperation have been used also.

Prodded on by the United States Supreme Court decisions, progress in the use of Negroes for jury duty has been definite during the past year. Several counties have seated Negro jurors for the first time in several decades.

In the use of Negro police we have inched forward also. At least two more municipalities have, during the past year, found their use satisfactory. Several other cities have discussed the matter, and it would seem to be just a matter of time before they join in this helpful and progressive step. We have aided these discussions by providing statements from city officials where Negro police have been used in our State as to how it has worked out. It is interesting to note that the annual meeting of the Police Association in North Carolina usually has a speaker who touches on the handling of racial incidents.

A small amount of progress is being made in the giving of hospital staff privileges to Negro doctors. Where this has been done, it seems to work out without friction, and there is a good possibility that it may become a growing thing as has the use of Negro police. We are moving forward with a state-wide program to provide hospital facilities for all of our people. It is hoped that all of the new hospitals will allow staff privileges to Negro doctors, and efforts are being made to insure this.

Problem Areas

There are several points in our situation in North Carolina that have caused disturbances during the past year and will continue to do so for awhile, some with increasing intensity. We may expect to have an increasing effort on the part of Negroes and Indians to be admitted to the graduate schools of our State Universities, and we may expect that suits will be instigated to force equalization of physical equipment in our secondary schools. We may expect that more and more persons will test the status in interstate travel as to whether segregation can be maintained or not. We may expect that Negroes in the rural areas and eastern sections, where for them voting is not an accepted thing, will continue to push for this right.

Predictions as to how the total situation will work out vary widely. We do have in our State the possibility of working these problems out without serious antagonism. Our success in doing this depends upon the efforts expended and clear-sighted leadership provided by those interested in seeing progress towards democracy.

South Carolina Division

touched on here. The committee on education, Mr. J. P. Burgess chairman, has been interested especially in the securing of federal aid for education. (It is with great regret that we report the recent death of Mr. Burgess. He was one of the charter members of the S. C. Interracial Committee who through the years continued to give faithful and conscientious service.)

The committee on health, Mr. J. E. Blanton chairman, has been concerned, among other things, with securing in all hospitals the right of Negro doctors to follow their patients into the hospital. It is also interested in seeing that federal aid to hospitals should benefit Negroes as much as whites.

The recreational committee, Miss Adele Minahan chairman, is working on the job of requesting all municipal recreation committees in the State to allot to Negroes a fair share of the funds spent for recreation.

The law enforcement committee, Mr. R. B. Herbert chairman, has been interested in having an industrial school established in the State for Negro girls, and in having Negro policemen employed by as many municipalities as possible.

The churchmen's committee, the Rev. J. O. Kempson chairman, is making a list of those officials or committees in the several churches of the State that are working for better relations between Negroes and whites. The purpose is to aid in the correlation of such efforts and to spread among all the churches detailed information of what the other churches are doing.

The committee on youth, headed by the Rev. Robert Ayers, is promoting use of SRC techniques and materials wherever possible. He hopes eventually to effect greater coordination and cooperation between youth workers and also between youth organizations.

As for the future, many of us are convinced that if the South does not want the President's "Civil Rights," it had better get busy and improve its own. If we don't do it, it will be done for us.

Field Work—Past and Future

It is recommended in the closing of this report that immediate action be taken to set up a committee, with full authority to act, for the creation of the necessary machinery to establish a fund of sufficient magnitude to insure the continuation of SRC. This may be accomplished in several ways: by following the general pattern of the very clear and successful procedures used by the Spartanburg (S. C.) Foundation and the Cleveland (Ohio) Foundation. Other methods will no doubt suggest themselves to the committee charged with this undertaking

This is not only a recommendation, but a challenge to each and every one who is interested in the future of the South.

Executive Director's Report

meeting took part.

Notwithstanding this effort we are painfully aware that the South still has the scantiest of information of what the actual proposals in the field of improved respect for human and civil rights are; but we have at least the satisfaction of knowing that because of the February meeting, and of the work done since by those present, the South does contain many thousands of people who have studied the matter and reached calm decisions about it.

Mr. Jackson's pamphlet on Race and Suffrage Since 1940 has put facts and heartening assurance into many corners which before had held only rumor and bitterness. The growth of political participation in the South, by white people and Negroes alike, is one of the fundamental changes of the last decade.

The Council has watched the unfolding of the great civil rights controversy with the closest interest, and we have tried to do our modest part in getting constructive results from it. Our effort is summed up in the statement of the Executive Committee at its meeting on September 15. That document had certainly the widest attention of anything yet put out by the Council. It is too soon as yet to see its results, but we suppose that from the date of its issuance every serious person who ventures into the dispute will do so with a clearer mind, and with the challenge to constructive effort before him.

What has been done this past year has been done on a shoestring, and the string is shorter now than formerly. The South is moving. Its people greatly need knowledge and organization and leadership for the strains ahead. The Council and its State Divisions and affiliated Committees have proven, in the past, that they knew a sound and effective way to help. The immediate problem is money and members to go ahead on.

Democracy in Georgia

To serve as the Negro Boys' Club of Atlanta, for years we could sponsor only a poorly equipped room on Auburn Avenue. Fortunately, we were able to gain the interest and support of such organizations as the Atlanta Council of Church Women, the Atlanta Christian Council, and the Chamber of Commerce. As a result, Atlanta now has a well equipped Negro Boys' Club.

The employment of Negro policemen in Atlanta during the past year was a major achievement, and the Georgia Committee is glad to have had a part in it. Again, in cooperation with the Council of Church Women and Negro leaders, we sent a petition to the Mayor, the City Council, and the Police Committee. There was no response from these officials, but the Atlanta newspapers carried the statement on the front pages. Only later, however, when other major civic organizations had lent their support, did the papers join editorially in the request for Negro policemen. The Georgia Committee arranged many discussions on the subject, sent delegations to the Police Committee, and joined in many meetings before the decision was finally made.

This is but part of the story. The number of miles travelled, the number of meetings, the number of courts visited — these are too numerous to mention. We can only hope that they will finally be measured in terms of a greater, more democratic State.

Virginia's Progress

functioning gave priority to civil rights and at least two new groups came into being — the Virginia Civil Rights Organization and the Richmond Committee on Civil Rights. It was the members of these two groups that gave direction and support to Mr. Murray in the introduction of bills requesting the repeal of existing segregation laws.

The Executive Committee of the Virginia Council of Churches has given its approval to "A Program of Interracial Cooperation for Virginia" formulated by the Department, which will serve as a challenge not only to church leaders but to civic and community leaders as well.

and techniques of organization of the Southern Regional Council.

At this meeting names of persons to serve on the Executive Committee and on the Advisory Council were presented to the Alabama Division and approved by vote of the Division.

A meeting of the Executive Committee was held in Montgomery on May 25, 1948. At this meeting it was decided to carry on a campaign by mail to secure new members in Alabama, as a result of which campaign a number of new names were added to the membership. The organization of local chapters was discussed and certain members of the respective committees were asked to convene groups in their own communities.

During this first year of its existence the Alabama Division has succeeded in setting up an organization of vitally interested persons scattered over the state of Alabama. Negotiations are moving along whereby the newly formed Alabama Division will take over the assets and good will of the old Alabama Committee on Inter-racial Cooperation, many of whose members are now active members of the Southern Regional Council. The Alabama Division deeply appreciates the cooperation of these former members of the Alabama Committee on Inter-racial Cooperation.

Facing a resurgence of activities on the part of groups resorting to methods of intimidation and confronted with violations of civil rights, the Alabama Division hopes to work constructively on these problems during the second year of its existence.

A joint meeting of the Executive Committee and the Advisory Council will be held at an early date in Birmingham, at which time plans will be made for the activities of the coming year.

visory Committee. It is made up of the executive secretaries of organizations working for the improvement of human relations. The secretaries of the Urban League, the Kentucky Welfare Council, the Council of Jewish Welfare Agencies, the Council of Christians and Jews, and the Louisville Council of Churches (Protestant) make up the group of experts. They advise the Kentucky Division and coordinate the efforts of their organizations.

Very recently the Kentucky Division has made up thirty-six packets of selected Southern Regional Council literature which will be distributed to the social science departments of both public and private institutions of higher education throughout the State, as well as to the State Department of Education.

In Kentucky, as in all other States, there are many unreached people who want to "do something" to make our democracy work. It is therefore our greatest responsibility to enlist such people as fighters for the principles which made the Southern Regional Council the necessary agency through which men, women, and young people who want to think positively may work constructively and live out their democracy.

The need for money for this plan of action is the result of the need for the spirit of sacrifice, for a dynamic conception of true Southern statesmanship, and a genuine conviction of conscience, all born of a well founded fear that if we Southerners don't, somebody else will. Our hope is well founded on the conviction that in the end Right, undergirded by responsibility, will win.

Texas Commission

and interest in the Texas State University for Negroes.

Race Relations Sunday is observed throughout the State, and in Houston the local Commission, with seven other organizations (Negro, white, Jewish, and Protestant), sponsors three city-wide services of worship each year. The spring service was planned and conducted by young adults from the Negro and white universities. As a result of these young people working together, a subsequent conference was held relative to the future organization and continued work of the group.

Negro Policemen

The Commission has maintained active interest in the training and additional assignment of Negro policemen to work with Negro youth. Thirteen new Negro policemen have recently been employed in Houston, two of whom are working with the Crime Prevention Bureau.

The employment of two Negroes on the Harris County staff of the Texas Employment Commission was very gratifying, as interest in this matter was expressed to the local office some years ago and at various times since.

The Fort Worth Commission, through the State Welfare Chairman, is working for a state park for Negroes. The Texas Commission is requesting that an adequate ward for Negroes be provided in the proposed new State Spastic Hospital.

Future plans include:

(1) More systematic inclusion of college students in the Commission.

(2) Establishment of more local Commissions.

(3) Speakers on interracial work at state and district meetings of various groups and organizations.

(4) Proposed radio series.

(5) Legislative program, both state and national.

(6) State-wide Race Relations Institute, to be held in Houston.

(7) Continued activity in community issues and increase in membership of the Commission.

tention and was featured in the national publication of the PTA's sometime ago.

The Carver Memorial Hospital in Chattanooga has the distinction of being the only Negro hospital in the United States supported by tax money. It has been given an excellent start and is doing a good service.

Tennessee, as is well known, is in the heart of the TVA system. Negro farms are being benefited by the soil cultivation, fertilizer, and rural electrification program of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The income of both races has been raised in the valley and the outlook is for continued advancement.

The state chairman has asked Mrs. Henry Havens to make another trip preparatory to an effort which will be made by the chairman and the board to bring the widely scattered membership in Tennessee into closer union.

The chairman feels that the executive board of the Tennessee Division is composed of outstanding Tennesseans all of whom are devoted to the Southern Regional Council objectives.

Contributions to the Southern Regional Council are tax-exempt.
